Rice farmers urge that action of rice mills be fully investigated. Farmers have been paid only about one-fifth of cost of production, and many are ruined. No reason why prices have been manipulated as they have. Go to the bottom of matter while at it.

DE WITT, ARK., April 26, 1921.

Senator J. T. Robinson,

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: I noticed an account of the resolution you introduced asking for an investigation in agricultural matters, and particularly rice.

It certainly needs it. It may be too late to help these bankrupt people, but may do good in the future. One of my neighbors turned a lot of rice to the mills last fall on toll mill (good rice) and a few days ago received a draft amounting to 2 cents per bushel. Another received 11 cents on 9,000 bushels of good rice. I heard of another who got $18 for a car of rice. You can find such as this in many cases, and they have never made the advance agreed upon and do not very often settle with the farmers until possibly months after their rice is sold.

I have never heard of such an outrage before. The country is crip-rice is sold.

I have never heard of such an outrage before. The country is crippled beyond repair. Children are in rags and without sufficient food. Honest men can not pay interest on their debts, can not borrow a dollar, or get credit for supplies. They are feeding rice to their stock and breaking land, but the question of getting fuel is unsolved. About 50 per cent of a crop will be planted, but much of that may not be cultivated on account of inability to get fuel to run the pumps.

I am glad you are taking the step you are and trust that good may come of it. If there is any earthly way to get some relief for our people it should be done, and done quickly.

Sincerely, yours,

J. M. Henderson, Jr.

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sin: I sure feel proud that you as our United States Senator have not forgotten us poor rice farmers, for we need something done for us on our last year's steal. The rice crop was all taken up in storage, milling, and freight. I had 2,000 bushels sold, milled, and it netted me $547.50, about 25 cents per bushel. The balance of my crop I sold for 50 cents. I averaged 80 bushels to the acre, and when the crop was all disposed of it left me $3,000 behind on the actual running expenses, and can't obtain one dollar to make this crop. There are numbers of rice farmers in this section who did not get enough out of their crops to pay for the seed they planted. Can't see how we are ever to get out of debt; most of us have lost all we have been year making. If you can help us in any way, it will surely be appreciated. The banks will not help us to even pay our taxes. Say they can't get the money, and our taxes are doubled on us on these hard-surfaced roads. I wish you much success as Senator and a long life in that benorable position.

Mr. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON. DEAR SIR: I want to thank you for the resolution you introduced in the Senate appointing a committee to investigate the rascals who are ruining the rice growers. I hope you will push it to the bitter end. I am inclosing a clipping from the Democrat so you may know what I have reference to. Doubless you have read it already. I again thank Senator Joseph T. Robinson, Washington.

Senator Joseph T. Robinson,

Washington.

Dear Senator: I see in this morning's Commercial Appeal quotations from your remarks on introduction of move to investigate rice and other farm conditions. I was at the Stuttgart meeting when Mr. Eigner, for the Southern Rice Growers' Association, presented this milling proposition. I made a talk at the close of that meeting, telling them the proposition was impractical, and why, and that it could result only in failure. This Hunter neighborhood shipped thousands of bushels under written agreements with the mills, strictly conforming with the conditions and agreement between the mills and the association. To my certain knowledge the neighborhood has received just $250 under those contracts. One of my neighbors has accepted under a partial sale of his crop by the mill 39 cents per bushel for as nice a sample of rice as was ever grown in Arkansas. The balance of his crop is in the mill eating itself up, as he has no means to pay milling charges, and the result will be, as he concludes, to lose it all.

Another neighbor who has rice in that mill sent in an order for 22 pockets, to be shipped shipper's order, the mill to collect and apply on his milling, at a price twice what the mill claims his rice is worth. The mill informed him the order was too small to fool with.

Another neighbor, in dire distress, has just sold a lot of rough rice at 25 cents per bushel. It cost him more than twice that amount to thrash and warehouse his rice.

The rice situation is simply appalling. Men here who were considered well fixed for life one year ago have been bankrupted in growing last year's crop. The cotton and rice for the Hunter neighborhood will lose its people half a million of dollars.

But, Senator, none of you are telling us how this thing happened and why? What is the way out, if there is a way? Congressman Fiss says it was inevitable, but should have happened two years earlier. Senator Carawar tells me thinks it should not have happened until next year's crop. The cotton and r

Hon. Senator Robinson,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Senator: The writer read with great pleasure in to-day's Commercial Appeal that you introduced a resolution demanding inquiry with regard to the most unfair treatment that we "rice farmers" ever experienced in the production, milling, and marketing of our great rice crop in 1920.

I therefore hasten to extend to you hearty congratulations and many thanks for your interest taken in behalf of the rice farmer especially.

Around this vicinity we were really obliged to ship to Memphis rice mill. For example, we shipped for the accounts of three tenants and self seven cars of rice during November and December, 1920, and received about one-third less for all of them than for one car of rice shipped in 1919. Unfortunately we suffered with severe loss in 1919, due largely to the constant rains and floods during the spring and fall of that year.

We received from 1½ cents a pound to about 4 cents a pound after first paying the excessive freight charges of from $82 to $92 per car, a distance of 78 miles from my shipping point to Memphis. The mill in addition also deducted $1 per barrel for milling, 8 cents per barrel to valuation committee, 5 cents per barrel to advertising, or a total of $1.13 per barrel; also 8 per cent interest for any advances made from date of receipt at the mill, and 10 cents drayage for every bag when sold in small lots, delivered.

Granted that the farmer has but one pay day in the year, we received absolutely "nothing," not even one lota, for our whole year's work and effort to raise food and feed for man and beast. It is the very worst that the farmer has but one pay day in the part work and effort to raise food and feed for man and beast. It is the very worst that the farmer has but one pay day in the part work and effort to raise food and feed for man and beast. It is the very worst that the farmer of the farming in United States of America.

On the other hand, in addition to the mill charging us the ruinous price of $1 per barrel, while dur necessary to raise and irrigate the rice (which commodity is still in its infancy to-day), will have to lay idle and a very small percentage of acreage will be planted in consequence.

I have also taken the pleasure of communicating with Senator Caraway, who understands fully the many hardships we have already encountered of developing and going through these pioneer stages in this great State of Arkansas.

Again thenking you for your splendid rations taken in our healt.

this great State of Arkansas.

Again thanking you for your splendid actions taken in our behalf, I beg to remain, wishing you further success and good result for the future welfare of all farming interests, and especially the rice farmer.

Very respectfully,

MORRIS LEVY.

Resolution.

Be it resolved by the rice farmers of the State of Arkansas in convention at Stuttgart, Ark., on the 26th day of January, 1921, as follows:

That a committee, composed of members hereinafter named, be, and it is hereby, appointed for the purpose of discharging the following duties:

For a period of three months from and after this date said committee shall investigate and study the condition of the rice market, both general and local, employing all available and proper means of securing accurate information concerning sales, quotations, and activities of the rice market generally; and said committee shall report at least twice a month by publication in newspapers of the rice-growing communities of Arkansas the result of its investigation, such report showing the prices which market conditions seem to justify, and containing such other recommendations as the committee may deem proper. All millers and rice-selling organizations are requested to cooperate with such committee shall also investigate the possibility of improving the present selling organization of rice growers, and will report the result of its investigations in this respect.

The committee shall have the authority to call a meeting of the farmers adopting this resolution at any time deemed desirable.

Said committee is also instructed to send delegates of this convention, to be selected by it, to various other rice-growing communities of this State, for the purpose of urging the farmers of such communities to join in the selling agreement this day executed by farmers attending this convention.

Said committee shall be composed of—

Seward, Ulm, Ark.; Fred Burnett, Prairie County; T. L. Brown, Craighead County, Ark.; Bert McCuskey, De Witt, Ark.; W. D. Bohnert, Gillett, Ark.; B. E. Chaney, Bayou Meto, Ark.; Will Dickson, Woodruff County, Hunter, Ark.; George Prange and R. E. Short, St. Francis County, Ark.

Dear Senator: We hand you herewith a copy of the contract entered into by and between the millers and the Southern Rice Growers' Association; also a copy of note signed by the farmers who received advancements under said contract, the said note being made to the mill; also inclosed find a blank the farmers were required to sign, whether they got advances or not, in order to get the rice milled.

All the rice growers in this country are very hard hit, and, in fact, disabled to such an extent that quite a number of them will be unable to farm this year. The situation has become very serious, and no producer knows anything about where he stands.

Notwithstanding rice was delivered as early as the 1st of October and milled shortly afterwards, no producer can receive any report upon his rice whatever. He only receives vague rumors that it is selling as low as 3\(^2\) cents per pound, which means about 40 cents to 50 cents per bushel net to him.

You will notice clause 10 of this contract, which provides that out of the first sales the mill is to be paid the amount of the advancements, and as soon as said advancements are liquidated in full the additional amount shall immediately be paid to the producer.

Clause 11 provides that the plant, premises, books, accounts, samples, bins, and warehouses of the mill shall be open for the investigation of the duly authorized agents of the association.

The producer can not get a report on his rice. The mill refuses to permit the officers of the association to examine its books and accounts and refuses to make any report either to the producers or the agents of the association.

It looks very much to us like the head of the association is owned and controlled by the mill, because we know the officers or the agents of the association for the producer or the agents of the association is reported authoritatively that a great many merchants who handle rice have refused to purchase because the mill invariably shoves off on them last year's cr letters out in which they are claiming that they can not ship them this year's crop.

At the time the farmers delivered their rice to the mill they were led to believe that the rice would net them $5 per barrel for Nos. 1 and 2 and inferior grades accordingly. At that time labor was exceedingly high. The milling charge of $1, as set forth in paragraph 7 of this contract, was considered unreasonable and excessive, but on account of conditions the farmers finally agreed to same, thinking they would maintain the prices represented to them but not set forth in the

We understand that the price for the rice has been cut about one-half without consulting either the farmers or the Southern Rice Growers' Association. The members of the Rice Growers' Association here state that they have never been advised or agreed to any cut whatever, and if said cut was made it was done at the head office, without the knowledge of these men here.

It looks very rotten to us, and if the Rice Growers' Association have agreed to this reduction of prices without requiring a reduction for milling, we believe the officers higher up have formed a combination with the rice mills. The by-products at this time will pay the milling expenses, as they are selling them high.

For your information the charge heretofore for milling rice, when labor was as high or higher than it is now, was not exceeding 40 cents per barrel and the by-products, and the farmer was receiving a much better price then than at the present time. We might further state that the mills in Lonoke and Carlisle will in all probability mill 350,000 barrels of rice, both mills being owned by the same company. Thus you will readily see that they will realize 300 per cent profit on their investment, while the producers are being pauperized, and the rice industry is being absolutely killed in the State of Arkansas.

They might have sold a great deal of rice on the highest market, and yet if they reported sale on the lowest market the farmer could never know the difference and there is no way, for him to find out.

You will note under the contract that the mill agreed to make advancements to the farmers upon delivery of the rice, but a short while after these deliveries were made they advanced on not more than one-half the rice delivered, and they then claimed that they could not make further advancements. They have not advanced any since along in December, and never have, except on a few lots, advanced the amount agreed upon under paragraph 5 of the contract.

On account of their refusal and failure to report and their refusal to advance, there are many rumors of the very low price for which rice is selling, and the rice country is absolutely demoralized. The banks nor the merchants can afford to extend any credit, and all business in this territory is suffering at the present by reason thereof.

While we don't know of our own knowledge, conditions indicate that the farmers will not be satisfied until the full truth is known concerning the matter, and if you can accomplish this result we believe it will be one of the best steps you have ever taken for the producer.

Very truly, yours,

Chas. G. Millers,

E. R. Herbero.

Senator Joe. T. Robinson,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: [I am in receipt of your telegram.] A committee has been organized with a view of protecting the farmers as far as possible, and they have adopted the resolutions inclosed herewith. This committee recently met in Stuttgart and called before it Mr. Paul Daniels, who is on the valuation board located at New Orleans, said valuation board being selected by both the millers and the association, who are to fix the price on all rice sold according to grade.

Daniels says that the rice mills absolutely ignore the prices fixed by the valuation committee and is also against them as to the sale of the rice, and that the rice mills are selling last year's crop owned by the farmers in order to get rid of their rice, and thereby sacrificing the farmer's interest, and invariably where samples of the farmers' rice are sent out separately of this year's rice they send samples of last year's rice at a much lower price. They are using the farmer's rice to dispose of their individual holdings.

We think the investigation should be started at once, and the officers of the Rice Growers' Association as well as the mills should be investigated. From what Daniels says the mills are operated independently and absolutely and entirely ignore the association and have broken their agreement.

This is very important to the farmer, and he should have the information as early as possible and determine whether or not he should decept the sales of the rice that have been made and whether or not he should defend or repudiate his contract for advancements, because they have reported that the advancements are really more than what the rice sold for, in many instances, and at the same time the advancements are less than they actually agreed on.

We understand that there are a number of places in the North where rice has never been placed on the market, and they are not endeavoring to dispose of the farmers' crop. We again call your attention to the fact that while all the farmers understood the FEBRUARY 8, 1921.

Mr. E. R. Bagnes, Beaumont, Tex.

DEAR SIR: The rice farmers in this section are very much dis-couraged at the manner and methods pursued by the mills and the Southern Rice Growers' Association in the disposition of their crop of Southern Rice Growers' Association in the disposition of their crop of rice.

At the time this agreement was entered into between the association and the mills the association led the farmers to believe that their rice was to be sold for $5 per barrel for Nos. 1 and 2 Blue Rose, and from what we are informed, that was the tacit understanding between the mills and the Southern Rice Growers' Association.

At the time of the making of the contract labor was very high, and although the farmers felt that a charge of $1 per barrel and by-products was exceedingly high, yet they thought if in order to sell the rice the valuation board agreed to a reduction in price of same, there would be a like reduction in the expense of milling and handling said rice.

We understand—through rumors, but not authentic information—that the farmers' rice is being sold for as low as $3 or 4 cents per pound and that the same price is being maintained for the milling of the rice, notwithstanding labor is reduced in this section of the country at least 65 per cent.

The writer was a director in the Lonoke Rice Milling Co. and they made money milling rice at 40 cents per barrel and by-products, when labor was higher than at present. At this time we think it would be safe to say that the by-products would pay for the operation of the mill, thereby leaving them an opportunity to clear more than 100 per cent on their investment in this section, without any risk or parting with any money whatever except some advancements, which have not been made according to contract.

Although this rice has been milled as early as December and shipped out, the producers have not been able to receive any information concerning same. The producers, in effect, have employed and paid the Southern Rice Growers' Association to keep them advised concerning this matter, but those who are in the work in this section receive no information from headquarters and seem to be regarded by headquarters as mere figureheads. While we believe they desire to serve the farmers, they, of course, have to receive their authority from headquarters. We do not know whether it is the desire of the mills to destroy the association or whether it is the desire of the millers and the head officers to destroy the association; we do know that the course now being pursued will accomplish this more efficiently than any other course that could be pursued.

In the first place, we think if the Southern Rice Growers' Association has decided to reduce the price to lower than $5 per barrel such proposition should be submitted to the farmers, through the said association, that they may be given some consideration in the handling of their own products.

Products.

Second, if the mills are selling this rice at a lower price than agreed upon according to the contract, then they have committed a breach of their contract, and farmers could not be required to pay more than a reasonable charge for the milling of the rice, and the farmers should be advised of this fact before closing up any deal with the rice mills for selling same.

In order that we may be able to do our bit to prevent all unjust and unfair criticism toward the association, we would like to hear fully from you concerning this matter, as we represent a number of the largest farmers in this section, and if we do not hear from you at an early date we can not do otherwise than take for granted the rumors we are hearing are true and will immediately take such steps as we think advisable to protect the farmers.

Very truly, yours,

WEINER, ARK., May 1, 1921.

Senator JOE T. ROBINSON,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I notice you have introduced a bill asking for an investigation of the Southern Rice Growers' Association and the rice mills in the rice district of the United States.

I believe I can say to you that there are very few, if any, rice farmers in the district who would not approve of this investigation, and this move should put them under lasting obligations to you, as we rice farmers didn't even get the "three spot" in this deal.

It is useless for me to go into detail, as you are from the rice district and are fully aware of the detail.

I just want to express my appreciation to you for this move and to assure you that all rice farmers appreciate it.

Yours, truly,

W. P. Downing.

PORT OF CHARLESTON, S. C.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I desire to have inserted in the RECORD a short statement from the Wall Street Journal of recent date with respect to the advantages of Charleston, State of South Carolina, as a port.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"A BIG FUTURE FOR CHARLESTON—'HOLLAND' WRITES IN WALL STREET JOURNAL OF OUR DEVELOPMENT AS A PORT.

"['Holland' in the Wall Street Journal.]

"Norman B. Ream a few months before his death spoke of the construction of the railroad which he promoted from the Clinchfield coal district to Spartanburg, S. C., where connection was made with a railroad whose terminal is at Charleston, Mr. Ream said the Charleston terminal especially appealed to the men of finance who were building the Clinchfield Railroad, because in their opinion Charleston possessed natural advantages which would in time make that city one of the most important ports upon the Atlantic coast.

"In earlier days Charleston was a highly cultivated social community, which depended chiefly for its prosperity upon agriculture, especially cotton. Not until long after the Civil War was ended did the citizens of Charleston realize that the city and its vicinity were in possession of facilities which could be followed by such growth as would enable it to compare favorably with any port upon the Atlantic coast south of Baltimore, and, in fact, with any upon the Gulf coast, except New

"The railroad was constructed with very large terminal facilities at Charleston for handling all the coal it could carry from the Clinchfield district. The presumption was that much of this coal would be exported, and in this presumption the promoters of the railroad were correct. Charleston already had one industry, for men of capital had established large fertilizing factories there, chiefly because of an abundant supply of phosphate rock.

Now another industry whose plant, almost completed, will rank as the largest new plant of that kind in the United States, is established at Charleston, and operation has already been begun. This is an oil refinery.

"WHY CHARLESTON WAS SELECTED.

"It is to the capital, energy, and foresight of Walter Clark Teagle, A. C. Bedford, and their associates in the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, that the establishment of the great refinery at Charleston is due. President Teagle and his associates made choice of Charleston as a place to establish the largest modern refinery because in their opinion the city and its vicinity furnish a strategic point for supplying a very large area which heretofore has been supplied with petroleum products from Baltimore and from Bayonne.

"Mexico furnishes most of the crude oil which is of especial value in producing asphalt and road oils. Therefore, it is Mexican oil exclusively which will be brought to this great refinery and converted into asphalt, road oils, and fuel oils. The location is not upon the harbor front. It is about 2 miles from the business section of Charleston. It was chosen because the Cooper River on the one side and the Ashley River upon the other give adequate deep-water facilities and convenient approach to the outer harbor and to the sea.

"In the summer of 1919 the Standard Oil Co., having purchased all the land that was needed, began construction work. The hope was that it would be completed by January of this There was some disappointment because January 1 passed without an announcement that the work had been completed. But it was substantially completed, and before the end of this year this greatest of new refining plants in the United States will be in full operation.

"WHEN THE CRUDE OIL FIRST CAME.

"The plan was, however, so far completed in November of last year that it was possible to receive the first cargo of Mexican crude oil. This amounted to 68,000 barrels and the stills which were already completed were charged with this oil on Christmas Day. Probably within another year many ships whose occupation it is to carry fuel oil to the markets will put in at Charleston for supplies. The belief is that Charleston will within a year or two be recognized as one of the most important points for bunkering ships.

It is only a short distance from this plant to the terminals where now is established one of the largest coal bunkering plants on the Atlantic seaboard. This plant represents the energy and foresight of Norman B. Ream and his associates. It is equipped with the latest apparatus which makes it possible to load, by hoisting and tipping machines which are the largest in use anywhere, a carload at a time into the bunkers or holds of a vessel.

"These two enterprises will speedily bring Charleston to a preeminent position in certain forms of industry and her fine harbor will be alive with vessels passing up to the refineries and to the coal elevators and passing out to South America and the West Indies."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I am informed that it is the purpose of several Senators to address the Senate upon matters in no way relating to the unfinished business before the Senate. I desire to call attention to the fact that yesterday the Senate was compelled to take a recess early in the after-noon and those speeches might well have been delivered then, the Senate remaining in session.

In view of the widespread sentiment in this body for the prompt passage of the tariff measure and the urgent demand, I particularly from the southern and the western sections of the country, from the agricultural sections of the country, for the prompt passage of the bill, I hope that any Senator who has a purpose to address the Senate upon matters in no way relating to this measure of paramount importance will weigh the matter very carefully as to its urgency so that it may not unduly delay the bill.

Several hours were left yesterday for academic discussion about other matters which were not taken advantage of, and now I am informed that at the beginning of the session this morning a delay unestimated is about to be incurred. Of course, under the rules of the Senate it is impossible to restrict a Senator as to what he may say. I simply wish to call the attention of the Senate and of the farming interests of the country at large to the situation.

MIDSHIPMEN AT NAVAL ACADEMY.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am greatly obliged to my distinguished friend for the curtain lecture I have received, but I have a matter that I expect to present to the Senate very briefly, because if any relief is to be granted it is necessary that action should be taken promptly. I refer to Senate resolution 65, submitted by me yesterday.

recognize the interest that some gentlemen have in the pending emergency tariff bill and some gentlemen are urging its speedy enactment who are no more interested in it and have no higher regard for it than have I.

I may say that I stated on yesterday that I expected this morning to make some observations upon the resolution, and I then called the attention of the ranking Republican member of the Finance Committee to the fact that I expected to discuss the resolution briefly this morning. I am not in the habit of filibustering or of delaying proceedings, and I would not discuss this matter if I did not think it was of some moment to the country.

On yesterday I submitted Senate resolution No. 65, asking that the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to investigate and report

(1) What, if any, further legislation is advisable regulating the examinations of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy.

(2) What, if any, relief should be extended to the midshipmen who were required to submit their resignations as midshipmen because of their failure to pass certain required reexaminations held during the month of March, 1921.

There are two terms in the academic year at the Naval Academy. The one ended this year on Saturday, January 29; the second term began on January 31. At the examinations held at the end of the first session 286 midshipmen failed. Of this number there were 19 in the first class, 76 in the second class, 41 in the third class, and 150 in the fourth class.

A reexamination was held later under a statute which was passed and approved on June 5, 1920. As a result of that re-examination there were 110 failures. Sixteen midshipmen were not reexamined because they were in the hospital; 1 man in the first class failed, 24 in the second class failed, 8 in the third class failed, and 77 in the fourth class failed.

The reexamination was held in pursuance of an amendment which was added to the deficiency appropriation bill approved June 5, 1920, which reads as follows—and Senators who are in-terested will observe that it is rather obscure and somewhat involved-

That until otherwise provided by law no midshipman found deficient at the close of the last and succeeding academic terms shall be involuntarily discontinued at the Naval Academy or in the service unless he shall fail upon reexamination in the subjects in which found deficient at an examination to be held at the beginning of the next and succeeding academic term, and the Secretary of the Navy shall provide for the special instruction of such midshipmen in the subjects in which found deficient during the period between the academic terms.

Senators will observe that this provision requires the Secretary of the Navy to provide for the additional instruction, and it says "between the academic terms"; but in this case between the first term and the second term there were only two days. The first term ended on Saturday, January 29, and the second term began on the following Monday. The academy authorities, however, did provide for instruction, which was taken during the second academic term; but, as those Senators who are familiar with the conditions at the Academy will know, these young men have about all the work they can do without taking on extra work during the term.

Mr. President, prior to the adoption of the amendment to the deficiency bill which I have read, section 1519 of the Revised Statutes seemed to control. That section provides;

Cadet midshipmen found deficient at any examination shall not be continued at the academy or in the service unless upon the recommendation of the academic board.

The rule which has prevailed in the academy has been that under section 1519 when young men failed at their examinations they have been, as a rule, dropped back into the next lower class and given an opportunity to continue their studies. As we all know, sometimes the result of an examination is not the boy's fault. It may be due to the condition of his health, or it may be due to the incompetency of the instructor or examiner as well as to the incompetency of the boy.

The academy authorities were very much opposed to the amendment of June 5, 1920, which gave an opportunity for further instruction and for further examination. It seemed that; instead of following the rule which had theretofore prevailed that midshipmen when they failed to pass an examination would be permitted to drop back into the next lower class the academy authorities were not pleased with the amendment which gave an opportunity for further instruction and a second examination, and so, while these boys were given further in-struction during the term and not at the end of the academic year, those who failed were instantly required to hand in their resignations, or, failing so to do, they would be dropped. On March 21, in the evening, notice was sent to the boys who had failed that if their resignations were not in by the following morning, they would be immediately dropped.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry

Mr. POMERENE. I yield, Mr. ROBINSON. Was that notice sent to all the students who had failed to pass the examinations?

Mr. POMERENE. I so understand, although I am not fully advised as to that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the statute to which the Senator has referred require that all students failing in the examination shall be given a second opportunity-that is, an opportunity to drop back into the next lower class?

Mr. POMERENE. No; that is the difficulty. It simply provides for instruction and a second examination in order that they may have an opportunity to continue with their class.

Mr. ROBINSON. But that requirement applies to all students who fail in the first examination?

Mr. POMERENE. It applies to all students who fail in the first examination.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator, of course, realizes that by the process of examination a number of students who gain admission to the academy in the first instance demonstrate their unfitness to continue as students.

Mr. POMERENE. Undoubtedly so.

Mr. ROBINSON. Undoubtedly there is a necessity for a weeding-out process

Mr. POMERENE. Undoubtedly so.

Mr. ROBINSON. It being the policy of the Government to admit into the naval service only men of first-class character and mentality.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; and the percentage of failures is comparatively small, as I understand.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator state approximately what the average is?

Mr. POMERENE. I can give that information to the Senator in just a moment.

Mr. ROBINSON. My impression is that in some of the classes the percentage of failures has been very high, indicative of the fact that the students are lacking, at least in some instances, of the mental or physical capacity to finish the course.

Mr. POMERENE. I can give the Senator some information on the subject. Of the student body the percentage dropped for deficiency in studies during the year 1918-19, including those dropped after examination, was 4.5; in 1919-20 the percentage dropped was 6.3; and in the year 1920-21 at the end of the first term the percentage so far dropped is 5.1. But the matter about which I am complaining most is not the result of the examination, but because, while boys who have failed heretofore in the classes above the fourth class have been permitted to drop back into the class below, that privilege has been taken away from these boys, and they have been dropped after having been given notice to hand in their resignation. Under the rules now prevailing the boys who have failed were not even permitted to telephone to their parents or their friends, and when one of these boys asked the privilege of telephoning-I think to his Representative in Congress, as I remember the facts-before he handed in his resignation, he was peremptorily

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course the only purpose he could have had in telephoning his Representative in Congress was to secure political influence.

That may or may not be so.

Mr. ROBINSON. I assume that if he telephoned his Representative in Congress that would be his purpose.

Mr. POMERENE. He may have felt that he wanted to consult with some one.

Mr. ROBINSON. In the case of a student who had been dropped back into a lower class and given a second opportunity, the Senator would not think that he ought to be given a third opportunity if he failed the second time, would he?

Mr. POMERENE. That depends upon the circumstances; it depends upon whether or not they have the right kind of instructors in some of the departments of study.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator be kind enough to tell me whether or not it is a fact that the large majority of the midshipmen who were dropped were dropped because of failure in one particular study?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, that is true; and the branch of study was electricity.

Mr. SPENCER. Does not that suggest to the Senator the possible conclusion that where there are a large number of men who are passing in every subject except one, the fault does not lie with the men but lies with the instruction which they have received in that department?

Mr. POMERENE. Unquestionably so; and I think I can say that even among the faculty in the Annapolis Academy it is commonly understood that in this particular branch of the curriculum some of those instructors do not measure up to the standard.

Mr. Président, it is understood that after this amendment was passed, on June 5, 1920, immediately there was opposition to it among the faculty; and it is commonly whispered about that they are going to try to enforce the repeal of this amendment which provides for additional instruction and subsequent examination. I should find no fault with this if these young men had had the opportunity to drop back into the next lower class and go on. But this is what has occurred:

I have in mind one young man who received a grade of 2.48. The grading is on a scale of 4. The passing grade is 2.50; so that this particular young man was two one-hundredths of 1 per cent below the passing grade. Under the rule as it had prevailed before and as it was enforced by the academic board, this young man would have been permitted to drop back into the next lower class.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President-

Mr. POMERENE. Pardon me a minute. He was not permitted even to continue his studies until the end of the year. however, but at the end of the first semester he was given his second examination, and his second examination was a few onehundredths of 1 per cent below the 2.48, and immediately he was dropped.

I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Has the Senator any objection to giving the name of the young man to whom he refers?

Mr. POMERENE. I do not feel that I should like to do that now. I have no objection to giving the information to the committee later on, if it is so desired.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate briefly to the feeling which seems to prevail over there as against this new legislation and the insistence on their part that they shall have absolute control without respect to the wishes of Congress. I agree that this new section should be amended so as to make it perfectly clear and not admit of any possible misconstruction. I think everyone must see that the purpose of Congress in passing this amendment was to give these boys an opportunity for a second examination-a rule which prevails in nearly every institution of learning that I know anything about—so that they may continue with their class, and in the event that they do not do that they may drop back into the next lower class.

Admiral A. H. Scales on June 24, 1920, wrote a letter to the Secretary of the Navy. Now, bear in mind, please, that the mid-shipmen had just had their annual examinations the last week in May, and this law was passed on June 5. Some of these young men were dropped. He wants the views of the department. He

It is requested that a decision be obtained from the Judge Advocate General of the Navy on the following points in connection with the above references:

First. In view of the provision of the Revised Statutes, sections 1519—1525, which says: "Midshipmen found deficient shall not be continued at the academy or in the service unless upon the recommendation of the academic board"; and in view of its intent, is the act of Congress referred to in reference (a) valid as against the provision of the Revised Statutes above noted?

Second. Provided it is—

What is provided in the provision of the Revised Statutes above noted?

That is, provided this new statute is valid-can the academic board drop a deficient midshipman at the close of the semiannual examinations without failure on a reexamination?

It indicates clearly their determination to get rid of these young men.

Third. Having recommended certain midshipmen to be dropped on account of being deficient at the annual examinations in 1920, can the academic board change that recommendation and turn those midshipmen back into the next lower class?

Fourth. Having instructed the deficient midshipmen and reexamined them after instruction, according to the clause contained in the deficiency bill, can the academic board turn them back if they pass satisfactorily, in view of the fact that other better and more qualified midshipmen have already been turned back from the same class?

In other words, notwithstanding the fact that it was the intention of Congress that they should be given an opportunity for instruction and a second examination, he wants to know, even if they pass satisfactorily, whether they can be turned Fifth. Since the act of Congress referred to in reference (a) rescinds action which was taken by the academic board under the provisions of the Revised Statutes, sections 1519-1525, prior to the enactment of the clause contained in the deficiency bill, a decision is requested as to its validity in view of its possible retroactive provision.

I have here the letter which was written in answer to this by Admiral R. E. Coontz, Acting Secretary, and I ask permission to incorporate it in my remarks without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, Washington, 12 July, 1920.

Washington, 12 July, 1920.

To: The Superintendent of the United States Naval Academy.

Subject: Midshipmen found deficient in the annual examinations, 1920, disposition of under deficiency appropriation act, approved 5 June, 1920.

Reterences:

(a) Department's letter N-46D-G of 9 June, 1920.

(b) Superintendent United States Naval Academy letter M-S-GS, 8-91-2 of 18 June, 1920.

(c) Bunay's letter N-4 PW-G of 22 June, 1920.

(d) Superintendent United States Naval Academy letter S-M-S-118-2 of 24 June, 1920. Approved by Secretary of the Navy, 25 June, 20

(c) Bunav.'s letter N-4 FW-6 72 June, 1920.

(d) Superintendent United States Naval Academy letter S-M-S-118-91-2 of 24 June, 1920. Approved by Secretary of the Navy, 25 June, 1920.

(e) Deficiency appropriation act, approved 5 June, 1920.

(f) Revised Statutes, section 1519.

1. (a) Under the provisions of reference (f) midshipmen found deficient at any examination may not be continued at the Naval Academy or in the naval service except upon the recommendation of the academic board that said midshipmen may be so continued. In the absence of a favorable recommendation of the academic board, therefore, such midshipmen, as fall to pass any examination at any time during their continuance at the academy are dropped ipso facto from the academy and from the service.

(b) Under Chapter XVI of the Regulations of the United States Naval Academy of 1 June, 1920, as approved by the Secretary of the Navy and authorized by law, the academic year begins 1 October of each year and ends 31 May of the following calendar year. The academic year is divided into two terms: From 1 October to the Saturday nearest to 31 January of the next calendar year, constituting the first term, and from the close of the first term on the Saturday nearest to 31 January to 31 May of the same calendar year, constituting the second or last term thereof. It is noted that under the arrangement no period is provided for between the first and last academic terms, and none, in fact, exists.

(c) Although the provision of reference (e) affecting the discharge of midshipmen from the Naval Academy and from the naval service, which was not drafted in this department, has been so poorly drawn that it is necessary to read into it a number of words which have been omitted therefrom, and to omit therefrom others which have been inserted, in order to give it the meaning which Congress apparently intended to convey, in the opinion of the department the purpose of said provision is to prevent the discharge of midshipmen from the Naval Academy was not drafted in th interpretation would render said provision incapable of administration.

2. In view of the foregoing the queries set forth in reference (d) are answered seriatum as follows:

First. The provision of reference (e) affecting the discharge of midshipmen from the Naval Academy and from the naval service is valid regardless of reference (f), and prevents the discharge of midshipmen on account of having been found deficient in their studies at the examination held at the close of the academic year, except after special instruction, during the period intervening between said academic year and the academic year next thereafter following, in the subjects in which found deficient and their failure to pass a reexamination in said subjects held at the close of said period.

Second. This query is answered in the affirmative and to that extent reference (f) remains in full force and effect. Any other interpretation renders said provision of reference (e) inoperative.

Third. This query is answered in the affirmative, reference (e) having left said recommendation incapable of execution, but said reference has in no wise affected the power of the board to turn such midshipmen back into the next lower class where such action is necessary for the good of the service.

Fourth, This query is best answered in this manner: Although the board undoubtedly has this power and it should be exercised if the good of the service requires such action, such action is not deemed proper or advisable where said reexaminations have been passed satis-proper or advisable where said reexaminations have been passed satisfactorily.

Fifth. In view of the fact that said midshipmen had not been dropped either from the academy or the service prior to the enactment of reference (e) they can not now be dropped therefrom for failure to pass their annual examinations, except as therein provided, but they may be turned back to the next lower class and the special instruction provided for during the period between the academic years may be dispensed with.

R. E. COONTZ, Acting.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President-

Mr. POMERENE. Pardon me a moment.

Mr. MOSES. Will the Senator state the substance of the letter to which he has just referred?

Mr. POMERENE. It is pretty difficult to state the substance of this without giving the whole of it. If the Senator desires, I shall be very glad to have it read; but I will give the substance of only a part of it.

It suggests that the purpose of the Congress was to have this instruction given during the vacation, so that the midshipmen would have a proper opportunity to pursue their studies and an opportunity to be reexamined. In other words, Admiral Coontz points out that it is impossible to give effect to what was the intention of the Congress if you try to construe the act of 1920 literally. In other words, it speaks here of instruction between the academic terms. There is only the Sunday between the end of the first term and the Monday which is the beginning of the second term.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Has the Senator found, in his investigation of the dropping of these young men from the academy, apparently captiously, arbitrarily, without giving them a fair show, any traces of discrimination, either political or religious?

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, Mr. President, I have found nothing that would give either a political or a religious slant to the results over there. Nothing of that kind has been brought to my attention; but I think I may say that the principal difficulty is that they have determined that they are going to ignore this last act of the Congress of the United States if they can,

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Sterling in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Will the Senator state, if he knows, the practice of the Military Academy at West Point?

Mr. POMERENE. I am not entirely clear as to that, but I understand that opportunity is given for full instruction.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. And that they are dropped back to a lower class?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; they are usually dropped back, and that was the practice here in the Naval Academy until this act was placed on the statute books; and I have a suspicion that while it is an offense for midshipmen to haze one another, there is an attempt here by the academic board to haze the Congress of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President-committee bearing upon this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield. Mr. McKELLAR. I just wanted to inquire if the Senator had considered or prepared any bill that he thought would remedy this situation? It seems to me it would have to be done by a bill; and I hope the Senator will take into consideration the fact that a number of the boys who were dismissed have already arrived at the age of 20 years, which is the limit when boys can be admitted under the law and under the rules and regulations, so if they were appointed again I am told that, even though they may have served for more than two years, they could not be allowed to enter under the law as it is. In preparing a bill I hope the Senator will take that into consideration.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I presented this matter in the form of a resolution asking the Naval Affairs Committee to investigate and ascertain what, if any, additional legislation there should be and what, if any, relief should be granted to these young men. I think we ought to have a report from the

Mr. President, the opinion of Admiral Coontz was somewhat modified by the opinion of the Attorney General, given under date of September 2, 1920, and I should like to have both of these opinions incorporated in the RECORD for the information of Congress ordered.

The opinion of the Attorney General is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, September 2, 1920.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

The honorable the Secretary of the Navy.

Six: It appears by your communication of August 26, 1920, that a number of midshipmen were found deficient at the annual examinations at the close of the academic term, held May 24-29, 1920, and were not recommended by the academic board to continue at the academy or in the service. The finding of the academic board was approved by the Secretary of the Navy on June 1, 1920, and in conformity with existing policy those midshipmen recommended to be discontinued were notified that their resignations would be accepted if tendered immediately. Each midshipman so affected submitted his resignation and the acceptance thereof signed prior to June 5, 1920.

In the meantime, and prior to the mailing of acceptance by the Secretary of the Navy, an act of Congress was approved by the President on June 3, 1920 (Public, No. 264), which provided, among other things, as follows:

"That until otherwise provided by law no midshipman found deficient at the close of the last and succeeding academic terms shall be involuntarily discontinued at the Naval Academy or in the service unless he shall fall upon reexamination in the subjects in which found deficient at an examination to be held at the beginning of the navy shall provide for the special instruction of such midshipmen in the subjects in which found deficient during the period between academic terms."

Section 1519 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides as follows:

"Cadet midshipmen found deficient at any examination shall not be continued at the academy or in the service unless upon the recommen-

as follows:

"Cadet midshipmen found deficient at any examination shall not be continued at the academy or in the service unless upon the recommendation of the academic board."

In view of the foregoing, you request an opinion on the following questions:

(a) In view of the above section of the Revised Statutes (1519), are midshipmen who were found deficient at the annual examinations held Manday to Saturday inclusive 24-29 May 1990 and were not continued at the academy or in the service unless upon the recommendation of the academic board."

In view of the foregoing, you request an opinion on the following questions:

(a) In view of the above section of the Revised Statutes (1519), are midshipmen who were found deficient at the annual examinations held Monday to Saturday, inclusive, 24–29 May, 1920, and were not authorized by the recommendation of the academic board to continue at the academy or in the service, said finding having been approved by the Secretary of the Navy I June, 1920, entitled to the benefits of the provisions of the act approved 5 June, 1920, above quoted?

(b) In case your answer to the above question is in the affirmative, is the Secretary of the Navy, under said provision of Public No. 264, Sixty-sixth Congress, bound to provide special instruction for such midshipmen in the subjects in which found deficient at the last annual examinations, when said midshipmen have not been dropped from the rolls at the academy or from the service but have been turned back into the next lower class? In other words, is the Secretary of the Navy bound to furnish the special instruction provided for under said act under any circumstances other than prior to dropping such midshipmen from the rolls of the academy or from the service as have been found deficient at the annual examinations?

(c) Has section 1519 of the Revised Statutes been repealed by the provisions of Public No. 264, Sixty-sixth Congress, above quoted, or does said section continue applicable to the case of a midshipman found deficient at the semiannual examinations? In other words, will midshipmen found deficient at the semiannual examinations be dropped from the rolls of the academy or the naval service as provided by section 1519 of the Revised Statutes if they are not recommended by the academic board from turning midshipmen found deficient at any examination back into the next lower class for the purpose of requiring said midshipmen to pursue said course for another year, as no

(b) The preceding question being answered in the negative, it is unnecessary to answer this question.

Section 116, Regulations of the United States Naval Academy, 1920, provides as follows:

"The academic year shall begin October 1 and end May 31, consisting of two terms; the first term from October 1 to the Saturday nearest to January 31, and the second term from the close of the first term to May 31."

The period intervening between the first term and second term this year amounts to one day, which is Sunday, so that the amount of special instruction which could be imparted to midshipmen found deficient at the semiannual examination would be practically negligible, but an interpretation of the act requires that they be allowed to take a second examination. However, as there will be another session of Congress before the next semiannual examinations occur it is possible that remedial legislation can take place in the meantime.

(d) The act, in its retroactive scope, was intended to affect only those midshipmen found deficient at the examination whose retention had not been recommended by the academic board. At the time that the act took effect the academic board had already recommended that those midshipmen who were turned back into the next lower class be continued at the academy and in the service.

I have the honor to be,

Respectfully,

A. MITCHELL PALMER,

Attorney General.

A. MITCHELL PALMER, Attorney General.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, one of these boys who failed, as I understand, failed in French by a few hundredths of 1 per cent. After having been in the academy several years, as most of these 33 boys were—some one year, some two years, some three years—the Government has an investment in these It seems to me that when the academic board heretofore thought that it would be a wise thing to drop the boys back, if they failed, into the next lower class, and when the Congress was of the opinion that if they failed in an examination it would perhaps operate more justly if these boys could be given an opportunity for further study and reexamination so as to continue with their class, it was wholly unjust, in view of the relief which Congress sought to give these boys, that the academic board should put them in a worse position than they were without this relief measure.

In other words, while the act of June 5, 1920, was intended as a shield for the proper protection of the boys, it has been used as a sword for their undoing.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator has studied this question, and I take it that he has reached a conclusion as to whether it was the intention of Congress that students failing in their examination should have the right to a second examination, and also the right to be turned back to their former classes.

Mr. POMERENE. My thought about it is that the Congress must have had in mind what the practice was theretofore, that they could be brought back into the next lower class, but that the Congress thought perhaps that was not sufficient, and that, in addition to the privilege of dropping into the next lower class, they should have an opportunity for reexamination, so as to continue and complete their education. That is my judgment about it.

Mr. ROBINSON. That purpose, however, does not appear clearly expressed in the measure the Senator has referred to as the act of 1920. Does it or does it not?

Mr. POMERENE. I think it does not. I think we can only take into consideration what had been the practice there, and then look to this relief measure. It was not intended as a repeal of the former method or a restriction upon the former method. Otherwise, the Congress would have so said.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not care to antagonize the viewpoint expressed in that particular by my friend the Senator from Ohio, because I have not had an opportunity of studying this subject; but it does seem to me that there is at least room for the construction of the matter called for in the document he has read. Manifestly, if a second examination were given and the student should fail in that, it would be going a long way to say that, in addition to having had that opportunity, he should also have the opportunity to go back into the lower class.

We all realize that it is the policy of the Government, in making these appointments and affording the extraordinary opportunities for education and training that are given to students at Annapolis, to secure first-class men, both physically and intellectually; and it occurs to me that if the practice of granting a student who fails in his examinations an opportunity to drop back into the lower class is not based upon an express authorization of law, and Congress, with that practice existing, passed a statute securing to the student the right to a second examination, the question might very well be raised as to whether it was not intended to supersede the prevailing prac-

As to the statement made by the Senator that there are incompetent instructors at the academy, if the Senator has investigated that matter and reached a conclusion concerning it, I shall accept his conclusion. But we all know the course these matters take. I recall an instance where I appointed a young man to the Naval Academy; he failed in his first examination, was permitted to pass back into the former class, failed again, and then applied for another opportunity. I declined to submit any request for another opportunity for him. I thought had had his chance, had failed to make good, and that it was right and fair to grant the opportunity to a man who was coming along, and who could meet the reasonable requirements of the institution.

It is not every young man of good character and of fair ability who can meet the tests required in making the course prescribed by this academy. It requires a young man of somewhat exceptional ability. Very naturally the parents of the what exceptional ability. Very naturally the parents of the young men who fail, and the Congressmen who have appointed them, are quick to believe that they have been mistreated in some way.

If my friend the Senator from Ohio, after a full investigation, states to the Senate that in his opinion in that particular case the student has been unfairly treated, or denied a fair opportunity to make his record and enjoy his career, I shall accept the Senator's statement. But in the course of his remarks I have been driven to the conclusion that the mere fact that the academic board, and others in authority at the Naval Academy, have not seen fit to grant students both the right to a second examination and the right to a second chance in the lower class, is not convincing that the institution is not being properly conducted. I shall be obliged to reach a contrary conclusion if those are the principal facts upon which the question is to be determined.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am something of a martinet myself when it comes to matters of examination. I believe in vigorous discipline, and the experience which the Senator from Arkansas has just related is not very different from the experience I had with one young man over there, and when I got the facts I felt that the academic board had done the right thing, and I refused to go on with the matter further.

But let me give the Senator the facts as they were given to me by one young man, not his own case, as I understood it. One of those boys fell a few hundredths of 1 per cent below the passing grade. There was some discussion, as I understand, and his papers were gone over by other members of the faculty and, as I was told, two of the members of the faculty graded his papers at 2.50, the passing grade, while two other members of the faculty graded them something below 2.40. They struck an average which was below 2.50, and the boy was dropped. The result of that examination, if those are the facts, and I do not doubt they are, demonstrated that at least two members of that faculty were not capable of properly grading those papers.

Of course, I recognize the fact that there is not any hard and fast rule. My learned friend from Arkansas might grade one paper, and I grade it, and we would differ.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield. Mr. ROBINSON. No doubt the Senator will recall that during his college days some one of his instructors-and, I might suggest the instructor in "math." especially—was a menace to every member of the class with the approach of an examination. Every student in the class wondered day and night whether he was going to make the requisite marking, The Senator also no doubt remembers that instructors in other subjects were looked upon with complacency, the students having a feeling of assurance that they would be able to make the required grade.

The mere fact that there is no hard and fast rule by which an instructor can grade examination papers presents a difficulty which I do not think is solved by the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio. I call his attention to the fact that the highest grade which was given by two of the instructors was just exactly the passing grade, and that the other instructors gave him a grade of 2.40. In all probability the proper way to determine his standing was by taking an average, taking it for granted that the instructors were competent men. I do not think the fact that they differed in some degree about the grade would establish that any of them were incompetent instructors.

Mr. POMERENE. No, Mr. President, I agree with the Senator entirely, and I want to suggest that the boy who is passing the examination ought to be graded accordingly, and I am not saying that eventually he ought not to be dropped; but my contention simply is that after he has been there for two or three years, as the case may be, and receives this instruction at the expense of the Government, it seems to me that under the circumstances he ought to have an opportunity to drop back into the next lower class. That is my contention.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, of course the Congress has the power, by express provision of statute, to give him that right; but with that condition before me I would not favor such a statute. There are cases which arise at the academy, where, through a general knowledge and observation of the student, his instructor comes to know that he has in him the material to make an officer in the Navy of the United States. There are cases where a student has had unlimited opportunities, the best of advantages, before he entered that institution, and his mental attributes and character may be such that from an intimate acquaintance with the student his instructor knows that he ought to go out and give way to somebody who can

My opinion is that you are making a mistake if you undertake by law to take away from those in charge of that institution the discretion that is necessary in order to enable them to carry out the fundamental purpose of the United States in maintaining the academy at Annapolis.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I could be persuaded that this academic board would not under any circumstances have permitted these boys to continue in the academy because of deficiency, I would feel somewhat differently about it. But heretofore the practice has been to let them drop back, and now, in view of this statute, they are not even granted that permission. The subject of electricity is a continuous study for In the mid-year examination some of them have been found deficient to the extent of a few hundredths of 1 per cent and are dropped, not even permitted to go on to ascertain whether or not at the end of the year they could make up the deficiency. I do not think it is quite the right thing, and I am satisfied that though the section of the statute to which I have referred is obscure in construction, the intention was that this extra instruction should be given during the period of vacation, and that is denied to these boys under the rule they have adopted. I recognize that they have difficulty in construing that language in determining what ought to be done. It seems to me, however, that whatever doubts there were should have been resolved in favor of the boys and not against them.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask the Senator whether he thinks, in view of the practice which has prevailed heretofore at the academy, and in view of the statute to which he referred, namely, the act of 1920, that students failing in their examinations ought to have the right to take a new examination, and also the right to drop back into the lower classes? It seems to me the authorities there were confronted, when the act was passed, with the question whether that was in lieu of the custom that had prevailed before.

Mr. POMERENE. No, Mr. President; this is the difference, if the Senator will pardon me, between the two: The one goes to his right to continue with his class, whether he has scholarship sufficient to continue with that class. The other goes to the question as to whether he has scholarship or capacity enough to remain in the institution and drop in the lower class.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then the Senator thinks if he elects to take the second examination and fails in it that he also ought to have an opportunity to drop back? That was the intimation.

Mr. POMERENE. I do say that, when he has not had opportunity to get instruction during a time when he is burdened with studies or occupied nearly all his time.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio vield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield the floor.

Mr. MOSES. I do not wish the Senator to yield the floor. because I wish to ask him a question. I have no desire to broaden the scope of this discussion when the country is clamoring for the passage of the emergency tariff bill, as the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose] has so earnestly told us this morning. But I think that the Senator from Ohio has not gone far enough with his investigation into the subject.

The method of admitting midshipmen to the academy has been radically changed recently. The boys no longer come there under the old rigid system of examination which once prevailed and which produced the picked ...en for the Navy to whom the Senator from Arkansas has referred. The boys are now admitted by certificates from high schools, and all of us who have gone through the public or preparatory schools or colleges and universities know that the marking system in vogue in the high schools of the country is very different from the rigid marking system that obtains at West Point or Annapolis.

The boys are admitted there on certificate in large number and they are, as the Senator from Ohio intimates, unprepared to go on with the rigid course at Annapolis. It is unfair to them under those circumstances of selection that the boys should not have an opportunity to go forward with the course in which they have embarked.

My understanding of the act of June 5, 1920, at the time it was passed was that the purpose of Congress was not to deprive any midshipman of any privilege which he then had, but to broaden the privileges which he possessed at the academy so that under all the circumstances of his admission and his progress in the institution he could be certain of going through the course which the academy provided and receiving his commission in the Navy.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President-

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island. Mr. GERRY. That method of admitting applicants or students in colleges has been in vogue for quite a few years past and has been adopted in nearly all the great universities of the country. I know it was considered for Annapolis by the members of the Board of Visitors last year. This board has many of the members selected from the faculties of our universities and colleges. It was urged that that system of admitting students from recognized schools by certificate was better on the ground that the students now entered the academy after too much of a cramming system; that they went to certain cramming schools and were primed on particular subjects and were then able to pass the entrance examinations, and that after they had passed the examinations they did not have enough fundamental knowledge to carry on the work they were required to do in the academy.

Mr. POMERENE. Just one word further and I shall conclude. This matter was taken up by the Secretary of the Navy. His position is that the academic board has absolute control; that there is no relief whatever for the boys at the present time unless the Congress sees fit to give it, or unless there is a change of heart in the academic board. The Secretary of the Navy said, with reference to the midshipmen thus found de-

Their resignations having therefore been accepted in accordance with the law, there is only one way in which any of them can be reinstated, and that is by reappointment in the usual way, if within the age limit. Several have already been reappointed to reenter the next class. Unfortunately those who are beyond the age limit of 20 years are ineligible to reenter and can not, therefore, reenter.

In other words, some of the boys can be reappointed and reenter the service. However, the resignations were forced resig-They were given from one afternoon until the next morning to present their resignations, otherwise they would be dropped; in other words, they would be subjected to a species of ignominy. I submit that neither the good of that institution, the good of the Government, nor the good of the boys is subserved by this arbitrary action on the part of the academic board.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the provision in the deficiency bill of last year referred to by the Senator from Ohio was an amendment to the existing law, or legislation, reported to the Senate by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. It was a usurpation of jurisdiction by the Committee on Appropriations undertaking to legislate in regard to naval affairs. I do not know how much consideration the Committee on Appropriations gave the matter or how familiar the members of the Appropriations Committee were with the examinations at the Naval Academy, or what reasons they had for recommending to the Senate the passage of that amendment. It was not discussed in the Senate. The Senate was not advised in regard to the subject matter at the time the bill was enacted into law. It went through as a rider upon an appropriation bill, practically without notice and without information on the part of the Senate. I am informed that the origin of it was the dissatisfaction of some individual because a relative of his at the academy had been flunked in one of his examinations and dropped from the academy roll.

The Attorney General, to whom the measure was referred for an opinion, stated last year that there was no time between terms in which a reexamination could be held and extra study allowed midshipmen as required by the amendment; that there was no such lapse of time between the end of the first and the beginning of the second term and it was not practicable to give such extra study, and that consequently it was physically impossible to comply with the literal language of that provision; but the academic board decided to carry out the spirit of the law and did give the boys one month of extra study notwith-standing the opinion of the Attorney General, although, of course, it could not be done between the two terms on account of the fact that there was no such time intervening.

Those who were deficient badly, so that the board did not think it could continue them in the class, notwithstanding their second examination, were then recommended to be dropped. and this was done.

The Senator from Ohio and other Senators who have been appealed to by young men of the academy who have suffered the consequences of this action have insisted that the academic board should continue to give them examinations and to carry them on until they were finally able to pass the examinations and be retained upon the roll of midshipmen at the academy. Below the fourth class there is no class to which they could be turned back, as there is no lower class, so that the young men in the fourth class, or the plebe class, as it is called, the first-year term of the academy, could not receive the benefit that is proposed by the Senator from Ohio of being put back a year and carried on in the succeeding class unless they should receive reappointment. Of course, any young man, this young man that the Senator from Ohio speaks of, or any other young man, if he complies with the requirements for entrance to the Naval Academy, can reenter the academy upon reappointment.

I observed very closely the statement of the particular case that the Senator from Ohio made. It seems to be a case where a young man failed to make the required grade at an examination. He was given a reexamination in compliance with the provision of the law to which I have referred. On his reexamination he again failed to make the required grade. He has appealed to the Senator from Ohio, and there have been many, cases in the experience of practically all Senators, I imagine, in the bitterness and disappointment of young men whose hopes have been blasted by failing at their examinations. The Senator from Ohio insists that some further opportunity should be given them. Of course, it involves the lowering of the entire standard of the Naval Academy if any such course should be adopted.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses] makes an argument which it seems to me rather difficult to follow, that because of the lowering or liberalization of the conditions under which young men are received at the academy, we should lower the standards of the academy in order to enable them to graduate there. I do not agree with him in that respect. I am not in favor of lowering the standards at the academy.

If the Senator from Ohio, or any other Senator, or any other person, has a case that can be substantiated by even prima facie proof that the system at the academy is a bad system, that there is unfairness or discrimination, that there is not a reasonable opportunity given to young men to comply with the requirements for graduation, I should say it ought to be investigated, but there was no such showing made and no such claim made by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President— Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator evidently has misconceived what I said or I was unhappy enough not to make myself clear. I had no special interest in any one young man. I am in-terested in a change in the system over there, so that justice can be done to young men. That is my position. I think there was one Ohio boy connected with this matter, but he was not my appointee. Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Ohio described a particular case—and I supposed he was interested in that case in which the young man failed by a very narrow margin. As I recollect it, he failed by a larger margin on his reexamination than he did upon his first examination. As the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] has very well said, there are many other elements which enter into the fitness of a midshipman at the academy to become an officer in the United States Navy, besides the particular paper mark that he makes upon his examination; and as to the question whether or not he shall be given another opportunity to go back and take over again in the succeeding class the course in which he has failed, there is discretion vested in the academic board to determine upon all the qualifications of the midshipman as to whether the academy would be justified in imposing that expense upon the people of the United States in the effort to make a naval officer out of such a midshipman.

Mr. President, the resolution which has been introduced is entitled to consideration, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, that was the request that was going to make.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be so referred.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES-OPEN EXECUTIVE SESSIONS.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I shall not delay the consideration of the emergency tariff bill, because I know how very anxious the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose] is to have the legislation passed and placed upon the statute books, but there is another matter which I desire to bring to the notice of the Senate; a matter of very great importance to the people, I believe, touching a change in the rules of the Senate.

We have witnessed in the last few years a growing sentiment in this country against closeting ourselves behind closed doors for the consideration of nominations by the President to high offices and also the consideration of important treaties. people of the United States, in my opinion, are coming to believe that they have a right to know what is being said regarding nominations and also treaties into which this country enters with foreign nations, and that they should know as much about the men and the treaties as do the Senators who discuss the matters behind closed doors.

The sentiment to-day, in my opinion, in the United States is to abolish executive sessions of the Senate touching nominations and the consideration of treaties. That sentiment has found its way into this Chamber. Two great treaties have been considered in the open sessions of the Senate. The treaty of Versailles and the Colombian treaty were both, by unanimous consent of Senators, considered and voted upon in the open sessions of the Senate. Recently a nomination came to the Senate of which I was not in favor, and of which quite a substantial minority of the Senate were not in favor. I tried at that time to have that nomination discussed in open executive sea sion. I accordingly made a request and also a motion that that be done, but the request was objected to, and the motion was voted down. I believe it would have been better, however, for the interests of the country if that nomination had been considered in the open sessions of the Senate.

If newspaper reports are to be believed, there are nominations coming in now, in which the people are vitally interested, which should be considered in the open. If there is anything against men who are nominated for high office, the people should know all about it, about their character, about their training, about their fitness, and their qualifications to fill the high offices for which they have been nominated.

· So I say that, in my opinion, there is a substantial sentiment in this country in favor of the consideration of presidential nominations in open sessions of the Senate as well as for the consideration of treaties in open session; in other words, in favor of abolishing the old system. It is in the interest of that being done, and to test out the Senate on the proposition, that I desire now to give a notice to the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield. Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Mississippi also knows that the proceedings of the Senate under no circumstances are actually secret, but that by some process, which has never yet been made known, whatever the Senate does in executive session is given the widest and greatest publicity.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. So that the change proposed by the Senator from Mississippi would not result in any detriment to the Senate itself, since the proceedings in executive session are actually made public under the present method of considering such

Mr. HARRISON. And very often what we believe to be secret finds its way out, and is changed in some respects, is modified or magnified and exaggerated, and a wrong impression is given

Mr. ROBINSON. In such cases the true facts can not become known unless the Senate chooses to make an issue of the matter and present the facts to the public.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator from Mississippi permit an inquiry on that subject?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I yield. Mr. PENROSE. I am curious to know why the Senator from Mississippi did not raise this quite moss-grown point during the recent administration, when the nominations of notoriously inefficient men were sent to this body, and there was no demand whatever to consider such nominations in open session. Fortunately for their reputations the sessions were then secret.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, there was no objection made at that time to any of the men who were nominated; and it matters not what may have been the character of the men, how bad they were, their reputations did not compare to those of some of the men who are now being nominated by the present administration.

Mr. President, I now give in writing the notice to which I have referred, as follows:

Notice is hereby given in accordance with the provisions of Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, that upon the next calendar day of the sessions of the Senate a motion will be made to amend Rules XXXVII and XXXVIII of the Standing Rules of the Senate so that the same shall read as provided in the attached copy of the resolution which I propose to offer and ask to have printed in the RECORD as a part of this notice.

The resolution proposes to smead clause 3 of Rule XXXVII so that art of this notice.

The resolution proposes to amend clause 3 of Rule XXXVII so that treaties, except by concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators present and voting for the consideration of same in executive session, shall be considered in open or legislative session of the Senate.

The resolution further proposes to amend Rule XXXVIII of the Standing Rules of the Senate by amending clause 2 and inserting a new clause 7, so that nominations made by the President shall be considered in open or legislative session of the Senate, unless by concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators present and voting for the consideration of same in executive session.

Amend clause 3 of Rule XXXVII to read as follows:

"3. Unless it is agreed to consider a treaty in executive session by the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators present, all treaties shall be considered and acted upon by the Senate in its open or legislative session."

Amend clause 2 of Rule XXXVIII to read as follows:

Amend clause 2 of Rule XXXVIII to read as follows:

"2. All information communicated or remarks made by a Senator when acting upon nominations in executive session concerning the character or qualifications of the person nominated, also all votes upon any such nomination, shall be kept secret. If, however, charges shall be made against a person nominated, the committee may, in its discretion, notify such nominee thereof, but the name of the person making such charges shall not be disclosed. The fact that a nomination has been made, or that it has been confirmed or rejected, shall not be regarded as a secret."

Add at the end of Rule XXXVIII the following new clause:

"7. Unless it is agreed to consider a nomination made by the President in executive session by the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators present, all nominations shall be considered and acted upon by the Senate in its open or legislative session."

So, Mr. President, the only proposed change is, in substance, that presidential nominations shall be considered in the open session of the Senate, unless by a concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators present and voting they should desire to go into secret executive session to consider nominations, and that the same rule shall also apply to the consideration of treaties.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The notice that the Senator from Mississippi has presented will be received.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I desire to suggest to him that an executive session may be either open or closed; that it is not necessary to consider nominations and treaties in legislative session; in fact, it is not proper to consider them in legislative session. I think the Senator really intends to provide that executive sessions, which are the only sessions in which nominations and treaties may be considered, shall be open instead of closed.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that I had the cooperation of members of the committee in drafting the notice and tried to follow, so far as possible, the wording of the present rules.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator will find that all treaties and all nominations which have not been considered behind closed doors have been considered in open executive session and not in legislative session. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether that is not correct?

Mr. LODGE. Such matters must be considered in executive session; they constitute executive business.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They constitute executive business and must be considered in executive and not in legislative session. So that, if the Senator will simply provide for open executive sessions in place of "legislative" sessions, he will accomplish what he desires.

Mr. HARRISON. The proposed amendment provides for open executive or legislative sessions.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But the use of the words "legislative session" is incorrect, because the matters referred to are executive busines

Mr. HARRISON. Then the Senator would suggest that the word "legislative" be stricken out.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I suggest that the word "legislative" be omitted and that it should read in each instance "in open executive session."

Mr. HARRISON. "In open executive session." I ask unanimous consent that the notice I have given and the resolution be modified in that respect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the notice will be so modified.

The notice submitted by Mr. HARRISON as modified is as fol-

NOTICE OF PROPOSED AMENDMENT BY MR. HARRISON.

Notice is hereby given, in accordance with the provisions of Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, that upon the next calendar day of the sessions of the Senate a motion will be made to amend Rules

XXXVII and XXXVIII of the Standing Rules of the Senate so that the same shall read as provided in the attached copy of the resolution which I intend to offer to-morrow and ask to have printed in the RECORD as a part of this notice.

The resolution proposes to amend clause 3 of Rule XXXVII so that treaties, except by concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators present and voting for the consideration of same in executive session, shall be considered in open executive session of the Senate.

The resolution further proposes to amend Rule XXXVIII of the Standing Rules of the Senate by amending clause 2 and inserting a new clause 7, so that nominations made by the President shall be considered in open executive session of the Senate, unless by concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators present and voting for the consideration of same in executive session.

Resolved, That clause 3 of Rule XXXVIII of the Standing Rules of the Senate be amended so as to read as follows:

"3. Unless, by the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators present, it is agreed to consider a treaty in executive session, all treaties shall be considered and acted upon by the Senate in open executive session.

Resolved further, That clause 2 of Rule XXXVIII of the Standing Rules of the Senate be amended so as to read as follows:

"2. All information communicated or remarks made by a Senator when acting upon nominations in executive session concerning the character or qualifications of the person nominated, also all votes upon any such nomination, shall be kept secret. If, however, charges shall be made against a person nominated, the committee may, in its discretion, notify such nominee thereof, but the name of the person making such charges shall not be disclosed. The fact that a nomination has been made or that it has been confirmed or rejected shall not be regarded as a secret."

Resolved further, That Rule XXXVIII of the Standing Rules of the Senate be amended further by adding at the end thereof a new clause, as follows:

"7. Unless, by the con

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not wish to interfere with the debate on the emergency tariff bill, which I am very anxious to have passed, but I desire to say that whenever the resolution submitted by the Senator from Mississippi is taken up I shall desire to discuss it. I think there are very serious objections to the change which he proposes, and that it is most undesirable.

Since I have been a Member of the Senate I have heard it stated constantly that there is no use of executive sessions because all that happens in executive sessions becomes public. That is a mistake. Nine-tenths of what happens in executive sessions never become public. There is no report of executive sessions, which makes a very great difference in the discussion of treaties. The rumors of a newspaper can never be taken by a foreign government as the action of any part of the Government of the United States.

There is a rule to which I think the Senator from Mississippi omitted to refer to which I desire to call attention. I refer to paragraph 4 of Rule XXXVI, which provides:

4. Any Senator or officer of the Senate who shall disclose the secret or confidential business or proceedings of the Senate shall be liable, if a Senator, to suffer expulsion from the body; and if an officer, to dismissal from the service of the Senate, and to punishment for

Those portions of the proceedings in executive session which become public and are printed come now and always have come from the indifference or the carelessness of the Senators themselves. Comparatively little gets out; but I have known one or two occasions when accounts of executive proceedings have been given out which obviously ought never to have been given out, and must have been given out deliberately. The paragraph of Rule XXXVI which I have read, however, shows the seriousness which the Senate for many years has attached to this question

As to treaties, it is open to the Senate, if they think fit, to discuss them in open executive session. That action has been taken when it has been thought necessary; but it is much better not to discuss the mass of treaties in open executive session, because it is quite possible, in fact, it is very probable, that things will be said which would then become authoritative and be reported in the RECORD that might give great and unnecessary offense not only to the country with which we are negotiating but to other countries.

As to nominations, I earnestly hope that they will never be discussed in open session. The Senator from Mississippi appears to think that it is going to be for the benefit of the country to have them discussed openly. I think the result would be just the opposite. Now and then there will be a Senator who may wish to make in the open a personal attack on some nominee; but the general effect of such a rule as is now proposed would be that there would be no freedom whatever in the discussion of nominations. All Senators, all men, shrink from making an attack on a man's character which may be unsustained and unsupported when the facts are all known, but which will be blazoned across the country and perhaps cast a stigma on a perfectly innocent man. The result will be that we shall have no proper discussion of nominations which ought to be discussed, because Senators will very naturally be extremely reluctant to carry on personal discussions of that kind in the open Senate.

I am not going to say any more at this time. I merely desire to say that when that rule comes up at the proper time I shall move to have it referred to the Committee on Rules, and I shall wish to discuss it further.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, while the Senator from Massachusetts is on his feet I should like to ask him a question. In his opinion, does the rule of the Senate protecting the secrecy of executive sessions on nominations apply also to the proceedings of a committee to which a nomination has been referred? I ask because important nominations continually come up before committees-I know they do before the Finance Committee—and requests are numerous that the proceedings be open; and as far as I am concerned I do not care whether the proceedings are open or closed. I only want to know, from the Senator's great experience, what his opinion is as to the rule in its application to committee proceedings.

Mr. LODGE. The provision with regard to committees is simple. This is a part of the paragraph providing for secrecy:

If, however, charges shall be made against a person nominated, the committee may, in its discretion, notify such nominee thereof, but the name of the person making such charges shall not be disclosed.

That, I think, distinctly implies that committees follow the usual practice, and do not have their hearings public. In fact, I do not see how they can under that language, because they can not disclose the name of the person making the charge Mr. PENROSE. That was my own thought in the matter.

EMERGENCY TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2435) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, and to provide revenue; to regulate commerce with foreign countries; to prevent dumping of foreign merchandise on the markets of the United States; to regulate the value of foreign money; and for other purposes.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, in view of the performance this morning, in which the grievances of midshipmen at the academy-shrinking violets, mollycoddles, and others who were unable to pass their examinations-and the moss-grown topic of secret sessions has been raised, I will ask the leader of the minority whether, in view of the possibility of a repetition of these delays, we can not agree on some day to vote on the emergency tariff bill? While the agricultural interests are anxiously waiting and the farmers are confronted with ruin Senators are compelled to remain in their seats while these tedious topics are under discussion.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is the Senator addressing his remarks to me?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes, sir. Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to say to the Senator in all frankness that I am very anxious that we shall as soon as possible agree upon a day. I hoped that I might be able to indicate to the Senator this morning the earliest day that we could agree upon, but I find that I am not able to do that. I feel quite sure, however, that by to-morrow I shall be able to give the Senator some answer to his inquiry. Meantime, of course, a failure to fix the time of voting to-day, instead of to-morrow or the next day, will not delay the passage of the bill, because under any conditions there is bound to be and will be considerable discussion of the measure.

I hope to be able to answer the Senator to-morrow. Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I sincerely trust that the Senator from North Carolina will be able to carry out his suggestion to agree on a day certain to-morrow. I do not know of any lengthy debate on the side of the majority on this emergency tariff measure. No true friend of the bill wants to prolong the discussion in a way which will delay the enactment of the bill, neither do I believe there is any intention to filibuster against it; but certainly everyone ought to be interested in its disposal as promptly as possible.

As for myself, Mr. President, I have no very long speech to make to the Senate. The tariff features of this measure are identical with those of the bill which passed the Senate and the House in the last Congress and was vetoed by the President. They have not been changed in any particular. tariff bill is under consideration in the Ways and Means Committee, and it is expected that it will embrace manufactures as well as agricultural and live-stock products. The measure will be taken up in the House of Representatives early in the present month, and it is hoped that it will reach this body some time not late in June. Consequently, it is sincerely hoped that unnecessary delay will not be incurred by Senators attempting to amend the tariff features of the present bill. Such amendments can not be entertained by the majority. To do so would be to delay the bill beyond any limit and tend to make it a permanent tariff measure. The urgent feature would be entirely The bill arises out of the dire necessities of the agricultural interests, and for their relief should be passed immediately.

I do not pretend that the measure in all its parts is allembracing or sufficiently comprehensive, or in all cases entirely logical; but it is an emergency measure, and it is only for a very limited period. The original bill which passed the last Congress was to endure for 10 months. This measure will last but six months, or until a new law is enacted; and it is hoped and expected with every reason that long before the expiration of that period the permanent bill will become a law, so that every Senator will have an opportunity in a very short time to present amendments, if need be, to the permanent bill. This measure, to be of any use whatever, should be passed at

The Government actuary estimates that the customs duties imposed in this bill would yield during a 12-month period $211,-000,000, or $105,000,000 for a 6-month period. The total revenue from the articles subject to tax under this bill during the calendar year 1920 was almost $121,000,000, or about $60,500,000 for a 6-month period. This bill will, therefore, yield an additional revenue of $45,000,000 to the Government for the six months in which it will be in effect. To that extent, therefore, the measure operates in the direction of increasing the much-needed revenues of the Government at the present

In addition, however, to the protective features of the original bill, there were very properly added in the House provisions relating to dumping and valuation of imports. Both parties are agreed as to the desirability of dumping legislation, and I take it there is no serious division of opinion on this question. Ordinarily in tariff legislation it would be consistent and logical to provide definite and adequate compensatory duties for the manufacturers dependent on raw materials for the base of their fabrics. While this bill imposes compensatory duties on certain cotton and wool manufactured articles, it is impossible, however, to provide adequate and logically framed compensatory duties on the manufactured products. It is hoped, therefore, that the antidumping provision and the valuation provision will to some extent relieve our manufacturing interests, sufficiently at least to permit them to survive if their establishments shall be opened again during the brief period of six months.

When the bill came to the Senate the Finance Committee largely revised the dumping and valuation provisions of the House bill in a way to which I think there can be no substantial objection. I ought to say that the committee had the advantage of the information and the advice of the Tariff Board and a judge of the customs court, and the Board of General Appraisers, men experienced in these matters, and of some very intelligent expert gentlemen from the New York customhouse. These experts sat with the committee a large part of the time. and after a very prolonged study of the question they were unanimous in recommending to the committee for their consideration the phraseology and language embodied in the Senate amendment. It is therefore the unanimous result of the best expert knowledge in the Government service on this question, regardless of party or political affiliations.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Broussard in the chair).

Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from

Mr. PENROSE. I yield. Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Is there anything in the Senator's bill which prevents the manufacturers of his own great State of Pennsylvania, notably the Steel Trust, from dumping their surplus goods on South America, for instance?

Mr. PENROSE. No; there is not.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. And selling their goods at a lower price in South America than the prices their goods are sold for in the Southern States in this country?

Mr. PENROSE. No; Mr. President, there is nothing whatever in this measure of that kind, and if the Senator from Georgia had been longer in this body he would realize that that is a separate question and has been the subject of exhaustive discussion on this floor. That is for Canada and the South American countries to determine for themselves, and our nearest neighbor which would be affected by this antidumping provision, Canada, has a very stringent antidumping law, after which we have largely modeled this bill.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Then, how does the Senator reconcile our allowing the surplus population of Europe to be dumped on this country, in the form of cheap labor, and not allowing the products of that cheap labor to be dumped on us?

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the continuity of my remarks by an academic discussion about the selling of certain American products in South America at prices which are below the cost in the home market. The practice has its defenders and there are those who object to it. Each side can put up, in my opinion, a very strong argument, and doubtless before this revenue discussion is over the practice referred to by the Senator from Georgia will be fully discussed. It certainly has no bearing here, except in a remote, academic way.

The dumping provisions, as I said, are the unanimous verdict of the Treasury experts and are, I think it will be generally admitted, an improvement on the House provisions, which were necessarily somewhat hastily passed upon. The provisions, as I said, are largely modeled after the Canadian antidumping.

A salient feature of the Senate amendment to the House provision is that which leaves to the Secretary of the Treasury the decision as to whether there is dumping. Under the House provision the dumping law applies to all importations, and the very onerous duty was imposed on the customs administrative officers to watch every article which came into the country to ascertain whether it was the product of a dumping process. Now, the imports are accepted at the port, and unless on complaint and proof and an order from the Secretary of the Treasury these questions are not entered into. If, however, any home manufacturer discovers that he can not sell his own product or can not start a manufacturing concern of his own on account of this so-called unfair competition, he can complain to the Secretary of the Treasury, who can make the necessary investigation and order. This amendment is certainly a long stride in the direction of simplicity and economy of administration, and I think will be found entirely satis-

The Finance Committee also made a very important amendment in striking out the differential conversion of currency That would have imposed an enormous increase of duties on at least the products from Germany, and I want to correct an impression, Mr. President, that these amendments in any way will tend to greatly increase the duties. I have heard asserted by Senators that the Senate amendment raised the duties to an unconscionable extent. On the contrary, the abolition of the differential very materially and radically reduces any possible soaring rate of duty on foreign products and has eliminated a cause of offense to certain foreign nations.

Of course, it is only fair to state at the same time that the valuation appraised, either on the foreign home value or the export value, whichever is higher, will increase the basis value of many articles for the assessment of duties, and to that extent will increase the duty; but, on the whole, not to any unreasonable extent. It is fair to state that, taking everything into consideration, the possibilities of a very great and unreasonable rise in duties are very much diminished under the Senate amendments.

In connection with that statement I had Mr. Fix, special agent in charge of the comparative valuation report bureau of the New York customs office, send me some statistics showing the differences between the foreign home consumption prices and the foreign export prices in countries wherein the currency had been depreciated more than 66% per cent, and I ask to have them inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. O. Fix, Special Agent in Charge C. V. R. Bureau.

If you require further information, command me.

Respectfully,

Thos. J. Burns, Deputy Appraiser.

Mr. PENROSE. Then another feature of the dumping amendment which originated in the Finance Committee, Mr. President, was that providing for an opportunity to examine the books of the exporter. It is recognized that the great mass of honest exporters have no objection to examination of their books by the American officials, but there remains a very small percentage of exporters who have objected to such examination, resulting in a very reasonable assumption that there is something to conceal.

On the other hand, it is only reasonable to state that the exporter argues that to have an inspector of another country go into his books might place him at a disadvantage with his competitors. The committee has therefore curtailed the original draft of the provision which was under consideration so as to make it apply only to the market value of the merchandise. In my opinion—and I think the opinion is shared by the customs officials—this limitation will seriously diminish the effectiveness of what the committee was after, the prevention of fraud. But in view of the protests which in past years have come from the State Department regarding such a provision, and in view of very recent protests and criticisms from foreign Governments called to the attention of the Finance Committee, it was thought wiser to be moderate in this respect. Therefore, the amendment stands as it does. Those amendments, Mr. President, largely comprise the changes made.

One point, however, I would like to lay stress on. Whether rates are raised or not, the antidumping provision is not intended to produce much revenue. It is a preventive. The mere fact that the provision exists on the statute books tends to prevent dumping. I have here a report from the United States Tariff Commission containing some information concerning dumping and unfair foreign competition in the United States and Canada's antidumping law, and I refer to page 29, where the statement is made:

As evidence that the antidumping clause serves as a check on dumping rather than as a revenue producer, Canadian customs officials point to the following table—

Which shows that in the 11 years from 1907 to 1918, inclusive, the Canadian dumping duties have averaged less than one-tenth of 1 per cent of the total duties collected. I will ask to have the table inserted in my remarks.

There being no objection, the table referred to was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Mr. PENROSE. Finally, Mr. President, there was submitted to the committee an amendment for the control of dye importations. I shall not detain the Senate by going into any lengthy statement or argument as to the supreme importance of that industry or the fact, which was deeply impressed on the committee, that entire ruin would confront the industry in this country unless it was protected immediately from prospective competition, particularly from Germany.

I need not lay stress on the vast amount of capital invested in that industry during the war, which would have some claim on the Government for protection, including the high grade of employees engaged in the business. But I was only laying stress on the supreme importance of the industry in furnishing the basis for not only the arts and sciences in the manufacture of woolen goods and other similar articles, but in the manufacture of munitions of war and in a score of interesting and important ramifications which I could go into and which, during this debate, I will leave to others to explain.

The fact remains that the Senate and the House have carefully considered the necessity of doing something in connection with the dye proposition, and whether that part of the bill should be amended or not, I sincerely hope that something effective will remain in the measure between the present and the time it goes to the conference committee to protect the industry.

Mr. President, I have here three tables. The first one shows the estimated revenue collections for a 12-months period under Title I; that is, the tariff title of the emergency tariff bill.

The second table shows the revenue collected during the calendar year 1920 from articles subject to tax under that bill.

The third table shows the rates upon articles contained in the

The third table shows the rates upon articles contained in the bill under the acts of 1900 and 1913 and under House bill 2435.

I think these figures will be found extremely interesting and instructive, and I ask to have them added to my remarks, and I invite the careful attention of the Senate to them.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The report filed by the Finance Committee is unusually complete and comprehensive. Nothing that I could add to it would be more than a repetition of the statements contained therein and would be tedious and uninteresting. Therefore I shall close, again expressing my willingness to make any explanations or reply to any questions, and feeling that to continue the dis-cussion is to unnecessarily delay the bill, and with the sincere

Mr. SIMMONS obtained the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from North Carolina will proceed.

Mr. SIMMONS addressed the Senate. After having spoken, with interruptions, for nearly two hours, he said:

Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] who, I assume is in charge of the bill in the absence of the chairman of the committee, whether he requires us to go on longer this afternoon. I have been much interrupted and I have not objected to the interruptions, because I think they have been helpful. What we are trying to do is to understand the bill, and we can understand it very much better by colloquies than by set speeches. Therefore, I have invited interruptions and am glad to have them. But it has taken most of my time and I am not anywhere near through with the matters that I wish to discuss in connection with the bill. It is my purpose not only to discuss the amendments of the Senate committee, which include the valuation amendment as well as the ant: Jumping amendment, but to discuss the general provisions of the bill and the emergency provision, so far as it applies to agriculture, and that will take some time. I might have finished in half an hour or three-quarters of an hour if I had not had this last interruption, but the last interruption has been somewhat prolonged, and I do not feel now that I wish to go on to-night unless the Senator from North Dakota insists upon it.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator would not be willing to go on until 5 o'clock?

Mr. SIMMONS. I would rather not continue to-day. I am rather tired.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not wish to impose upon the Senator, but may I ask him if there is not some one else on the other side who desires to speak to-day and who can take up the balance of the time until 5. o'clock?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not; but I think I might go on.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not wish to insist if the Senator feels

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know of anyone on this side who wishes to speak to-day.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thought possibly the Senator could suggest one who could take up some of the time remaining this afternoon.

Mr. HARRISON rose.

SIMMONS. The Senator from Mississippi may have something to say.

Mr. HARRISON. I merely rose to say that it would be rather unfair to the Senator from North Carolina for some one else to speak right in the midst of his remarks.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think it could be so considered, because we have been doing that right along.

Mr. HARRISON. He should be allowed to finish his speech, Mr. UNDERWOOD, I will say to the Senator from North Dakota, as I am sure the Senator from North Carolina has already assured the other side of the Chamber, that there is no desire on this side to delay the bill, and I wish to state to him the fact that the Senator from North Carolina stands on this side of the aisle in the attitude of the chairman. sents this side on the pending measure. If he is not prepared to present his views further this evening, it seems to me that he ought to be allowed to wait until to-morrow.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am going to move to take a recess unless there is some one on the other side or this side who desires to speak on the bill to-day. That is the purpose of my inquiry. If there is, I would rather go on until 5 o'clock and let the Senator from North Carolina rest. If there is no one who desires tó speak I shall not impose upon the Senator from North Carolina by insisting that he shall speak all the afternoon.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator that so far as I am concerned I expect to make a short statement on the bill before its consideration is concluded. I have no doubt some other Members may do likewise; but the Senator from North Carolina represents our side of the Chamber on this particular measure, and we prefer to have him conclude and to hear his remarks through before we start to debate the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is satisfactory. I hope that by tomorrow we shall be able to fix some time at which we can vote at a very early period.

Mr. SMOOT. If we take a recess to-night, as I hope we shall, then let us all object to any morning business to-morrow and go to the consideration of the emergency tariff bill the first thing to-morrow. Then we will not have to hold so long a session. It was nearly 2 o'clock to-day before we got started upon the consideration of this bill, and we have been considering it for only about two hours. I think we can make progress by objecting to morning business to-morrow if we take a recess to-night.

Mr. HARRISON. Why not adjourn to-night? Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no. The bill should have been brought up last Monday. Here it is Thursday night, and we have not had more than four hours' discussion on the bill this week,

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know whether the Senator was present when I served notice that I was going to call up a motion to change the rules, which I expect to do at the very first opportunity. Under the rules the notice must lie over for one calendar day.

Mr. SMOOT. That will have to go to the Committee on Rules. Mr. HARRISON. If we recess to-day I do not know what the ruling of the Chair would be and whether I could call it If we recess to-day I do not know what up to-morrow if I should desire to do so. For that reason I hope the Senate will adjourn.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator wish to introduce it to-

Mr. HARRISON. It has been already introduced.

Mr. SMOOT. It will have to go to the Committee on Rules. Mr. HARRISON. No: it does not, under the action of the Senate recently on the resolution of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Brandegee], when it was held that such a motion does not have to go to the Rules Committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, before we take a recess I desire to have printed in the RECORD, as bearing on the pending bill, though I shall not take the time to read it, a communication from the New York Fruit Exchange relative to the proposed duty on lemons, and also a communication from a correspondent in Cuba with reference to the proposed duty on tobacco.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the first letter has already been put in the RECORD. I think I read it.

Mr. FLETCHER. But this is a letter to me.

Mr. SMOOT. I had a similar letter, and I think every other Senator had.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, if the letter has been placed in the RECORD, I shall not ask to have it printed again. The other letter to which I refer bears on the duty on tobacco proposed in the bill. I ask that that letter may be printed in the RECORD. It is a letter from Tampa, Fla., showing the effect of the extraordinary increase proposed in the duty on wrapper and filler tobacco. I ask to have them both printed in the RECORD unless a similar communication from the New York Fruit Exchange to some other Senator has already been inserted in the

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? It not, it is so ordered.

The communications are as follows:

NEW YORK, April 30, 1921.

DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your attention is called to the fact that if a prohibitive duty is placed upon foreign lemons in the emergency or permanent tariff bills, it will create a monopoly that will have the entire country in its clutches. Outside of California, Italy, and Sicily, no lemons are grown to any extent.

The duty demanded by the California interests, 2 cents per pound, approximately $1.50 per box, with freight and other charges, will make the cost of bringing a box of lemons from Sicily to this country about $2.25 per box. This will make the expense of importing lemons so great, to say nothing of the cost of the lemons themselves, that the business will be very hazardous and will result in very few, if any, lemons being brought here.

The freight on a box of lemons from California to New York via all rail is about $1.40 per box. Recently several cargoes of California lemons have come here via all-water route through the Panama Canal, demonstrating the practicability of this route, at a total cost of less than $1 per box. Even at the present rate of duty this gives California an advantage over Sicily, so far as the cost of bringing the fruit to New York is concerned.

fornia an advantage over Sicily, so far as the cost of bringing the fruit to New York is concerned.

The California Fruit Growers' Exchange controls the marketing of about 85 per cent of the crop of lemons. With the Sicily fruit out of the way there will be nothing to prevent the exchange from making such prices on lemons as they see fit, and you can rest assured there will be no effort made to give the public "cheap" lemons, as Mr. Powell said would be done in his testimony before the House Ways and Means Committee. About 35 per cent of the lemons sold by the exchange are disposed of at auction in the large eastern cities, and it is claimed that the buyer makes the price at these sales, it being governed by the demand and supply. This is true, but the exchange will see to it that the supply is at no time large enough to break the market,

The price of the 65 per cent sold at private sale will be arbitrarily fixed.

There is no disposition on the part of those engaged in the foreign lemon business—and they are numbered by the thousands—to evade the payment of duty or to ask for free entry of lemons, which could very properly be done, as lemons have become a very necessary food article.

We recognize the fact that the Government is under extraordinary expense and a huge revenue must be raised, and it is only fair that imported lemons should furnish part of this revenue. No objection would be made to a duty of, say, 70 cents per box, which is double the present duty, but to impose a duty of 2 cents per pound, about $1.50 per box, would be prohibitive and result in no revenue, as no lemons would be imported. There is also the danger of reprisals by Italy. The brief submitted by the New York Fruit Exchange to the House Ways and Mcans Committee—hearings on schedule G—contains considerable detailed information regarding imported lemons.

We hope you will give this matter your careful attention and do what you can to prevent the exclusion of the foreign lemons, which will deprive the large body of consumers in the country from obtaining a very essential article at reasonable prices and placing them at the mercy of one producing section only, which could then dictate prices.

A large number of dealers in various parts of the country prefer the foreign lemon to the California fruit, and to prevent them having it would be a grave injustice. Foreign lemons are sold exclusively at auction, each cargo, without regard to size or market conditions, being disposed of on arrival.

Respectfully,

New York Fruit Exchance,

W. A. Camp, President.

NEW YORK FRUIT EXCHANGE, WM. A. CAMP, President.

P. S.: Your attention is called to the fact that the laws of Florida prohibit the entry of California lemons into your State.

HABANA, CUBA, April 26, 1921.

Hon. Duncan U. Fletcher, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: You will recall that during January of this year I had some correspondence with you with reference to the Fordney emergency tariff bill as it affected the duty on Cuban tobacco. My letter was written to you in the interests of the Tampa Cigar Manufacturers' Association. At that time I covered the subject as well as I could and I do not know that I now have anything to add to what I said then. I prepared a brief for the Ways and Means Committee of the House, which I sent to Mr. Drane, and he had it inserted in a report of the committee hearings on the permanent tariff bill. I happened to be in Habana on business to-day, and Mr. Morris, vice president of Lykes Bros. (Inc.), has called my attention to the inclosed form of letter that is being issued by the American Chamber of Commerce of Habana, in which the situation is very effectively and concisely summed up.

pened to be in Habana on business to-day, and Mr. Morris, vice president of Lykes Bros. (Inc.), has called my attention to the inclosed form of letter that is being issued by the American Chamber of Commerce of Habana, in which the situation is very effectively and concisely summed up.

If the United States Congress wishes to destroy the Habana cigar manufacturing interests in the United States and practically put out of business the tobacco growers of Cuba they can adopt no more appropriate method than to raise the existing tariff on leaf tobacco. As pointed out in the brief I filed with the Ways and Means Committee, an increase in tariff on wrapper tobacco will automatically force the manufactured product into the higher-priced grades, which will in turn make the same llable to an increase of $3 per thousand internal revenue tax under the existing internal revenue law.

Cuba for the past six months has been in the midst of a serious crisis. The United States owes this country a very real duty. Legislation that will further embarrass these people in the sale of their two chief products—sugar and tobacco—is little short of barbarous and entirely unworthy of the United States Government, which has assumed a guardianship over this little Republic. Therefore, from the standpoint of moral obligation to the Cuban Republic, as well as the protection of the interests of our own manufacturers, the proposed increase in tariff—and especially on tobacco, in which I am directly interested—would seem to be the worst kind of bad faith and at the same time inexcusable folly. I hope something can be done to prevent the increase of 50 cents a pound on wrapper tobacco, that was provided for in the Fordney emergency bill, being carried into the permanent tariff measure when it is adopted, and also that some relief may be given to American importers of tobacco against the arbitrary rule of assessing wrapper duty on all bales of tobacco containing as much as 15 per cent wrapper. There should be a discretion given the appraiser to f

K. I. McKax, Tampa, Fla.

Dear Sirs: In view of the tariff revision now under consideration by the Congress at Washington, we beg to call your attention to the fact that the exportations from the United States to Cuba will be materially reduced if our products must find a market in the United States hereafter under less favorable conditions than they do at present. When Cuba sells less sugar, less tobacco, and less of all other products of its soil, the ability of the country to import goods from you will be diminished to a considerable extent.

Cuba bought during the last calendar year (1920) from the United States merchandise to the value of $515,082,549. The only other countries which bought more than this amount from the United States were the United Kingdom, Canada, and France. Argentina, Brazil, and Mexico together, with over 50,000,000 inhabitants, bought $578,-320,546, or only slightly more than Cuba, the population of which is 2,700,000. Cuba is recognized as having the world's largest per capita trade. Over 75 per cent of our importations now come from the United States, whereas when the Republic was established the percentage was only about 40.

In Cuba we do not have cheap labor. Our export articles—sugar, tobacco, and others of less importance—are produced at present under costs as high on the average as similar articles in the States. This places us in the same position as the United States, in that we can not sell our articles to countries where the cost of production is relatively low, and can not compete with the products of those countries in the markets of the United States, unless we enjoy'a substantial reduction in the tariff duties. In the case of sugar, for instance, Cuba has, during the last decade supplied a large part of the deficiency in your production, but under higher tariff rates it would be increasingly difficult for Cuba's sugars to compete with those from other parts of the world, where production costs are lower and which now enjoy a privileged situation because of the rate of exchange. Our currency is United States currency or Cuban gold coins of the same value as yours. We are not therefore benefited by the difference in the rates of exchange, as are many countries now selling sugar to the United States. It would not be possible to maintain, much less increase, the volume of the exportations of the United States to Cuba, unless we can sell our sugar, our tobacco, and other products of our soil as we have been doing. Trade consists of the exchange of products, and in order that a country may be able to buy from others, it must also be able to sell to others. Cuba has its natural and almost its sole market in the United States, to which we sell 85 per cent of our products. If the opportunities for selling in this market are reduced, our ability to buy will be reduced to the same extent.

In addition, it seems only logical that it should be the policy of the United States to extend an effective protection to Cuba, as by far the greater part of the capital invested in Cuba and many of the largest business concerns are American. In this respect there is little difference between Cuba and one of the States of the Union. American capital controls over 55 per cent of the sugar mills of the island, and American incrests are predominant in shipping, commerce, banking, insurance, in public services, like docks and warehouses, telephone, water supply, electric lighting, etc., and very considerable in railroads, tobacco, mining, and other fields. Whatever injures the prosperity and development of Cuba therefore works harm to American interests. Commercially and industrially Cuba is to all intents and purposes a part of your economic system. To legislate against the products of

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business,

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, May 6, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate May 5 (legislative day of May 4), 1921.

COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS.

Thomas E. Robertson.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 5, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our heavenly Father, Thou hast given life and Thou hast spared life, and in it Thou art plenteous in mercy. May we lovingly accept Thy will and follow Thy purpose, that our thoughts may be right and our words wise. May we not boast in our strength, but rather be humble in our weakness. Hear the prayers that can not be heard, for they are too sacred for words. Be with those who are withdrawn from duty because of affliction. Bind up their wounds with many balms, and be with them in their solitude and pain. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. PADGETT, continues ill. I ask unanimous consent that he be excused from attendance for the remainder of the week.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that his colleague, Mr. Padgett, be excused for the remainder of the week. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, in the reading of the Journal I noticed it stated that Mr. Wingo made the point of order that the motion to recommit was not germane. It seems to me that the point of order which the gentleman made was that the amendment proposed in the motion to recommit was not germane. I do not think the statement should be journalized that a motion to recommit was not germane.

I think the germaneness of a motion to recom-Mr. WINGO. mit is tested by the germaneness of the amendment that it offers. If the amendment is not germane, then the motion is not germane. I do not care how it is stated-whichever is the customary way

The SPEAKER. The real question, of course, is whether the amendment itself was germane.

Mr. BLANTON. It had the effect of killing the motion, anyway.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it was correctly journalized.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report,

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 82.

Resolved, That the following Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of the standing committees of the House:
Accounts: Mr. Hampton P. Fulmer, of South Carolina, and Mr. Joseph T. Deal, of Virginia.
Irrigation of Arid Lands: Mr. William B. Bankhead, of Alabama.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES,

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the budget bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the previous question having been ordered on H. R. 2376, that should be completed first. The question is on the passage of that bill.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is going to address the House on the merits of the bill, some one should be given an opportunity to reply. In the absence of the gentlemen in charge of the bill, I think I shall have to object. The gentlemen who are in charge of the bill would probably object if they were here, unless they were given an opportunity to reply to what the gentleman may have to say.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. They ought to be here. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Mr. WALSH.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. The Record shows that during the considera-tion of this bill yesterday the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], chairman of the Judiciary Committee, who is in charge of the bill, moved the previous question, and that the previous question was ordered. Does the previous question operate to the final passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. It is customary perhaps it is an unfortunate habit-instead of moving the previous question on the bill and amendments to the final passage, simply to move the previous question, but the Chair thinks that is the intent.

Mr. WALSH. But, Mr. Speaker, two hours of debate had not been had on the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was not necessary. It is a House Calendar bill, and the previous question can be ordered at any

The SPEAKER. The previous question can be ordered at any time.

Mr. WALSH. But, Mr. Speaker, if during the debate on a House Calendar bill on Calendar Wednesday a simple motion for the previous question was made and agreed to, my inquiry is whether that operates to the final passage without being so stated in the motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. Does the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell] object to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moores]?

Mr. MONDELL. I think I shall have to object.

The gentleman objects. The question is on The SPEAKER the passage of the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 2376) to further amend section 858 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. VAILE and Mr. MOORES of Indiana demanded a divi-

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland makes the point of no quorum present. There is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll. As many as favor the passage of the bill will as their names are called vote "yea," those opposed "nay."

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 286, nays 66,

Mr. LINTHICUM. Reserving the right to object, I ask leave to have a telegram read.

Mr. WALSH. I object to any telegrams being read. Mr. LINTHICUM. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for one minute to address the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks leave to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I object.

THE SLACKER LIST.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by inserting the names of the so-called slacker list which has been prepared by the Army and to insert those names from time to time as they come out from the War Department.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object,

I want to ask the gentleman a question—
Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

Chair hears none.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 4075, an act to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 4075, the immigration bill, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Senate amendment, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Has the gentleman from Washington made a motion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has moved to disagree to the Senate amendment and agree to the conference.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is in order at this time.

The SPEAKER. Why not? The Chair understands that it is a House bill with a Senate amendment, not requiring to be considered by the House in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, as I heard the reading of the Senate amendment from the Clerk's desk, it strikes out all of the House bill and incorporates in lieu one Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. In the confusion the Chair was unable to hear the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the way I got it from the Clerk's desk. My impression was that it was an amendment that did not require consideration in the Committee of the Whole and so advised the gentleman from Washington, who asked to take the

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, Mr. Speaker, we are very anxious to get this bill to conference.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to its going to conference, and I hope the gentleman from Maryland will withdraw his objection and let it go to conference.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I have a very important telegram which I desire to have read.

Mr. WALSH. It is not more important than the sending of this bill to conference.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I shall withdraw my objection to the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Then, Mr. Speaker, I shall put it in the form of a request for unanimous consent. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington to take the bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Chair appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. Johnson of Washington, Mr. Siegel, Mr. Tay lor of Tennessee, Mr. Sabath, and Mr. Raker. Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous con-sent for one minute in order that I may have this telegram read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects. THE BUDGET.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 1084) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 1084, with Mr. Burton in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose two amendments were under consideration, an amendment offered by the gen-tleman from New York [Mr. Rossdale] and an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS]. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Rossdale: Page 7, line 4, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$3,000."

Amendment by Mr. Williams to the amendment by Mr. Rossdale: Strike out "$3,000" and insert "$2,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I object. Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been had upon the paragraph. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio that all debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I confess that my faith in the efficacy of the civil-service reform has been considerably shaken since I have been a Member of this Congress. I had long been in favor of civilservice reform. I do not know how best to substitute an improvement for the present régime, but I do know, and I believe every Member of this Congress who has been here for any considerable length of time knows, that the civil-service reform as now administered is a disappointment. [Applause.] One of the men at the head of one of the greatest departments of this Government, who has been occupying his present position for many years, who is a close observer of the practical enforcement of the civil service as applied to his branch of the Government, declares without hesitation that he could get along with at least one-third less men in his division if it were not for the civilservice appointees.

This seems to be the situation generally. Men and women get these places by reason of examination, and after they get them they feel that they are secure so far as the position is concerned; that all they have to do is to do just simply enough work to get by and not violate the regulations sufficiently to be discharged. The result is a destruction of the morale in all departments and an inefficient force of employees, out of which not more than 50 per cent of efficiency is obtained. The question is how to remedy this condition. I confess that I do not know, but I believe that one of the best strokes in favor of a more positions than it is absolutely necessary to make them apply to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana, Not now. I would hate to go back to the old system of spoils, to which the Government service was subjected years ago, but something should be done about re-forming the so-called civil-service reform. We are paying $100 out for $50 worth of service to the Government of the United States under the system as now administered. What is true in the department to which I have called your attention is likewise true, I dare say, with reference to every department of this Government.

Now, then

Mr. BURROUGHS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. For a brief question.
Mr. BURROUGHS. Is it not true, whether under civil service or not under civil service?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; it need not be true. I believe that if we had some system whereby the head of a bureau, who is responsible for the output of the work of a given department, would have some latitude, who could say to the people who are working under him, "You shall do a dollar's worth of work for every dollar paid or I will strike you from the list," that would be efficacious. But he can not do it. Criticize them as he may, there is but one way he can get rid of them, and that is to prefer charges of inefficiency, and we all know how hard it is to get rid of them in that way, unless the misconduct is most flagrant. Frequently Government employees are heard to say, I am under the civil-service protection of this Government; get me out if you can." That is the position they occupy; so I say instead of enlarging the thing we should restrict and confine it, if you please, to the smallest possible number. Some may think I am speaking in this vein because of the fact it is more difficult under the classified service to get political appointments than otherwise. That has never entered the equa-tion as far as I am concerned. In the examinations that occur every year before the committee having charge of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bills of this Government witness after witness advise us that the bane of the civil service as it applies now is because of the fact that they can not get the work out of these men and women that they ought to get out of them. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee,
I am surprised by the remarks of my distinguished friend who has just taken his seat in regard to the civil service. Some six years ago when the head of one of the departments changed there was an effort then to have those who could not do the work retired. There were some four cases of old men in the service down at the building then on Seventh Street who were retired in the course of about a month. Three of them committed suicide and the other one came back and threatened to do the same. He was retained. A howl went up by the various Members opposed to the department at that time that the civilservice rules were not being complied with and that men and women who had given their life service to the Government were being discharged. The department head said he had not been discharging others because these old men-

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Not for the present. Now we pass a retirement bill so as to relieve that situation, for those who had given a sufficient amount of service to the end that they might be in a partial way provided for, that only those who were competent and capable of doing the work under the civil service should remain there. Can it be possible now that any head of a department permits it, if the statement by the gentleman from Indiana, my distinguished friend, is correct, that only half service is given, and that the law is violated, and that the department will not exercise its proper function and relieve from the service because of inefficiency men or women who fail to do their work and only do one-half the proper amount? But the trouble is that we find those people now in the civil service who are doing their work and doing it efficiently and properly. There are some who have gone in lately who want to beat out or turn out those who are in the service because they are doing effective and efficient service for the Government.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER, I will.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It was said in support of the retirement bill that if this became a law it would result in a reduction of the civil-service employees of the Government. has been disclosed that it has not resulted in the discharge of a single person or the retirement or a reduction of the classified force of the Government. In other words, we have a retirement bill now and we have the full quota of clerks.

Mr. RAKER. I will answer that in a moment. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The argument the gentleman was making that the civil service tended to induce suicide is the best argument I have ever heard for this bureau. [Applause,] Mr. RAKER. I am surprised to hear gentlemen on the other side clap their hands in favor of a statement like that when a person, man or woman, has given 25 or 30 years of the best of their life to the Government service and no arrangement has been made to take care of them, and they are turned out either on the street or have to go to the poor house. Why, suicide is a thousand times preferable to the hospital or the poor house. What else can the poor devil do except commit suicide?

Mr. ROSSDALE rose.

Mr. RAKER. I want to call attention to the fact that in inquiring of the departments you have to take some of their statements or reduce their force, but they can not reduce the force and do the enormous amount of work that is being done, and I think it is unjust without an inquiry or investigation to say of these splendid young men and young women who are giving this service to the country and the department in which they are working that they are only doing half service in the department. It is not the fact.

Reduction is all right when it can be properly done. not criticize and belittle, though, those who are faithful and are needed. Weed out the ones not needed or who are not working if any such there be, but do not make the general statement that these employees of the Government are only giving half of their time when they are being paid for full This is a very unjust statement. I can not bring myself to believe that the head of any of the Government departments or bureaus are so far forgetful of their duties to permit any such conditions to exist as described by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I fear that some Members of this House fail to comprehend the meaning of the verdict of last November. If that verdict meant that this Congress should legislate a system of economy that would be a great revenue producer, then we must give to the executive branch not a spoilsman's bureau but a bureau that will enable the President of the United States to reach out and call in the experts whom he must have to assist him in making up the budget. [Applause.] This is not the place nor the time for a spoilsman. We are trying to enact a bill that will permit the President of the United States to obtain the very best organization irrespective of the political forces that may be seeking appointment.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. For a brief question,

Mr. MURPHY. The gentleman has made the statement that he is trying to have a bill that would place in the hands of the President the power to do certain things, and yet in the bill, in the very first clause, almost, he gives to a $10,000 man a right to snap his fingers in the face of the President. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. The bill provides that the President shall appoint the budget officer.

Mr. MURPHY. And he can not remove him, either.

Mr. GOOD. When a man wants to be a spoilsman, the first thing he wants to do is to violate the law. What we are trying to enact here is a law that will give the President of the United States a competent force. I will say to the gentleman that every man that came before the Committee on the Budget, without a single exception, said that unless we made this force one that would be developed and trained under the director and assistant director and would become familiar with the duties of the bureau, we might just as well not attempt to do anything in the way of budgetary reform. Now, Mr. Chairman, how will this force be created? The President will appoint, without regard to the civil service, the director of the budget and the assistant director. The President will then cause to be prescribed rules with regard to an examination that will permit him to get the kind of men he wants, and the kind of men the President wants are the men who have been making a study of State budgets and of the National Government, not men who have been able to control a ward or a county or a State politically, but men who are students of economy. And then it is proposed to offer something to those men so that they will stay in the service and enable them to become really efficient in this bureau.

Mr. ROSSDALE. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for a question.

Mr. ROSSDALE. I rise in opposition to the substitute to my amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the time for debate is fixed.

Mr. ROSSDALE. But you are taking all the time. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. I am going to exercise my right.

Mr. ROSSDALE. First you fix the time, and then you take

Why do you not give us a chance?

The CHAIRMAN. The 15 minutes provided by the motion have expired. The question is on the adoption of the amendment by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Rossdale], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WILLIAMS to the amendment offered by Mr. Ross-DALE: Strike out "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GOOD. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 26, noes 124. So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Rossdale], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Rossdale: Page 7, line 4, after the word "of," strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$3,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to the section that we have been considering.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin can offer the amendment. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Cooper of Wisconsin: Page 6, line 17, strike out the word "such," and in line 18 strike out the word "such," and after the word "cffice," in line 22, strike out "as Congress may from time to time provide" and insert, after the word "office," the following: "within the appropriations made therefor."

The CHAIRMAN. The question must be submitted without debate. The Clerk will read the paragraph as it would read if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 208. (a) The director, with the approval of the President, shall appoint and fix the compensation of attorneys and other employees and make expenditures for rent in the District of Columbia, printing, binding, telegrams, telephone service, law books, books of reference, periodicals, stationery, furniture, office equipment, other supplies, and necessary expenses of the office within the appropriations made therefor.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. ROSSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD. I want to say those things in the RECORD that I would like to have said if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] had not said so much.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record with a view of setting forth that which he was prevented from saying on the floor.

ne floor. Is there objection?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to ob-

Mr. SNELL. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.
Mr. GOOD. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order. Mr. McCLINTIC. You have a Member on that side of whomwould like to ask a question. So I object, without asking it. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 209. The bureau, when directed by the President, shall make a detailed study of the departments and establishments for the purpose of enabling the President to determine what changes (with a view of securing greater economy and efficiency in the conduct of the public service) should be made in (1) the existing organization, activities, and methods of business of such departments or establishments, (2) the appropriations therefor, (3) the assignment of particular activities to particular services, or (4) the regrouping of services. The results of such study shall be embodied in a report or reports to the President, who may transmit to Congress such report or reports or any part thereof with his recommendations on the matters covered thereby.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I approve this bill and shall support it, but I have no hesitation in risking my reputation as a prophet as to results from legislation by saying it will not accomplish all, or anywhere near all, that is being expected of it. This bill will not stop deficiency appropriations, which are the great evil in our governmental expenditures, nor will it stop the department heads from grasping at all that they think they want for their particular divisions. Years ago, when the question of the resumption of specie payments was before this House, somebody said: "The way to resume is to resume." The way to economize is to economize, and not merely to theorize; and that will not be done until this House resumes its prerogative of controlling the expenditures of this Government. This House has that power under the Constitution, and it ought to exercise it, but I venture to predict that after the bill has become a law there will be the same old story of Congress trying to hold appropriations down and the department chiefs trying to keep them up, and this bill will not help us in the contest.

The department expenditures have been controlled largely by the department heads since the European war broke out. This bill will fix some responsibility upon the Executive, and to that extent I think it will be productive of some good. But it will not hold down the department heads; it will not prevent them from going ahead with expenditures which necessitate deficiency appropriations, nor will it strengthen the laws which now forbid the creation of deficiencies. Those laws appear to be insufficient, but if we are to have any real economy these matters must be controlled by this House.

Let me say this with reference to deficiency expenditures, and I challenge any Member of this House to refute the statement, that in nine cases out of ten if the department heads had been willing to come to Congress and ask for additional appropriations they could have done it in plenty of time to have avoided their deficiency estimates if they were necessary, and this fact shows that the department heads have been deliberately going over the head of Congress instead of coming to Congress when they had the time and opportunity, before the necessity arose for the extra expenditures, to ask for additional appropriations. They have spent the money first and then asked Congress to approve their action, as in almost all cases it became absolutely necessary for us to do. There was nothing else that could be done.

Now, what is necessary? A necessity arises for a general limitation of appropriations, and, in accordance with this budget system, the President and the administration in the first instance must fix and recognize the total amount to be expended. So far I agree with the bill and so far I agree that it will be productive of much good. But unless these men are held down and Congress maintains its right which it has under the Constitution little will be accomplished. Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Does the gentleman think it is practically possible to eliminate all deficiencies?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not in time of war, but it would be possible in time of peace to eliminate all of them. In fact, they would be eliminated if the law was complied with. We got so accustomed to the law not being enforced during the war that department heads have since been violating it with impunity. The law forbidding the creation of deficiencies should be enforced, and if it is not strong enough to stop this pernicious practice, which has been costing the Government hundreds of millions of dollars every year, then there is no subject for which there is so much need of congressional action.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa

has expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The gentleman from South Carolina is The CHAIRMAN.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has just spoken [Mr. Green of Iowa] has spoken of the excessive expenses of the Government being largely chargeable to the heads of departments. I think in view of our experience here we should charge some of it elsewhere. For instance, last week we passed the Naval appropriation bill, under considerable protest, carrying $396,000,000. I note in this morning's paper that on yesterday in another body $100,000,000 was added to that bill, and I make the prediction here that at least $75,000,000 of it will stick to the bill when it goes to conference and we finally adopt the conference report.

There are other places where additions are made to these matters besides the heads of departments, and this House frequently lies down and allows another body to add very materially to the burdens of this Government. I hope in this instance it is going to show in conference the backbone not to submit to it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman will admit that that $100,000,000 is not being added without the absolute insistence of the department?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; but this House has not yielded to the insistence of the department, while the other body has, and if we do not look out we shall yield to it.

I notice by the comprehensive statement of the Secretary of the Treasury the other day that we were expected to see expended in the next fiscal year $1,100,000,000 by the War Department and the Navy Department. We are endeavoring to appropriate for those two departments in this House $750, 000,000, in round numbers. Now, where are they going to get the money to expend on those two departments if Congress does not provide it? And where will it be added? If we follow the precedents which I have noticed since I have been in the House we are going to submit to the enlargement of the expenditure. It seems to me that when we begin to make these moral lectures here about the heads of departments, we had better apply a little bit of them to the legislative department.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the gentleman has always found me cooperating with him along those lines,

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. But the difficulty is that we merely moralize and do not cooperate in carrying out the moral lessons that we inculcate here. I hope the committee will cooperate [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to strike out the last two words of the section.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, everyone must recognize the fact that no law can be passed regulating the manner in which estimates shall be submitted to Congress and considered by Congress and be effective in bringing about economy unless there is behind it the good faith and the earnest intent of the executive department and also of Congress to effect economy.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] says that Congress must be in earnest in behalf of economy in order that this or any other law may become effective. This bill certainly is an improvement over the existing method of submitting estimates and making appropriations, because now there is absolutely no responsibility fixed by law, with the proper machinery to carry out that responsibility on the part of the Executive or any Cabinet head. This law undertakes to fix upon the President of the United States the responsibility of submitting these estimates in the first place, and I agree with the gentleman from Iowa that unless, after these estimates come forward, Congress itself shows an economical spirit, there will be no economy

I think the departments are not to be altogether blamed for the era of extravagance under which we are laboring. Congress is at fault also, for I remind the gentleman from Iowa that in the last analysis Congress is responsible for all the appropriations that are made. Only on Monday of this week we had an illustration here of duplication and extravagance on the part of this House, and that was with reference to the Reorganization Committee. That Reorganization Committee proposes to reorganize the executive departments. It was called to the attention of the House at that time that this budget bill, which it was proposed to adopt, provided for the regrouping and reorganization of the departments, and that it would work a duplication.

And yet the joint resolution which was before the House at that time, providing among other expenses for a position paying $7,500 a year, to be filled by the President of the United States, and to be, as it were, a part of the congressional committee to reorganize the departments, received the support of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Green], who now undertakes to criticize the House on account of its extravagance. I submit, gentlemen, that in passing upon these propositions for appropriations, Congress, as the gentleman says, should exercise greater scrutiny and greater economy, and it should be careful not to increase the duplications and to create useless and unnecessary offices at high salaries. I want to emphasize what the gentleman had to say with reference to the importance of Congress scrutinizing these appropriations and exercising greater economy than it has in the past, regardless of whatever law may be passed.

Mr. REAVIS. The Committee on Reorganization, to regroup the activities within the departments, was organized under a resolution passed by the last Congress, for which the gentleman voted.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not vote for it. It was passed in December by unanimous consent, and there was no vote. I made no objection to it. I do not know whether I was present in the House at the time. I am inclined to think I was in committee.

Mr. REAVIS. There was no objection on the part of the gentleman, and if there were duplications they came by the passage of that resolution in the last Congress.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But the gentleman will recall that he brought up the same resolution in the closing days of the session which ended in June, and that the gentleman made a motion to suspend the rules and pass the resolution, and I made a very active fight against it and the House voted it down at that time. It was called up subsequently in December. I do not know how many Members were present at the time, but it was passed without objection on the part of anybody and within two or three minutes, and without debate, as the record will show.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the proforma amendment. Let me call attention to this fact: In the subsequent parts of the bill some important provisions are proposed in regard to an independent accounting system. In that part of the bill we will find the instrumentality for the accomplishment of the things we are complaining about. How can deficiencies arise? Of course, they are overdrafts on appropria-If an appropriation is inadequate to meet a public need a deficiency is bound to follow if the need exceeds the provision. But it is the duty of the accounting officers of the Government to stop payment the very minute the appropriation made by Congress has been exhausted. Mark you, gentlemen, that is one of the important duties of the accounting system. The accounting officers, however, in times past may have yielded to the executive demand for the statement of accounts beyond the limits of appropriations. If they did, they violated their duty under the law. If there is in the law a standing provision authorizing the incurring of an indebtedness, an auditor may state an account to be submitted to Congress for an appropriation to liquidate that obligation. If the appropriation, however, fixes the limit to the incurring of indebtedness, it is the imperative duty of the accounting officer to stop at that limit. Now, when we make provision for an independent accounting system the accounting officers will be emancipated from the executive demand, and right there you will find one of the strong commendations for

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. ANDREWS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from his experience no doubt states the law correctly and as I have always understood it; but I am at a loss to understand how all of these deficiencies could be incurred if that provision of the law was followed. It seems to me the law has been evaded or overlooked or not complied with.

Mr. ANDREWS. If the committee will pardon a personal reference, I could cite you to several years of fierce encounters in the department upon this proposition. For a long period of time it was the common practice of many executive branches of the Treasury Department to certify accounts after the appropriation had been exhausted. When that was called to my attention incidentally one day, I called up the whole record in that line of business. I went to the Secretary's office and called attention to the necessity of stopping the payment at that point. Then instructions were issued to the clerks in the office of the Auditor for the Treasury that whenever an appropriation had been exhausted any proposed account in excess of the appropriation should be returned to the Secretary's office or to the branch of the service whence it came with the information that the appropriation set apart by Congress had been exhausted and that there was no further authority on the part of the auditor to state an account. Then the administrative office was left to pursue its own course and assume its own responsibility. If upon its own motion and responsibility it expended more money it would have to come to Congress and make the explanation. That ruling stopped accounts of that character.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. ANDREWS. May I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. ANDREWS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HUDSPETH. According to the gentleman's statement the law has been evaded in the past. What assurance can the gentleman give at this time that this law will be observed if the law we already have upon the statute books has not been observed?

Mr. ANDREWS. The Comptroller of the Treasury Department is the officer primarily responsible for every overdraft of that character. There is no escape from that responsibility. I charge here and now that the Comptroller of the Treasury could have stopped every one of those bills if he had been disposed to do it. With an independent accounting system there will be no chance for executive pressure behind him. On the other hand, if he overreaches, Congress can call him to account and pass its concurrent resolution and dispose of him and get somebody who will obey the law.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. ANDREWS. I yield to the gentleman from South Caro-

Mr. STEVENSON. Suppose in cutting off expenditures of that kind he angers Congress. Will he not be in great danger then of having Congress put him out?

Mr. ANDREWS. Oh, well, we will have to take our chances on that, and so will he; but I venture the prediction that you will not find many men declining the appointment at $10,000 a year. He will take the risk. But the point is that this bill as we propose it now with an independent accounting system of officers in control of the audit of public accounts will be free from executive authority that in the past has pressed them over the line. That is one of the most practical features of this bill.

But before concluding my remarks I desire to refer to another rovision of the bill. The Senate bill proposes the establishprovision of the bill. The Senate bill proposes the establishment of a bureau of the budget in the Treasury under the general supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury and the specific direction of the President. The House bill proposes an independent budget bureau under the immediate supervision and direction of the President. Under the terms of the House bill the President will be required to give his personal con-sideration to the organization, direction, and work of the bureau.

It is argued by the chairman of the committee that it would be unwise to place the bureau under the Secretary of the Treasury, because of the vast amount of work imposed upon him by the Customs Service, the Internal-Revenue Service, the Public Health Service, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and all the other agencies of the Treasury Department. For those reasons it is asserted that the Secretary of the Treasury would find it impossible to give proper time and attention to the bureau of the budget. It is a frightful flight of imagination to assume, however, on the other hand, that the President has more time to superintend the work of the budget than the Secretary of the Treasury could find. It will be recalled that the Secretary of the Treasury has only one department to superintend, while the President has all the departments of Government under his supervision and then many other things beside.

I am confident that the budget bill could be administered just as efficiently under the Secretary of the Treasury, with the general direction of the President, and that it would be far more economical than it would be as an independent bureau.

For these reasons I earnestly hope that in the final decision of the conferees the Senate plan will be adopted and that the bureau will be established in the Treasury under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Blanton: Page 7, line 14, after the word "changes," strike out the language "With a view of securing greater economy" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "economy is a thing impossible with Congress."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, when the President of the United States sent word that he was going to stop deficiencies and directed that the most rigid economy be practiced, I had some hope that there would be economy. But after reading the headlines in the Washington newspapers this morning I think that we who hoped for economy may as well throw up our hands and stop working for it.

When I took up the Post this morning about the first thing I saw in big headlines was "Focht would give city $100,000,000." As soon as I saw that I said, "Bully for Focht, he is the most generous, magnanimous man I have heard of in a long time." Then I picked up the Herald and learned that it was not his own money he was going to give, but some one else's money. In the Herald it quotes our friend, Mr. Focht.

With me the sky is the limit to make Washington the greatest city in the world, and I would spend $800,000,000 to make it surpass the olden cities of the Nile, the famous metropolis of Egypt and India, and rival ancient Nineveh.

Then I discovered that the $800,000,000 was coming not out of his own pocket but out of the Public Treasury, out of the people's money. I turned back to the Post again and read more of what the gentleman said. You remember the old saying "before and after taking," and "Phillip drunk and Phillip sober"; that is what I was reminded of. Because our friend from Pennsylvania, chairman of the District Committee, when he was undined the papers quoted him as saying that there was no $5,000,000 surplus in the Treasury to the credit of the District, but that same was a myth.

But after the banquet last night and after being dined, if not wined, as reported by the Post, he says this:

The sky is the limit, so far as I am concerned. I come from Pennsylvania where we are accustomed to spend money. Representatives from Pennsylvania are not in the same position with people who come from the jack-rabbit sections of the South and some parts of the West, where there is not much money.

[Laughter.]

He says that he is used to spending money and therefore he would give the District $100,000,000 for schools and spend $800,-000,000 here in a way that would make the Babylonian king if he could rise up envious of the hanging gardens he would place in Washington. [Laughter.] But why should he jump on the jack-rabbit sections of the South and West? Why, a short time ago the people of my home city, with officers of the Christian Church, matched dollar for dollar and raised a substantial sum to build a magnificent Christian college there. Years ago the enterprising business men of my home city helped the officers of the Baptist Church raise a substantial sum of money to build a magnificent Baptist college in my home city. A few weeks ago these same citizens of my home town matched dollar for dollar with the officers of the Methodist Church, and raised the required sum of money, and they are to build a magnificent Methodist college in my home city. But it was their money that they donated, and they took it out of their own pockets. They were spending their own money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas

has expired

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection. Mr. BLANTON. He says that the Representatives from Pennsylvania are used to spending money, but that the people from the jack-rabbit sections of the South and West are not used to it, and yet less than six months ago a splendid young man from my district, Mr. C. M. Caldwell, of Breckenridge, Tex., who is younger than the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and who when he started out at 21 years of age was not worth $500, out of his own money, every dollar of which he made himself, he contributed in one lump sum $100,000 cash to a school in his district. And yet they are not used to spending money in the jack-rabbit sections! [Laughter.] Why, you could take the whole State of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who is willing to spend $800,000,000 of the people's money from the Public Treasury so readily and easily, with the blue sky as his limit, you could take his great State and hide it in the great jumbo district of Texas, which I used to represent, but which is now represented by my friend from Texas, Mr. Hudspeth. [Laughter.] Oh, they are big-hearted people who live out there. But they spend their own money. There may be jack rabbits there, but listen; these jack rabbits are not bad at all; there are other animals over the country, even in Pennsylvania, where they raise some almost as long eared as these jack rabbits. [Laughter.] I will tell you, gentlemen, why he is used to spending money so freely. Now, he is my friend, and I like him. I am glad to serve under him on the committee. He presides over it with great dignity, but I will tell you he has been sucking the public teat in public office for 19 long years. It is public money that he has been spending and not his own private We fellows from the jack-rabbit districts of the South and West are used to spending our own money freely and generously, but when we spend the people's money out of the Public Treasury we are very careful about it. We do not handle it in $800,000,000 lots. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 302. There shall be in the general accounting office a comptroller general of the United States and an assistant comptroller general of the United States, who shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive salaries of $10,000 and $7,500 a year, respectively. The assistant comptroller general shall perform such duties as may be assigned to him by the comptroller general, and during the absence or incapacity of the comptroller general, or during a vacancy in that office, shall act as comptroller general.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk called the attention of the Chair to the fact that there is an obvious error in line 24 on page 10. The language reads "with the advice and consent to the Senate." Evidently the word "to" should be "of."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the word "to" be stricken out and the word "of" be inserted in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 303. The comptroller general and the assistant comptroller general shall hold office during good behavior, but may be removed at any time by concurrent resolution of Congress after notice and hearing when, in their judgment, the comptroller general or assistant comptroller general has been inefficient, or guilty of neglect of duty, or of malfeasance in office, or of any felony or conduct involving moral turpitude, and for no other cause and in no other manner except by impeachment. Any comptroller general or assistant comptroller general removed in the manner herein provided shall be ineligible for reappointment to that office. When a comptroller general or assistant comptroller general attains the age of 70 years he shall be retired from his office.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Johnson of Mississippi: Page 11, live 6, after the word "office." strike out "during good behavior" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "for seven years."

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, every student of political economy and every business man of this country realizes the need of a budget system by this Government. The waste and extravagance practiced in the past has shocked the country. I am anxious to see a budget system adopted by this Government, but I am unwilling to violate the spirit of this Republic and the spirit of these times by creating an office carrying a salary of $10,000 a year and giving life tenure to the officer. That is what this bill provides among other things. My amendment proposes to strike out "during good behavior," which means a life tenure for the officer, and insert in lieu thereof "seven years."

When this Government was established and our Constitution adopted, the makers of the Constitution provided that the Federal judges should hold office during good behavior. reading of the history of the Constitution will disclose the fact that such a provision was incorporated by agreement. The real sentiment of the convention was against giving any man office for life, but in order to bring about the adoption of other provisions of the Constitution, the opponents of the life tenure for Federal judges agreed to accept, by way of compromise, the provision which made the Federal judges appointive during good behavior. Never since then has the Congress of the United States given life tenure to any officers.

It has been argued that unless we make this office appointive for life, or during good behavior, that the officer will be subject to undue influence—that he will not do his duty. My answer to that is if a man is dishonest, life tenure in office will not make him honest. If he will not do his duty holding office for seven years, he will not do his duty if he is allowed to hold office for Under the provision of my amendment, the appointee to the office you are about to create will hold all during this administration and three years of the next administration, which would give the administration succeeding this administration opportunity to learn of the efficiency of the occupant of

We, as the servants of the people of this country, should voice their sentiments in passing upon this important question. You know that there is not a man in this House whose constituency would approve the creation of an office that would allow any man to hold it for life. Let us vote the will of the people. Let us adhere to the teachings of that great leader of Democracy, Thomas Jefferson, who did not believe in special privileges and who was unalterably opposed to life tenure for officers.

I trust you Congressmen will have the courage to vote your sentiments and the sentiments of your constituents, and ignore the party bosses. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, this provision as carried in the bill is the same provision carried in the bill vetoed by the President. Although the last Congress was Republican in political complexion it brought out a bill that permitted the President of the United States, who was then of the opposite political faith, to appoint this official, and he would have been appointed for life. Every man who came before the committee pointed to the fact that this office is a semijudicial one, that to execute it well would require a man who was familiar with the laws of the United States, familiar with the decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury, and a man who had an intimate knowledge to some extent of the accounting in the departments. Simply because there has been a change in the political complexion of the Executive seems to be no good reason to change the situation with respect to this office.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. In a moment. I am afraid that the gentleman's amendment would very seriously hamper efficient execution of Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I want to say to the gentleman that I voted against this bill for the reason that I have given for voting against it to-day. If this provision stays in the bill, I am opposed to it, whether it be advocated by a Democratic or a Republican House. This is a matter that ought not to be political or partisan.

Mr. GOOD. I agree with the gentleman, and for that reason we believe that the office is something like that of a judge of a Federal court. In order to attract a man to take this office, we must hold out something more than a tenure of office of four or seven years and then retirement.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. We have heard a great deal about the benefits that are to accrue from this bill and the economy to be effected. Has the gentleman from Iowa ever heard anything against the present Comptroller of the Treasury on the ground that he had paid claims that ought not to be paid? Has not all of the complaint been that he failed to pay claims that somebody thinks ought to be paid?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know about the complaints that have been made about him. I think he has been a very efficient man. I think under the present law you could not find a man who would have executed that office more strictly than he has. think, however, if you will go to the present Comptroller of the Treasury and ask him whether or not under the present system embarrassments do not come to him right along, that he will be forced to admit that that is true; that the system is wrong; and I say that without reflection upon anybody who has ever held the office.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is it not a fact that if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi be adopted it would defeat the very thing that he is trying to accomplish?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Why?

Mr. KNUTSON. The amendment would throw the office into politics rather than to take it out of politics.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I provide tenure of office which takes it over the present administration.

Mr. KNUTSON. Whereas if we keep him in during good behavior

Mr. GOOD. The framers of the bill, I think, without a single exception were convinced that the assistant comptroller would grow into the position of comptroller when the latter retired. The office would then be filled by a man who would know the statutes and who is familiar with the very numerous decisions under them. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in favor of this amendment. You have a bill here that will give general Mr. Chairman, I am very much in favor of satisfaction throughout the country with one single exception, this section. Why is it now, for the first time since the adoption of the Constitution, that anybody has the nerve, I will say, to propose a perpetual office? It has never been done before in any Congress, and now you have reached the point when the American people will not stand for it. It is well known that every organization in the United States that ever questioned the matter is unanimously opposed to perpetual office, they are against life office. Even life tenure for members of the Supreme Court would not be adopted if the people could vote on it to-day, and you know it.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. NORTON. I can not now; my time is too limited. If it had not been for Jeffrey, it would never have gone into our Constitution, but it went in for the reason that the people wanted to make the judiciary independent. They were afraid of Jeffrey. I want to say to you gentlemen the time has not come for a change. A few people appeared before this committee and said so, but I have no hesitancy in saying at least 19 men out of 20, and I believe 99 out of 100, if they had a chance to vote on this, would vote no. The people of the country are against perpetual office, and everybody knows it. Why, every labor union and every other class of people are opposed to it all over the country. I tell you people from the country you do not hear from them, but I want to say to you they are unanimously against it. You can not find a man from the city who is in favor of it, or among the general class, nor laboring men, and even the farmers are opposed to these things. Gentlemen, the time has not come for this kind of legislation. You are all anxious to get your name in the Record under extension of remarks. I will ask what man under extension of remarks will put in his speech the fact that he is for perpetual office in the United States? You are all getting in on the budget system. You all want to be economical, and you speak five minutes and get a speech a half an hour long in the RECORD and send them out by the hundreds and thousands. That is the economical part of it. I want to say to you gentlemen not a single man extending his remarks will ever do such a thing as to say that he is for perpetual office in the United States.

The people even went so far as to change the election of Senators so that even the legislatures could not elect them. state you want to fix the responsibility on the President, and for that reason you substituted this bill as a substitute for the Senate bill. It was right and proper. Somebody should be responsible, and the man who should be responsible is the President of the United States and the substitution of the bill was right. But it is not right to say that somebody shall hold this office eternally. The time has not come for it, and I want to say to the gentlemen on the other side of the House, if they did not know that this is going to be Republican legislation they would take the same position that their President took and say, "We will not make any office perpetual." They know the Republicans are going to be responsible for this legislation. They know that they have got to go to the public with it and have to be responsible for it, hence they can all vote for it now; but I want to say to you one and all, you men who are Republicans, everybody on this side of the House, you have come here with a bill that the people want, a budget system, and every-body is in favor of it, yet with that one paragraph you have done more to kill the bill and make it the worst legislation that can possibly be passed by this Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask the chairman of the committee a question, if he will be so kind. The life tenure proposition in this bill would not worry me any if we could be sure of getting the right sort of man to execute this office. It occurred to me there might be some danger if we were unfortunate enough to have a man in office under a life-tenure provision who was not quite equal to the job. It might be difficult to get rid of such a man. I suppose that has been carefully considered?

Mr. GOOD. It has. I will say to the gentleman that that was one of the things we considered perhaps as much as any one proposition in the bill. Now, it is not a life tenure. He can not hold office after reaching the age of 70 years. He can not hold office a moment after Congress has by concurrent resolution determined that he has been inefficient or guilty of neglect of duty, or of malfeasance in office, or of any felony or conduct involving moral turpitude. This officer is to be the arm of the Congress. When he fails to do that work in a strong and efficient-way, in a way the Congress would have the law executed, Congress has its remedy, and it can reach out and say that if the man is not doing his duty, if he is inefficient or guilty of any of these other things, he can be removed.

Mr. HUSTED. I realize that, but you have to make out a pretty good case against the man in order to get rid of him. This has occurred to me. Suppose some man was developed in the country with peculiar qualifications for this kind of work and we would like to avail ourselves of his services because he possessed special fitness for it. I wondered if under this life-tenure provision it would not be very difficult to get rid of the man we had in this department unless he demonstrated decided

Mr. GOOD. On the contrary, I think the man who executes this office will at all times have to demonstrate considerable fitness for the job. Suppose you have the office for seven

Mr. HUSTED. I was not speaking of the 7-year provision. Mr. GOOD. Take the alternative. Suppose the man who is appointed is unfit for the work altogether. Are you going to hold him there for seven years? Not at all. He ought not to be permitted to stay there at all, but if you put in a term, what will happen?

The Presidents would always treat the place as a political appointment, and that is exactly what we try to get around. It ought not to be considered a political place at all.

Mr. HUSTED. I quite agree with that. Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recog-

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I voted for this bill in the Sixty-sixth Congress, and it contained identically the same provision as does this one. I was willing that President Wilson should appoint the comptroller general, as I am willing that President Harding shall do now. I believe the committee in drafting this bill was actuated by a desire to remove this office from politics; but if the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Johnson] is adopted, we are going to throw it into politics and you can not get away from it. The gentleman says that no man should hold this position for more than seven years. It will take him four years to familiarize himself with

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. If it will take him four years to become competent, where will this Government be in four

Mr. KNUTSON. I mean to thoroughly familiarize himself with the duties of this office. I am not speaking of competency, but of his becoming thoroughly familiar and knowing exactly what to do.

Now, take the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. Shields. He holds over, no difference whether the Democrats are in control or the Republicans. Why? Because he is efficient and knows his business. [Applause.] We have taken the clerk of the Appropriations Committee out of politics, and why should we not keep this position out of politics? There is no justification at all for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi. The adoption of the amendment will defeat the very thing that the gentleman is trying to avoid. Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. For a question.
Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The gentleman compares the Appropriations Committee clerk to this place. Does not the gentleman know that the Appropriations Committee clerk can be removed by a word from the chairman? Mr. KNUTSON. Absolutely. I am aware of that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Then you do not think that is an analogous case, do you?

Mr. KNUTSON. Very much so.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield for a question?

Mr. KNUTSON. I think it is very similar. Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield if the gentleman wishes to ask a

Mr. BLANTON. If the amendment of the gentleman should be adopted, why, the seven-year period would expire when the President would be out of office; and, according to the gentleman's idea, he would reappoint-

Mr. KNUTSON. Seven years from now Mr. Harding will be President, and he doubtless would reappoint the same gentle-

Mr. BLANTON. I say he would reappoint him for another seven years. Then, why should the gentleman object to seven years?

Mr. KNUTSON. He may appoint him for another 7 years, and in 14 years there might be a Democratic President, although I do not apprehend we will have a Democratic President for 50

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the statement, as I am sure we all agree, that the comptroller general should not be a political office. I do not think the proposed comptroller general should be any more of a political office than membership on the Federal Reserve Board should be a political office. Both classes of officials have very important duties to perform, which are strictly nonpolitical, and they should be entirely removed from politics. But while that is true, we have not given the members of the Federal Reserve Board a life tenure in We have limited their term to 10 years, and I am not sure but that a term of 7 years would be better. There is now a bill before the Banking and Currency Committee which seeks to lengthen the term to 12 years. As a member of that committee, I do not mind saying that I am irrevocably opposed to the lengthening of the terms of office of the members of the Federal Reserve Board. I think these strictly nonpolitical officials should be appointed for a reasonably long term of office, but I do not think the term should be so long as to practically amount to a life tenure.

Now, suppose we adopt this bill as now written? We say that the comptroller general shall hold office during good behavior, and that he can be removed only in one way, and then only for certain specified causes. The way is by a concurrent resolution of Congress

Now, we very well know that frequently the Senate has one mind about a thing and the House of Representatives has another mind about the same thing. Now, suppose after the comptroller general gets in office, and after he has served a while, the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives should become convinced that he is inefficient and would like to remove him; suppose the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate thinks that he is doing good work and is efficient and opposes removing him, how will you get rid of him? Looks to me like in a situation of that kind he would be a permanent fixture.

Mr. LONDON. Does it not lie within the power of Congress to deny an appropriation for the salary of a man at any time? Mr. BLACK. Yes. The gentleman from New York is right about that; but we do not want to adopt that method of dealing with the situation. A resignation could probably be forced in the manner that Mr. London suggests. But a better way is to have a term of office reasonably limited, and then if the official proves to be competent and efficient reappoint him. In my judgment, a man who is afraid to do his duty because he is afraid of public opinion or political influence would be just about as afraid of that influence in a permanent tenure of office as he is in an elective tenure of office. In other words, if a man has the backbone to make a good official, he will make it regardless of public opinion or political influence. If he has not got it, he will not do much good, regardless of how long you keep him in office.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is a serious departure for us to undertake to create offices to hold during good behavior, even in unusual cases, such as we are now considering.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to my good friend.
Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Would not the fact that this officer holds his tenure practically at the will of Congress make him susceptible to the very influences which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] says he is susceptible to now, and that Members of Congress would be pleading with him to pay claims that he would not otherwise pay? Would he not do things and accede to them because he knew that Congress could remove him whenever it wanted to?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; he would do that very thing, in all probability, if he should turn out to be a man susceptible to political influences; but as a further answer to that inquiry, I will repeat just what I said a little while ago: My belief is that if a man is an honest official, if he is an official with backbone, he will do his duty regardless of the length of his term of office, and he will not need life tenure to bolster him up in doing it; and if he is not that kind of material he will make a failure, and under the terms of this bill might be very hard to get rid Therefore I will vote for the amendment by Mr. Johnson limiting the term of office of the comptroller general to seven years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am as much opposed to life tenure in office as any man in this House, and I do not think there is any other position which could be created. certainly none that I now can think of, for which I would vote for a term of office such as is provided in this bill.

Let me emphasize the fact that this is not a life tenure. Under the terms of this bill the comptroller general is appointed to serve during good behavior unless he is removed by concurrent resolution of Congress, after notice and hearing, for inefficiency or neglect of duty or malfeasance in office or any felony or conduct involving moral turpitude, so that it is not, strictly speaking, a life tenure.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Black] says that we do not give the members of the Federal Reserve Board a life tenure of office. That is true, and I agree with him. I am not in favor of increasing their term of office. But this is an entirely different proposition, and I hope gentlemen will distinguish this particular office from that of the director of the budget, who serves the President and who is the personal representative of the President. The comptroller general is the representative of Congress. He does not represent the Executive in any sense of the word, and the whole idea of the Budget Committee was to make him absolutely and completely independent of the Executive, [Applause.] The idea was to make him independent of the appointing power of any Executive who may hereafter follow

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I have a question I wish to ask the gentleman, The question I propose to ask is, Would this be very different from the removal of a Federal judge?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Of course, this official, even under the terms of this act, would be subject to impeachment. But that is another process, and we felt that this man should be brought under the sele control of Congress, so that Congress at any moment when it found he was inefficient and was not carrying on the duties of his office as he should and as the Congress expected, could remove him without the long, tedious process of a trial by impeachment.

Mr. CLOUSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.
Mr. CLOUSE. The gentleman being a member of this committee, I would like to ask him whether or not the language used in this act which relates to the removal of this officer means that he can be removed only by a concurrent resolution of Congress for certain acts of misconduct involving moral turpitude, or for malfeasance in office, or inefficiency, and for no other cause, and in no other manner except by impeachment? Should the House and Senate fail to agree in his removal, would any of the causes enumerated here as sufficient grounds for Congress to remove him be available under an impeachment proceeding?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. I think clearly they would be, if in the judgment of the Senate it felt that the evidence presented by the House was sufficient to remove him by way of impeachment. In other words, I do not think the Senate would be estopped in event of impeachment proceedings.

Mr. CLOUSE. That is, if the House should not concur with the Senate, the Senate would nevertheless have the power to impeach him, and for the same reason that the House advanced?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The House, of course, would have to originate the impeachment proceedings and present them to the Senate, and then it would rest with the Senate whether or not he should be removed, just as in the case of any other impeachment trial.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for brief question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. ANDREWS. If I understand the gentleman's contention correctly, it is this: That the removal by the concurrent resolution is by no means intended to destroy the power of impeachment?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. By no means. But it gives a quicker and less expensive method to get rid of an inefficient servant if the comptroller general should prove inefficient or be guilty of malfeasance or other acts justifying his removal.

Now, the comptroller general, under the terms of this bill, does not expend appropriations, as was suggested by a colleague a few minutes ago. He has absolutely nothing to do with the expenditure of the appropriations made by Congress. He audits the expenditures. He acts as the auditor for Congress, to see that the appropriations made have been expended properly and honestly and in accordance with the intent of Congress as expressed in the appropriating act.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes, Mr. ANDREWS. At that point would not the comptroller general be necessarily, as the head of an administrative establishment, the administrative officer for the payment of the officials in his establishment?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; the gentleman is entirely correct in that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, whenever you undertake to limit the term of the comptroller general as suggested and to provide that he shall have to be reappointed by the President in seven years, you do that which the committee hoped would not be done. You deprive him of independence and make him subject, to some extent at least, to influence on the part of the Executive. In other words, if he knows that he has got to come to the Executive for his reappointment there will necessarily arise in his mind the necessity of not "getting in bad," so to speak, with these departments, and his usefulness may be impaired. The committee hoped to make him independent of that sort of influence, so that when he came to audit the expenses he would be free in the fullest sense to audit them in accordance with the intent and purpose of Congress, and would know that in this way he would guarantee his tenure in office for the time stated in this bill. That was the whole object that the committee had in mind, and I hope the House will vote down this amendment,

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. KNUTSON. The object of the committee was to so fix the law that it would not be necessary for the comptroller general to cater to the executive departments?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; the gentleman has stated it in a nutshell. It was to take this office out of politics. You will not take it out of politics, you will not protect him from political influence, unless you adopt the provisions in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. CANNON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recog-

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, efficiency in important places is and ought to be a reason for permanency of service. I doubt if we would ever be called upon to pass a concurrent resolution where a man was efficient. I want to detain the House for just a few minutes. When John D. C. Atkins was made chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in 1878, we then had an A 1 efficient clerk to that committee, who had held the position for nearly 20 years. He was aging, and Mr. Atkins brought from the State of Tennessee a young man by the name of Courts and made him assistant clerk, or rather the committee made him assistant clerk at the request of Mr. Atkins. In the course of time the old clerk died and Mr. Courts was appointed his successor, and he was so efficient and satisfactory that although the majority in Congress changed from one side to the other every few years, he remained the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations for many years, until he finally died in office. I will not mention any name, but in 1880 a man became chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and he brought down a man and wanted to appoint him as clerk to the committee. I antagonized his appointment. I had no objection to his being assistant, but I objected to his appointment as clerk, because I knew of the efficiency of James C. Courts. made the contest that we would elect the clerk. Although he was a Democrat, we did elect him by a majority. Later on in his life, when Mr. Courts's health was beginning to fail, Mr. Tawney brought down a young man from Minnesota and appointed him assistant, and on the death of Mr. Courts he was appointed clerk; and I want to say that there never was a more valuable clerk or a more valuable public official than the present clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. Marcellus C. Sheild. Since that time the Democrats have come in and gone out, but if then or at any other time any man had proposed a new name for clerk of that committee he would not have had any success. At one time William S. Holman brought here a young man and appointed him assistant clerk, when he was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. In the fullness of time the Senate needed an assistant to the efficient clerk who had been there for a quarter of a century, and when he died the assistant who had been taken from the House committee, Mr. Kennedy F. Rea, was appointed clerk of the Senate Committee on Appropriations. He is there to-day, and his efficiency is so well known and well recognized that no matter whether the Senate is controlled by Democrats or Republicans, he will retain that clerkship as long as he remains efficient, which I hope may be for a very long time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. In a moment I will yield. I recollect that once during an exciting session of the House a gentleman whose name I will not recall obtained the floor late one night and made an attack upon myself. He said the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations had made the reputation of every chairman of that committee, whether he was a Democrat or a Republican, and I just replied in a single sentence and said, "That is so. The clerk is efficient. I wish to God somebody would hire an equally efficient clerk for the gentleman who has just made the attack on me." [Laughter.] Now, I believe that a man who becomes efficient in a place like this ought to have a long tenure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. CANNON. I want to say that seven years is too long for an inefficient man and is not long enough for a man to remain in office who is efficient to start with. A man would have to be fairly efficient to start with before he could hold this position, and whatever party may be in power in Congress, if the comptroller has proved his efficiency by his service, there will be no necessity for a concurrent resolution; but if from disease or otherwise he becomes inefficient, the removal will be made and we will get an efficient man. Now I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The gentleman has stated practically what I wanted to ask him, but does he not recall that the Ways and Means Committee has retained a Democrat as clerk, at a salary of $6,000 a year, because of his efficiency?

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Now, does the gentleman think it is necessary to appoint a man for life or during good behavior in order to get an efficient man, and keep him after you get him? I have great respect for the gentleman's opinion, and that is the reason I ask the question.

Mr. CANNON. There are times when the American people might demand the removal of some man holding this position, but I doubt if he would be removed by concurrent resolution, provided he had made good.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Who is to say whether he has made good or not? If this House should decide that they wanted him removed he would be removed. There is no doubt about that. The Constitution provides for impeachment and that the Senate shall try the impeachment charges. The House might vote impeachment, to be tried by the Senate, or they might pass a concurrent resolution. Suppose the Senate should not agree to the concurrent resolution, or suppose the Senate should want to put him out and the House did not? In such a The House would not pass case the Senate would be helpless. the concurrent resolution, and the House would not pass the resolution of impeachment.

Mr. CANNON. There have been many Federal judges impeached by the House, but rarely has a conviction been had in the Senate. It takes a long time to try a man in impeachment, with the Chief Justice presiding. The passage of a concurrent resolution by the House and Senate is a more speedy remedy to get rid of an incompetent or inefficient man, whether he becomes inefficient through age or otherwise. [Applause.]

Mr. DENISON rose and was recognized.

Mr. GOOD. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the debate on this amendment close in five minutes. Is there objec-

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment, and am in favor of this part of the bill as reported by the committee. I think it as desirable that we have an independent comptroller general as it is that we have one who is honest and competent. If we are to have an independent comptroller general, it seems to me it is necessary to let him hold his office during good behavior and be entirely independent of the political prejudices of anyone.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON], in speaking a while ago on this proposition, made the statement that there was no one in the House who would be willing to state here that he is in favor of life tenure for any official at this time. He also made the statement that if the Constitution of the United States were to be rewritten no one would now favor the provision for life tenure of judges. also made the statement, I think, that that provision of the Constitution was long since out of date. For fear that some one might take that statement of the gentleman from Ohio seriously and that if no one replied to it it might be taken as an acquiescence in the accuracy of his statement, I want to say, for one, that I believe one of the soundest provisions of the United States Constitution is that of life tenure for Federal [Applause.] And if the Constitution were to be rewritten to-day I think it should be written in that particular just as it has always been. I think if the Republic is to be preserved there is no provision in the Constitution that will contribute more to insuring its preservation than the provision for an independent judiciary whose tenure of office is during their good behavior. [Applause.]

But there is one provision in this part of the bill about which I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Section 303 provides that the comptroller general may be removed at any time by concurrent resolution of Congress, and so forth, when he has been inefficient or guilty of neglect or malfeasance in office. I have been wondering whether or not if the one who is appointed comptroller general for life or during good behavior should become incapacitated from performing his duties properly by reason of ill health-whether that would be included in the term "inefficient." I think there ought to be some provision for removing him where he has become unable to perform the duties of his office by reason of ill health. He ought not to be allowed to continue to hold the office and draw the large salary if he should become permanently incapable of performing the duties of the office by reason of ill health. Would the word "inefficient" cover a case of that kind?

Mr. GOOD. It was the opinion of the committee that it would; that in case he could not perform the duties of his office in an efficient way, whether by ill health or lack of ability or anything amounting to inefficiency in the performance of his duty-in our opinion that would embrace the situation.

Mr. DENISON. I am glad to know that the committee gave consideration to that, but it seems to me the most efficient man that could be found might be in ill health and unable to go on properly with his duties, even though his mental efficiency was unimpaired.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Do you not want the word "incapacitated" added to the word "inefficient"?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; I think it should be.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. They are words of dissimilar meaning. He might be incapacitated and yet efficient, or he might be efficient and yet incapacitated.

Mr. DENISON. That is what I had in mind. I can conceive of a man, efficient in the public service, becoming incapacitated and yet not becoming inefficient.

Mr. GOOD. As far as I am personally concerned, I would not object to an amendment putting in the words "permanently incapacitated."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 6, after the word "office," strike out the words "during good behavior" and insert "for seven years."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment. The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Johnson of Mississippi) there were—yeas 35, nays 83.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill on page 11, line 10, by inserting after the word "has" the following words: "become permanently incapacitated or has."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DENISON: Page 11, line 10, after the word "has," insert the words "become permanently incapacitated or has."

The CHAIRMAN. 'The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the entire section 303

Mr PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I have a preferential amendment to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 11, lines 7 and 8, strike out the words "by concurrent resolution of Congress after notice and hearing when in their" and insert in lieu thereof the words "by the President after notice and hearing when in his."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I am thoroughly in sympathy with all the purposes of the committee, and with their purpose to appoint an officer during good behavior who is really a judge. They propose to get rid of the difficulties and delay of impeachment by allowing removal by a concurrent resolution. I have had my experience with impeachments both here and in the State legislature. The delay is such and the difficulty of hearing is such that it is almost impossible to get action.

But I want to point out to the committee that a concurrent resolution of both Houses of Congress after hearing is still more tedious, and involves still more delay, because there are no means provided by law by which a hearing can be had except a hearing in each House. Not only may the two Houses disagree, but such a hearing would be interminable. The time could not be given by this House and by the Senate for two hearings. There is no provision without a new law for having the hearings had anywhere else. Congress would first have to pass a resolution for a hearing to be heard before a committee and print the case, and the officer would not have a fair hearing because every Member would not study the case.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. In a moment. My proposition is that the removal shall only be for cause and after hearing, but that the responsibility for that removal shall be put upon the President instead of attempting a concurrent resolution of Congress. I believe we can trust our Presidents. If they are told they shall only remove after hearing for cause, being permanently incapacitated, inefficient, or guilty of malfeasance in office sufficient for removal, I think we can trust our Presidents, and we can get a decision. Under the present arrangement you would never get a decision if the Houses disagreed in politics, and you would not get it for a long time if they did, because there is no machinery provided by law by which hearing can be had. The President may, and he does now under the civil-service rules, remove after hearing. He provides how the hearing shall be held. In a great office like this it would be a formal hearing. He would see to it that there was a real hearing, because he can only remove for these causes, but let us have somebody with responsibility in this matter and not leave it to a concurrent resolution without any machinery except to have a hearing in each House, and therefore a double impeachment.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.
Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman says that we can always trust our Presidents. Can the gentleman assure the House that we will always have a President who will not play politics?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I can assure the House that when the President is given the responsibility of acting as a judge at the hearing, we can trust him, and you can get some sort of prompt action. You will never get any prompt action from a concurrent resolution.

Mr. KNUTSON. May I ask the gentleman where he has been during the last eight years.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I have been under the President of the United States, of whatever politics, and I never fail in that respect. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes. Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman realizes that if Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman realizes that if there is one great issue that distinguishes the politics of the English-speaking people for centuries it has been the struggle for the Commons to get control of the purse, to take it away from the Executive and have absolute authority over it. Does the gentleman not think that this legislation is exactly in line and spirit with the philosophy of that centuries-old struggle, that the Commons shall control the purse, that there shall be no intermediary of the Executive who can prevent their control of it or who by some intervention may prejudice their administration of it?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, my answer to that question is this: I will trust the President. If we can not do that, then appoint some court, some means, by which you have a reasonable court to determine these questions of inefficiency, and do not leave it to be done by a concurrent resolution.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] attempts to write into the law the very thing that we are trying to prevent. If we would avoid any legislation on the independent budget and leave it as it is, we would still have a better degree of independence than we would have if we were to adopt the gentleman's amendment. In other words, this amendment makes it worse than it is now without any change of law whatsoever. It seems to me that everyone is convinced that the independent audit is probably It seems to me that the most decisive demand that we have in budgetary legislation. I think all will agree that this departure is the real improvement in this legislation. I know how Members of the House feel about life tenure. I am quite aware that they prefer not to favor that, but as has been said this is not life tenure, technically, but whether it is or not, this is a peculiarly important item, expressive of the duty of an officer in administration. The genius of American political life is short terms and quick responsibility in all matters that are policy determining. That is fundamental in legislation—short terms and quick responsibility. This is not policy determining, it is not a function of that sort whatever. This is in a sense administrative. An administrative officer does not deal with the determination of For that reason we care not so much for the short term and the quick responsibility in a purely administrative function. But this is not even purely administrative. While it has an element of the judicial in it, the comptroller here is simply to be a guard or a check on authority that might be above him, to influence him to make a decision to permit an outlay of the Treasury which if he were independent he would not permit. In that sense it is not even administrative; it is simply a check upon what otherwise would be administrative, and it strikes me that the independent budget here demands that the tenure of office be not contingent upon the caprice of some higher officer; in fact, dependent only upon his conduct, upon his good behavior.

If there is anything that we want to do, it is to take this man from under the influence of the executive, who is the spending department of the Government, and put him under the legislative, which is the authorizing department of the Government, Otherwise there is no independence at all.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I have not objected to the legislation, if it could be worked out, but can the gentleman suggest any means that will be at all practical which will work, short of a joint resolution, after hearing of both Houses?

Mr. FESS. I think that what the distinguished ex-Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon], said a moment ago will apply generally here. This is a position of great responsibility, and the man who holds the office has within his grasp the permitting or the refusing of a claim, and carries with it as much power as any other man in the machinery of gov-There is not much danger of his going wrong when he has such a sense of responsibility upon him, but if he should go wrong, then the quick way to get rid of him will be by concurrent resolution of the House and Senate. There is no danger, as I see it, in the bill as written, and I think the amendment should be defeated.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. There having been debate, the motion is in order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Norron] rose to make a motion to strike out the entire section 203. That motion is now in order.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, before that motion is put I have an amendment which I desire to offer, which is to perfect the section, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Stevenson: Line 8, page 11, insert, after the word "Congress," the words "passed by a two-thirds vote."

Mr. FESS. Oh, no; that would make it still harder.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, do I understand debate has been closed on this whole section?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in doubt, but the Chair understood the gentleman from Iowa to move that debate be closed on the amendment.

Mr. GOOD. On the section and all amendments to it. But I have no desire unduly to curtail debate.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, in order that there may be no difficulty, I ask unanimous consent to discuss my amendment for five minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the question determined by the committee was that debate on this paragraph and all amendments be closed. And I make the point of order that there is no further time for debate.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask unanimous consent for five min-

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I presume it was the intention of the gentleman from Iowa to move that debate on the section and all amendments thereto close, but, if I heard the motion correctly, the gentleman did not make that motion. He made the motion that debate on the section close, but did not include the words "and all amendments thereto." What the effect of that is I do not know, but that is the motion which the gentleman made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Reporter states that the motion was on the whole section and all amendments thereto.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of order, and I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Carolina be permitted to debate his amendment for five minutes, and my colleague from Ohio [Mr. Norron] be permitted five minutes to debate his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, you have heard the request that the gentleman from South Carolina be allowed five minutes and the gentleman from Ohio also be allowed five minutes for the discussion of amendments. Is there objection?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Reserving the right to object, will there be some allowance of time in opposition to either amendment or only the affirmative of each amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, that question must be met when it arises. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, we are establishing a new procedure here, a new procedure in congressional action. not, however, new in a great many of the States. In the State of South Carolina in 1828 an amendment to the constitution was adopted providing for the removal of judges in the courts of South Carolina on an address after a hearing, almost in the language of this, by the legislature. But it was limited there that the hearing must be had and the vote must be by a two-thirds majority. That has worked very well for nearly 100 years. Once or twice it was invoked. Once it was invoked in a case of great passion in the State that arose through some passionate political passages before 1860, and the provision for two-thirds prevented the removal of a very distinguished judge who was conceded by everybody afterwards not to have been deserving of any such procedure at all. In other words, you are providing here for the removal of an officer, who is charged with official duties, who is charged with duties that will run him counter to the demand and wishes of a great many of the con-stituents of Members of Congress, and the time might arise when he might conceive it to be his duty to do that which would raise a storm of anger in the House of Representatives and sweep away a great many men and cause him to be removed unjustly, whereas if you put the bridle on and say they must have two-thirds vote you are not liable to stampede two-thirds of the House of Representatives or two-thirds of the Senate. I think you had better go carefully about your new method here of removal of an officer of such power and the unpopularity which this officer is going to have. I think we ought to provide in a conservative way for an official determination of whether he is right or whether he is wrong in his decision. That is all I desire to say about it. You are adopting a precedent here which will probably run very smoothly for awhile, but in some time of national paroxysm, in some time of great national excitement, when you need to have the brakes on, you are going to have the brakes off, and the best officer you have in this position will be likely to be humiliated, not because of any wrong he has done but because he has done his duty.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, a gentleman rose and took exception to the remark I made that I did not think the people at the present time would be in favor of establishing judges for life and said he himself would be. Let us recall since our Con-stitution has been adopted there have been many constitutions adopted in the United States in the individual States, but have we one favoring life judges? If the people favored life judges, why did not they put it in their constitutions? Why do not we amend our constitutions to-day by calling constitutional conventions? Why, you never hear men say, "we will establish ventions? Why, you never hear men say, "we will establish judges for life." It is not done, and will not be done, because if you gentlemen go home to your people and talk to them about life judges or life officers not a man will say that they want it as in this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. NORTON. In a moment. The gentleman from Ohio said that this was an official office, partly judicial, partly executive, and this the greatest of all offices; I do not pretend to say that is the exact language. Here you are establishing a man in office with more power than any other man outside of the President, even more than a member of his Cabinet, and that man has in his power the control of the expenditures after they have once been appropriated.

You are putting something into that bill that will make it impossible for you to go home to your constituents and say that you are not in favor of a life job. You say it does not create it.
What did the chairman of the committee say? When asked the question he said that the concurrent resolution mean, the same as a joint resolution, to be passed both by the House and the Senate, and then requiring the signature of the President. How many times in our history have men been removed by requiring these things to be done? It never has been done in the past, and the time will never come when you can remove any man from office that has once been appointed for life.

How often are judges impeached in the United States? How many of you know of occasions where they should be impeached? Talk about having a man impeached! They may have had hearings, but he was not impeached. You can not impeach a man, and you know it. This joint resolution means the same as impeachment, and you are creating an office here for life. Two or three years ago you heard a man who was President talking about making the world safe for democracy, and yet you gentlemen now want to go back to royalty. I say to you, gentlemen on the other side, that you are going square back on the principles of your party, from the first organization of the party, in which it said the power should remain in the people. And you know, as I said in the first place, you are doing it for the only reason that the Republican Party will be responsible for this legislation. You go to the men in the cities and towns and in the country and read them that, and how can you explain it to them, this joint resolution passed by the House of Representatives and the Senate and then to be signed by the President? The impeachment proceedings would mean perpetual retention in office. Gentlemen, you can not afford to do it. No Republican can afford to stand on the Republican platform and favor such an appointment. It never has been done since the adoption of the Constitution. [Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Stevenson], which the Clerk will report.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Norton] offered an amendment to strike out section 303. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 304. All powers and duties now conferred or imposed by law upon the Comptroller of the Treasury or the six auditors of the Treasury Department, and the duties of the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants of the office of the Secretary of the Treasury relating to keeping the personal ledger accounts of disbursing and collecting officers, shall, so far as not inconsistent with this act, be vested in and imposed upon the general accounting office and be exercised without direction from any other officer. The balances certified by the comptroller general shall be final and conclusive upon the executive branch of the Government. The revision by the comptroller general of settlements made by the six auditors shall be discontinued, except as to settlements made before July 1, 1821.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Good: On page 12, after line 7, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"The administrative examination of the accounts and vouchers of the Postal Service now imposed by law upon the Auditor for the Post Office Department shall be performed on and after July 1, 1921, by a bureau in the Post Office Department to be known as the bureau of accounts, which is hereby established for that purpose. The bureau shall be under the direction of a comptroller, who shall be nominated by the President and appointed by him, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year. The comptroller shall perform the administrative duties now performed by the Auditor for the Post Office Department and such other duties in relation thereto as the Postmaster General may direct. The appropriation of $5,000 for the salary of the Auditor for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year 1922 is transferred and made available for the salary of the comptroller, bureau of accounts, Post Office Department. The officers and employees of the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department engaged in the administrative examination of accounts shall become officers and employees of the bureau of accounts at their grades and salaries on July 1, 1921. The appropriations for salaries and for contingent and miscellaneous expenses and tabulating equipment for such office for the fiscal year 1922, and all books, records, documents, papers, furniture, office equipment, and other property shall be apportioned between, transferred to, and made available for the bureau of accounts and the general accounting office, respectively, on the basis of duties transferred."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of Mr. BLANTON. That it is not germane to either the bill or the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. This is a bill providing for the framing and presentation of estimates and for the auditing of accounts. The Chair is inclined to think that this section is in line with the general purpose, and therefore in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Chair hear me on that?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the bill is to provide a budget system for the entire Government. It is a bill general in scope. The amendment attempts to provide a different auditing system for the Post Office Department, over which the general auditing system has no surveillance at all. This amendment provides a separate and distinct auditing system for a certain department, irrespective of the general provisions of the bill. It does not provide that it shall be under the jurisdiction of the comptroller general, as all other departments are provided for in this bill, but provides a separate and distinct auditing system for that department and provides for certain machinery for this separate department. I do not see how this amendment, providing for such a separate department, can be considered germane to a general bill providing a budget system intended to cover all departments of the Government.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BLANTON. I yield.
Mr. CARTER. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this section which we have just reached undertakes to transfer to this accounting department the six auditors in the Treasury Department, one of whom is the Auditor for the Post Office Department. Now, the amendment, as I understood it, presented by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] simply diverts that office to another channel instead of including it in the bill. It seems to me that it is germane. It deals with one of the six offices which has been included in the paragraph, but simply transfers that to another part of the Government rather than transferring it into this accounting

Mr. BLANTON. But from the reading of it, Mr. Chairman, it is not under the direct supervision of the comptroller general.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose circumstances should exist which would render it desirable that some department or bureau should not be under the comptroller general, might not a bill be framed providing a separate system for making estimates and audits and providing for them?

Mr. BLANTON. It may be, but I call the Chair's attention to the rule which has been sustained by many Chairmen, holding to the effect that concerning such a piece of legislation as this, while it would have been proper in the first instance for the chairman and his committee to have incorporated such an amendment in the bill which they report out and bring before the House, yet after they report the general bill to the House and the House has notice of what they are going to pass upon, it is improper for the committee to propose such a piece of special legislation by amendment on the bill, which otherwise would have been proper when reported by the committee in the

The CHAIRMAN. It is stated here that this shall be under the direction of the comptroller. Would the gentleman from Texas deny that in such a bill as this provision should be made for two comptrollers, providing for the work of the two de-partments? Suppose that we find that two were required. Should not the bill provide that two persons should perform the

Mr. BLANTON. This bill intends to provide an independent auditing system for all departments of the Government. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] seeks to provide a separate system for the Post Office Department and destroys the general purposes of the bill. In other words, the amendment would leave an independent auditing system for all the departments of the Government except the Post Office Department, concerning which it is to have a separate set of auditing machinery.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman concluded his statement?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Has the Chair ruled?

The CHAIRMAN. No. The Chair will be glad to hear from the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, it will be observed that section 304 provides that-

All powers and duties now conferred or imposed by law upon the Comptroller of the Treasury or the six auditors of the Treasury Department and the duties of the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants of the office of the Secretary of the Treasury relating to keeping the personal ledger accounts of disbursing and collecting officers, shall, so far as not inconsistent with this act, be vested in and imposed upon the general accounting office and be exercised without direction from any other officer. The balances certified by the comptroller general shall be final and conclusive upon the executive branch of the Government. The revision by the comptroller general of settlements made by the six auditors shall be discontinued, except as to settlements made before July 1, 1921.

It is to be observed that this section deals with the transfer of these duties. Now, what the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Andrews] said is not quite correct. The gentleman, I am afraid, has not carefully followed the reading of the amend-The amendment provides that only the administrative examination of the accounts and vouchers of the Postal Service shall be transferred to the Post Office Department. this situation, and I am frank to say it was a matter that had not been called to the attention of the committee. We did not know and had not realized when we were drawing the provision as to the transfer of all of these duties relating to the final audit over to the accounting office that for one department of the Government—the Post Office Department—the auditor made not only the administrative audit but the final audit.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. GOOD. Not now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GOOD. Now, all of the other departments make the administrative audit. It would be a crime to take from a department its administrative audit. It would result in greater extravagance than we can conceive of.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.
Mr. ANDREWS. Does the gentleman understand that the Postmaster General now makes an administrative audit of the accounts in his department?

Mr. GOOD. The Auditor for the Post Office Department makes an administrative audit of such accounts.

Mr. ANDREWS. Therefore the department must be given the clerical force which the Postmaster General would otherwise have.

Mr. GOOD. And that is all we are giving him.

Mr. ANDREWS. That is all right, providing the other por-tion of your amendment, which would carry over and leave everything to the Postmaster General, would apply.

Mr. GOOD. The amendment does not carry everything. The appropriations for 1922 for the Auditor for the Post Office Department total $1,121,020.

Of that sum $986,750 will go to the Post Office Department for the administrative examination by the bureau of accounts and $134,270 will go to the general accounting office for the final audit. We propose to put the administrative audit in the Post Office Department, but the final audit, as in every other department, will go to the general accounting office. Here is what will happen if we do not pass this amendment: The final audit of all other departments will have been transferred to the general accounting office; but as far as the Post Office Department is concerned we will also have transferred not only the final audit but the administrative audit. No one intends to do that. It would be unwise to do it. This amendment will simply place the Post Office Department on the same footing as all the other departments of the Government so far as the audit is concerned. When the matter was brought to our attention the question was as to what was the best thing to do. When I found out what the situation was I personally and the other members of the committee believed that we ought not to come before this House and present a piece of legislation that was going to do the very thing that we did not want done, and then come back a little later and say that we had to amend this law in order to make it workable. I will say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] that it was not with any desire to bring before the committee something new or something that he did not have an opportunity to read, but the only purpose of the amendment is to deal with the Post Office Department with regard to the administrative audit just as the law now fixes the administrative audit of the other departments. present law does not fix the administrative audit in the Post Office Department, but provides that the auditor for the Post Office Department shall make the administrative audit as well as the final audit.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman contends, then, that after this administrative audit in the Post Office Department the final audit will be made in the office of the comptroller general.

Mr. GOOD. Absolutely.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman point out the provision either in the bill or the amendment that proposes that that be done?

Mr. GOOD. The amendment only provides for the administrative audit and nothing else. Then we provide that the office of the Sixth Auditor shall be abolished.

Mr. BLANTON. This does not prevent the final audit being made under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. GOOD. Not at all.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas withdraws the point of order.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman permit another suggestion?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. ANDREWS. I concur fully in the wisdom of the amendment providing a force for the Postmaster General to make this audit. He ought to do it, but I fear that the wording of the amendment would leave the final audit with the Postmaster General, and to that extent interfere with the later provision of the bill for the transfer of the final audit to the accounts of the comptroller general.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman will examine the provision he will find that it does not do that.

Mr. ANDREWS. A reading of the amendment of course will bring that out.

Mr. GOOD. I have several amendments to follow this one. The CHAIRMAN. The point of order having been withdrawn, the Chair will hear discussion on the amendment. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Steenerson] is recognized.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I have listened very carefully to the explanation by the chairman of the committee as to why this exception should be made as to the Auditor for the Post Office Department, but I am not able to agree with what he says. It seems to me that department should be treated like all the other departments. There is no reason whatever why it should not.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska. Mr. ANDREWS. Does not this amendment place the Post Office Department on the same plane with all the other departments, and give to it the necessary clerical force to make the administrative examination as the other departments now do?

Mr. STEENERSON. Then, why do you make this special amendment as to the Auditor for the Post Office Department?

Mr. ANDREWS. Simply because heretofore, as I understand, the Postmaster General has not been supplied with the administrative force to make the examination. This will result in a reduction of the expenditures for the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department and will carry it over to the Postmaster General.

Mr. STEENERSON. I think the last remark of the gentleman is probably correct, that it will result in increasing the expenditures for the Post Office, Mr. ANDREWS. No. That is not what I said. It would decrease them.

Mr. STEENERSON. But increase the expenditure for the Post Office. The Appropriations Committee seem to treat the Auditor for the Post Office Department as a very favored child. Against my objection the expenditures for that office have been increased in the last five years. By the establishment of the central accounting system for the different post offices he was relieved of nearly half of his work. He represented to the committee that there would be a great saving in his office. But expenditures there have constantly increased. Now, I think the only reason why this amendment is proposed is that they want to take care of the auditor and of his present organization. It is legislating them out of the office they are now in and legislating them into another, and it is treating them in an exceptional-way over and above the forces in all these other departments. Now, the Auditor for the Post Office Department has been the most expensive official of this Government, measured by what he was spending five years ago and what he is spending to-day, when we take into account that he has been relieved of nearly half of the work he used to do by the central accounting system for post offices. Instead of saving there has been increase in expenditures.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. STEENERSON. Just wait a minute. It is true that the expenditures of the Post Office Department are paid out of postal funds, and it is only when there is a deficit that they draw any money from the Treasury, and that is the only distinction there is between the administration of that office and of the other departments. Now, why they should make an exception of this department and legislate the auditor and all his force into this budget system has not been explained.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; just a question.

Mr. ANDREWS. Do the Auditor for the Post Office Department and his clerical force receive their salaries out of the postal revenues?

Mr. STEENERSON. The Auditor for the Post Office Department is supposed to be an official of the Treasury Department.

Mr. ANDREWS. And paid out of appropriations from the Treasury?

Mr. STEENERSON. His salary is paid out of the Treasury. Mr. ANDREWS. And his force is paid out of the Treasury? Mr. STEENERSON. It comes out of the United States any-

Mr. ANDREWS. But out of the general funds, and not out of the postal funds?

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not say they are paid out of the postal funds, but the expenditure has been increased in the last few years under the management of this auditor, and for that reason it seems to me it would not be wise to take him bodily by this amendment and legislate him into a new position. I think he should be taken care of the same as the auditors in the other departments.

Mr. GOOD. That is the purpose of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the situation with regard to the audit and administrative examination of accounts in the Post Office Department has been different from that of any other department. We want to make such a change that it will hereafter conform to all the rest of the departments. At present there are 650 persons working at the examination of accounts and the auditing of accounts in the Post Office Department. These are nearly all, with the exception of 10 or 12, employees of the Treasury Department. We propose to create what has hitherto been lacking in the Post Office Department, a bureau for the administrative examination of accounts of that department and to transfer to the Post Office Department 556 of the employees who are now engaged in the work of that department though they are employees of the Treasury Department. We wish also to transfer to the general accounting office 94 employees who are engaged in actual auditing after the administrative examination of the accounts has been made. The Auditor for the Post Office Department, and all the auditors for other departments, will then be employees of the new general accounting office. That is precisely what this amendment proposes to do.

The Auditor for the Navy Department is not a Navy Department employee; he is an employee of the Treasury Department. The Auditor of the State Department is not an employee of the State Department, but an employee of the Treasury Department. We take all these auditors out of the Treasury Department and put them into the new comptroller's office. We transfer to the Post Office Department 556 employees of the Treasury Department who are now doing the work of the Post Office Department. So it will no longer be an exception. It has been an exception hitherto.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC, 305. Section 236 of the Revised Statutes is amended to read

SEC. 305. Section 236 of the Revised Statutes is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 236. All claims and demands whatever by the United States or against them, and all accounts whatever in which the United States are concerned, either as debtors or creditors, shall be settled and adjusted in the general accounting office."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that the use of the words "United States" as a plural is not according to modern usage.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, in doing that we are not changing existing law; we are simply reenacting existing law. Section 236 of the Revised Statutes reads as follows:

All claims and demands whatever by the United States or against them, and all accounts whatever in which the United States are concerned, either as debtors or creditors, shall be settled and adjusted in the general accounting office.

We have simply substituted general accounting and have taken the exact language of that section.

The CHAIRMAN. In drafting the earlier statutes the practice was not uniform, but in the later statutes it has invariably been used in the singular.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 306. All laws relating generally to the administration of the departments and establishments shall, so far as applicable, govern the general accounting office. Copies of any books, records, papers, or documents, and transcripts from the books and proceedings of the general accounting office, when certified under its seal, shall be admitted as evidence with the same effect as the copies and transcripts referred to in sections 882 and 886 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling attention of the chairman to the fact that there is nothing to indicate who is to authenticate these records. Section 886 of the Revised Statutes, referred to, has been amended at two different times. I do not know whether I have found the last amendment or not, but the specific officers are named in this statute. In the last amendment I am able to find the certificate is to be made by the Secretary or Assistant Secretary of the Treasury under the seal of the department. This section merely says that

Copies of any books, records, papers, or documents, and transcripts from the books and proceedings of the general accounting office, when certified under its seal, shall be admitted as evidence with the same effect as the copies and transcripts referred to in sections 882 and 886 of the Revised Statutes.

There is nothing in the bill that specifically confers upon anyone the authority to authenticate the records. I suggest that, after the word "seal," in line 20, the officer or officers be named who are to authenticate it.

Mr. GOOD. I call the gentleman's attention to section 306, which says:

All laws relating generally to the administration of the departments and establishments shall, so far as applicable, govern the general accounting office.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That does not cure it, because these records will not be certified by the particular officers mentioned in the section. It seems to me that the record should be certified either by the controller general or his assistant.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERS of Indiana. Yes.
Mr. ANDREWS. The furnishing of such copies in court proceedings under existing law and practice would go under seal of the Secretary of the Treasury. The transcript is prepared and the document is certified to by the Secretary under seal of the department. It would appear that if the bill does not provide that the auditor or the controller general shall have a seal for the purpose it ought to be provided for, Mr. GOOD. The bill provides for it.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. These sections referred to in the bill provide specifically for an officer of the Treasury Department to authenticate it, but the provision in the bill leaves it entirely blank. I do not like to offer an amendment, because the gentleman in charge of the bill knows more about who ought to make the authentication than I de.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman will refer to page 15, under paragraph (e), he will find it says:

All official acts performed by such officers or employees specially designated therefor by the comptroller general shall have the same force and effect as though performed by the comptroller general in person.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That does not cover it.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. This section says that they "shall be admitted as evidence with the same effect as the copies and transcripts referred to in sections 882 and 886 of the Revised Statutes." There is nothing to indicate who is to make the authentication or who is to certify to it. May I ask the chairman, in his opinion, what officer would certify to those records?

Mr. GOOD. The comptroller general or the assistant comptroller general, or such officers as may be designated by the comptroller to perform those duties.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for one minute in order that I may ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Under the law in my State you could not introduce this transcript from the records up here, it makes no difference who would certify to it, so long as the books exist, because the books would be the best evidence. This would be incompetent. If a man in my State were indicted in the Federal court on a charge of embezzlement you could not try and convict him under this rule, because this transcript would not be admissible. The rule in my State is that the books are the best evidence. I merely call the gentleman's attention to that fact.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana, Mr. Chairman, I shall not offer the amendment if the gentleman from Iowa desires to do so.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to inserting after the word "seal," in line 20, page 12, the words "by the comptreller general or assistant comptreller general," and I offer that as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Goop: Page 12, line 20, after the word "seal," sert "by the comptroller general or the assistant comptroller gen-

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 310. The offices of the six auditors shall be abolished, to take effect July 1, 1921. All other officers and employees of these offices shall become officers and employees in the general accounting office at their grades and salaries on July 1, 1921. All books, records, documents, papers, furniture, office equipment, and other property of these offices, and of the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants, so far as they relate to the work of such division transferred by section 304, shall become the property of the general accounting office. The general accounting office shall occupy temporarily the rooms now occupied by the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury and the six auditors.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Good: Page 13, line 24, after the word "offices," sert "except as otherwise provided herein."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, this is simply to have this fit in with the amendment in regard to the administrative audit in the Post Office Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows;

The Clerk read as follows;

Sec. 311. (a) The comptroller general shall appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such attorneys and other employees in the general accounting office as may from time to time be provided for by Congress.

(b) All such appointments, except to positions carrying a salary at a rate of more than $5,000 a year, shall be made in accordance with the civil-service laws and regulations.

(c) No person appointed by the comptroller general shall be paid a salary at a rate of more than $6,000 a year, and not more than four persons shall be paid a salary at a rate of more than $5,000 a year.

(d) All officers and employees of the general accounting office, whether transferred thereto or appointed by the comptroller general, shall perform such duties as may be assigned to them by him.

(e) All official acts performed by such officers or employees specially designated therefor by the comptroller general shall have the same force and effect as though performed by the comptroller general in person.

force and enect as the second of the second of the comptroller general shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for carrying on the work of the general accounting office, including rules and regulations concerning the admission of attorneys to practice.

Mr. ROSSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROSSDALE: Page 14, line 14, after the word "than," strike out "$5,000" and insert "$3,000."

Mr. ROSSDALE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is not intended to do away with the present established civil service nor to curtail it. It refers to that class of men in the civil service who happily, I might say, are not many. It refers to the higher-priced specialists or executives, the men who occupy very responsible positions. It has nothing to do with the great army of employees in the civil service throughout the United States. It refers to a class of men who receive large salaries, and whom this measure would include in a protective class with the rank and file of ordinary employees. I do not mean to do away with those who really deserve the protection of the civil service, but I do object to the further extension of the civil service to that class of men who get these positions by political preferment and then install and perpetuate themselves and their friends further through the medium of the civil service.

A great many of the Members of the House are familiar with the type to which I refer. They are Democrats when the Democrats are in power and Republicans when the Republicans are in power. They never lose and always are on the winning side. When we go to them they assume a lofty attitude and pretend that they are above politics. Underneath the highly polished departmental veneer which they assume they are in reality hard-boiled gentlemen, men who lack the element of human kindness and seldom have any sympathy with their employees or with those with whom they come in contact, except the few who can be of direct use and benefit to them. They have developed the fine art of refusing to a very high degree. When we go to them for something for a constituent they refuse us in such an exquisitely refined way that we almost thank them, and we do not realize that they are actually refusthank them, and we do not realize that they are actually refus-ing us. These men come here and they want to be protected by the civil service. So far as I am concerned, I would not protect them at all. They are well able to take care of them-selves, and they generally do, and I object to increasing their tribe any further. The civil service was not intended to in-clude $5,000 men. The protection that my amendment gives is ample as far as the $3,000 class are concerned. If this is car-yied further and to its logical conclusion, why we might change ried further and to its logical conclusion, why, we might change the Constitution and extend the civil service to the members of the Cabinet, and if we persist and carry the thing further we might just as well bring the civil service in here to apply to the Members of Congress. Does anyone suppose that any civilservice examination could be conceived or devised that would give anyone a fair idea of how to choose an executive or of how to choose a high-priced specialist by any such test? Does the mere knowledge of arithmetic, of spelling, or geography entitle a man to be selected by some such scheme, or is there any other method of examination by which an expert or an executive could be chosen without considering his fitness and ability for the place? I do not think so; and this thing is the usual method to perpetuate departmental executives and their friends still further and to prevent any political party ever having anything to say about it. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, yesterday or the day before the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Williams] spoke in a very humorous way about the examination now required of candidates for appointment as rural mail carriers, and what he said met with great applause. Afterwards I heard gentlemen in the lobbies say they did not think there ought to be any examination of these employees; that they could not pass the examination; that it took a scholar to pass it. Now, last year there were 19,000 candidates examined for rural free delivery carriers and 11,000 of them passed the examination. Facts like these are potent arguments when you come to discuss a question of this kind. There is a physical examination of applicants to determine whether they are free from disease, either contagious or of a character that will incapacitate them for the performance of their duty. This morning, immediately after the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] made his most remarkable statement, I looked up the utterances of some of our public men on the subject of the evils of the old system. I could not get opportunity to reply to him then, but he began by saying that the civil-service system is a failure as administered to-day. Now, let us see what kind of a system it supplanted. I read from the words uttered in debate in the Senate of the United States by a very distinguished Democrat, Senator Vest, of Missouri.

When I entered the Senate I became chairman of the committee to examine the several branches of the civil service, and for two years I was engaged with the rest of that committee in taking testimony on the subject of civil-service reform. That very great evils exist there can be no sort of question—evils so monstrous, so deadly in their effect, that men of all political parties have come to the conclusion that some remedy must be applied. * * * That evils exist there can be no sort of question. Money has become the great factor in the politics of the United States.

Garfield said on this subject on March 4, 1870:

We press such appointments upon the departments: we crowd the doors; we fill the corridors; Senators and Representatives throng the offices and bureaus until the public business is obstructed; the patience of officers is worn out, and sometimes, for fear of losing their places by our influence, they at last give way and appoint men, not because they are fit for their positions but because we ask it.

Here is what Gen. Grant said in 1870, and I read this as an appeal to Republicans on this side of the Chamber:

The present system does not secure the best men, and often not even fit men, for the public places. The elevation and purification of the civil service of the Government will be hailed with approval by the whole people of the United States,

Senator Bayard, of Delaware, an illustrious Democrat, said in the Senate:

And so things went on until the offices generally were filled under that system, which was false and dangerous in the extreme—a system which, as my friend from Ohio said, is absolutely fatal to the integrity of republican institutions, I care not what party nor under what name it may be organized and carried on.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes additional

Is there objection to the request of the The CHAIRMAN. gentleman from Wisconsin? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I wish the gentleman from Indiana would consult the report signed by two men worthy of the respect of Republicans and Democrats-Daniel Webster and John C. Calhoun. They agreed in that report, and said that unless something was done to do away with the old system that some gentlemen have advocated within the last two days, the doom of republican institutions was not difficult to prophesy. Under that system Senator Vest, a great Democrat, said money had become a controlling factor in the politics of the United States. Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Just a moment. I can not yield, as I have only one more minute. There is only one other thing I wish to say. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Woop] said that the civil-service system as now administered is a failure. I deny that. That is an extreme statement. It is not accurate. I was for a year upon the committee which about a year ago concluded its investigation of the whole civil service of this city, except the post office and the navy yard. We examined many scores of witnesses, officials, bureau chiefs, department heads, and a great number of employees. The difficulty to-day is not with the entering into the civil service under the examinations, which now have become practical in character and adapted to the respective positions for which the candidates apply, but it is in the treatment accorded the employees after they get into the service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent

To-day there is not really any system of employment which can be called an employment system of the United States. To-day there is the greatest inequality of payment for the same service. We were told of one man who got $1,400, another one $1,800, another one $2,600, and one over $3,000 for performing the same service. Lump-sum appropriations have resulted in scandalous favoritism in the service in this city and throughout the coun-

The civil-service system has been so administered as to put countless numbers of employees into blind-alley jobs, where they thought that by laborious service they could secure the promotion which they deserve. But they can not. There is nothing like a regular system of promotion. Man after man, and woman after woman, work like slaves, and when they get to a place in the employ of the Government that appeals to them they find that somebody at the head of some bureau puts another into the place which they have earned. [Applause.]

The fault of the civil-service system is not in the admission of persons into the employ of the Government by the taking of examinations. There used to be too much attention paid to literary subjects and to history. Now the examinations have become really practical. That is proven by the instance I gave of 11,000 who passed the examination for rural carriers out of And I do not know how many of the 19,000 may have failed because they had one or the other of the physical defects which are sufficient to bar them under the examination required.

So let us reclassify the positions in order that a person who is appointed as a clerk will know what his duties are. found as a result of our examination more than 130 different titles for persons who are performing practically the same service. Every conceivable kind of title is given to persons in order to get them a salary. There is not anything like certainty as to what are the duties performed by a clerk. When you look at the title "Clerk of class 1," you do not know what duties he is performing. You do not know what a clerk of class 4 is performing. Change that, reclassify the positions, and reorganize the departments, and then you will have a proper civil-service system. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Rossnale], which the Clerk will report

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, in line 8, page 15, to add, after the word "practice," the words "before such office."

Mr. GOOD. There is no objection to that. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked by the gentleman from Wyoming that the gentleman from Wisconsin be allowed to speak for five additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Wyoming. In reply to the statement made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Woop] I desire to say that the administration of the civil service is not a failure.

Mr. ROSSDALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROSSDALE. The gentleman has five minutes,
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I can not right now.
Mr. ROSSDALE. The gentleman has five minutes,
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the great difficulty with the civil-service system to-day, as was demonstrated, and more than amply demonstrated, by our investigation, is with the way the employee is treated after he gets into the service.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 312. (a) The comptroller general shall investigate, at the seat of government or elsewhere, all matters relating to the receipt and distursment of public funds, and shall make to the Precident when requested by him, and to Congress at the beginning of each regular session, a report in writing of the work of the general accounting office, containing recommendations concerning such other matters relating to the footened by him, and to Congress at the beginning of each regular session, a report in writing of the work of the general accounting office, containing recommendations concerning such other matters relating to the very containing recommendations concerning such other matters relating to the government of public funds, and shall make to the Precident when request and it of government of public funds, and shall make to the Precident when request of any accounts and concerning such other relating to the general shall shall investigate, at the seat of government of public funds, and shall make to the receipt a

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike cut the last word for the purpose of making an inquiry of the chairman. I notice that paragraph (b) provides for such investigation and report as shall be ordered by either House of Congress or by any committee of either House having jurisdiction over revenue, appropriations, or expenditures. Is it contemplated that that shall in any way take the place of the Tariff Commission?

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There is no conflict?

Mr. GOOD. The report will not be on subjects of that kind. It will be on the subject of expenditures in the various departments, and it has generally been provided that the committee having to do with the raising of revenue will use all the information that any agency such as this might have at its disposal. I think the general accounting officer will be called upon very, very frequently by the Committee on Appropriations, and seldom by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 11, after the word "receipt" strike out the word "and," and after the word "disbursement" insert the words "and application." Also, likewise amend line 18 by striking out the word "and" and, after "disbursement," insert the words "and application."

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, before addressing myself to the amendment I would add my word of recognition of the very great services rendered to the country by the chairman of this committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good], in the perfecting of this law. In these days when we give so many honors, decorations, and awards to military heroes it is worth while for an instant to recall that "peace hath her victories no less renowned than war." We regret that the chairman of this committee may soon leave us, but we rejoice that he will carry with him the satisfaction of having attached his name to a piece of constructive legislation desired by all the people, and that shall bring honor to him and to us. [Applause.]
Mr. Chairman, my amendment is very brief, and yet it is vital. It may be that the amendment will receive the approval of the committee, but in any case it will be worth while to take time to set down in the Record the meaning of this section. I speak with earnestness in the matter, because I come from a State that has been wrestling with this problem for years and has at last reached a solution which I hope in point of success may be followed in the law before us.

The problem of efficiency in the administration of government is one of the most serious problems confronting the American people. To solve it in my own State we provided first for a commission that should serve in a censoring capacity. After a few years it proved wise to replace the commission by a single commissioner, and we now have one man in Massachusetts whose sole occupation it is to study the efficiency of government administration.

In this bill, if I understand aright the purposes of the committee, it is contemplated that the comptroller general shall perform the same functions; and if I seem to you to have given a superfluous explanation in the matter, it is solely in order that we may get clearly in the RECORD our expectation that this man shall make it his duty, his constant, unremitting dutyfrom which he can not escape by any recourse to the language of the bill-his constant, unremitting duty to search for methods of economy in saving for the Government.

It is in this particular section that we can make this clear. The section was worded, I fear, in a way that might have led some occupant of this office to imagine that his functions were purely clerical; that is, the functions implied by the word "accountant." The words used have the savor of the bookkeeper, of the cashier, of the treasurer, not of the investigator of the way the money is spent, not of the man who goes out and looks for trouble, not of the man who attempts of his own initiative to find places to save money. Therefore I make the suggestion that we add to the words of the cashier and the treasurer and the accountant, namely, "receipt and disburse-ment," the word "application." If there ever was presented on this floor a single word of amendment which might have a wider extent of usefulness to the people, it has not come to my knowledge.

I hope, sir, that if this is satisfactory to the committee, the chairman may supplement what I say, in order that there never may be any question that we did not mean this man to be simply a bookkeeper, simply a cashier, simply an accountant, but that we meant him to be our will, our eyes, and our ears, to study and determine and enforce economy. [Applause, ]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Luce] for his words of commendation in regard to my work.

When we prepared this bill we thought we had included the idea which the gentleman has incorporated in his amendment. We provide in the latter part of that section, lines 19 to 22, that in the regular reports or in special reports made to Congress from time to time he shall make recommendations for greater economy and efficiency. I have no objection to the words which the gentleman's amendment inserts in this section. It was the intention of the committee that the comptroller general should be something more than a bookkeeper or accountant; that he should be a real critic, and at all times should come to Congress, no matter what the political complexion of Congress or the Executive might be, and point out inefficiency, if he found that money was being misapplied—which is another term for inefficiency—that he would bring such facts to the notice of the committees having jurisdiction of appropriations. Therefore I have no objection at all to the gentleman's amendment. I think it will subserve a useful purpose.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Luce] just what the word "application" means, as distinguished from "disbursement "?

Mr. GOOD. The application of the disbursement, how the money was used, the uses to which it was put, I suppose that is the intention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It does not mean that he himself can direct the application? He reports how it was applied?

Mr. GOOD. No; it does not mean that he can direct the application. He reports whether it was applied efficiently, whether it was wisely spent. He has no power to direct expenditures

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. He does not suggest anything outside of the law?

Mr. LUCE. The purpose, Mr. Chairman, is to make it sure that the comptroller general shall concern himself not simply with taking in and paying out money from an accountant's point of view, but that he shall also concern himself with the question as to whether it is economically and efficiently

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Luce: Page 15, line 11, after the word "receipt," strike out the word "and," and after the word "disbursement" insert the words "and application." Also likewise amend line 18 by striking out, after the word "receipt," the word "and" and inserting after the word "disbursement" the words "and application."

Mr. LUCE. My amendment should have included the insertion of a comma after the word "receipts" in each case.

Mr. STEVENSON. The word "and" followed the word receipts." It should come after the word "disbursements.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it again, including the comma. It was presented to the Clerk in that form.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, my meaning in both cases, in order that there may be no question, was to say "receipt, disbursement, and application."

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, may I ask that the Clerk read the clause as it should read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as it was intended to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Luce: Page 15, line 11, after the word "receipt," strike out the word "and" and, after the word "disbursement," insert the words "and application." Also likewise amend line 18 by striking out the word "and" after the word "receipt" and inserting after the word "disbursement" the words "and application," so that as amended the section will read:

"Sec. 312. (a) The comptroller general shall investigate, at the seat of government or elsewhere, all matters relating to the receipt, disbursement, and application of public funds, and shall make to the President when requested by him, and to Congress at the beginning of each regular session, a report in writing of the work of the general accounting office, containing recommendations concerning the legislation he may deem necessary to facilitate the prompt and accurate rendition and settlement of accounts and concerning such other matters relating to the receipt, disbursement, and application of public funds as he may think advisable. In such regular report, or in special reports at any time when Congress is in session, he shall make recommendations looking to greater economy or efficiency in public expenditures."

The CHAIRMAN. It should be borne in mind that there is

The CHAIRMAN. It should be borne in mind that there is a comma in both instances after the word "receipt." tion is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 315. (a) All appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, for the offices of the Comptroller of the Treasury and the six auditors are transferred to and made available for the general accounting office.

(b) During such fiscal year the comptroller general, within the limit of the total appropriations available for the general accounting office, may make such changes in the number and compensation of officers and employees appointed by him or transferred to the general accounting office under this act as may be necessary.

(c) There shall also be transferred to the general accounting office such portions of the appropriations for rent and contingent and miscellaneous expenses, including allotments for printing and binding, made for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, as are equal to the amounts expended from similar appropriations during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, by the Treasury Department for the offices of the Comptroller of the Treasury and the six auditors.

(d) During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, the appropriations and portions of appropriations referred to in this section shall be available for salaries and expenses of the general accounting office, including payment for rent in the District of Columbia, traveling expenses, the purchase and exchange of law books, books of reference, and for all necessary miscellaneous and contingent expenses.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Good: Page 17, line 4, after the word "office" insert a comma and the words "except as otherwise provided herein."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is simply to fit in with the amendment with regard to the new offices created by the amendment relating to the administrative accounts in the Post Office Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 316. The general accounting office shall not be construed to be a bureau or office created since January 1, 1916, so as to deprive employees therein of the additional compensation allowed civilian employees under the provisions of section 6 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, if otherwise entitled thereto.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Good: Page 18, line 3, after the word "office" sert "and the bureau of accounts."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 318. This act shall take effect upon its approval by the President: Provided, That sections 301 to 315, inclusive, relating to the general accounting office, shall take effect July 1, 1921.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Good: On page 18, line 16, strike out "315" and insert "317"; and in line 17 after "office" insert "and the bureau of accounts."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. This completes the reading of the bill. The question is upon agreeing to the text of the House bill as amended, as a substitute for the text of the Senate bill; to strike out all after the enacting clause of said Senate bill and insert in lieu thereof the text of the House bill as amended by the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Burron, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (S. 1084) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. GOOD. I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to the final passage.

The SPEAKER. The rule orders the previous question. The previous question is ordered. The question is on the amend-

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I have a motion to recommit. The SPEAKER. That will come later.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time."

and was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Johnson] offers a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Johnson of Mississippi moves to recommit the bill to the Select Committee on the Budget, with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: On page 11, line 6, after the word "office" strike out "during good behavior," and insert in lien thereof "for seven years."

Mr. GOOD. I make the point of order that the motion to recommit that has been offered is not in order.

The House has already agreed to the amendment which the gentleman from Mississippi seeks to strike out of the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I suggest this for the consideration of the Speaker: I think that probably under the holdings, if this was an ordinary procedure, the Chair might be well taken. But I direct the attention of the Chair to the fact that the rule as reported from the Committee on Rules expressly provides that a motion to recommit should be in order. The report of the Committee on Rules contemplated precisely the course that has been taken, namely, that the House bill was to be substituted for the Senate bill, but notwithstanding that fact it also provided that the motion to recommit should be in order.

The SPEAKER. There can be no doubt but a motion to recommit would be in order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But the gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order.

The SPEAKER. On the ground that it seeks to strike out an amendment already adopted by the House.

Mr. GOOD. It strikes out an amendment already agreed to by the House, and the gentleman from Tennessee knows by the well-established rules that never is in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that while the rule provided for one motion to recommit, that motion to recommit must be a motion otherwise in order to the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Can I strike out the 7 years and insert 10 years?

That would not change the parliamentary The SPEAKER. situation. The Chair thinks that under the decisions the point that the gentleman from Iowa makes is unquestioned. The language that the gentleman seeks to strike out has been agreed to as an amendment and that can not be now amended. The gentleman from Tennessee apparently recognizing that fact makes the point that this is different from the ordinary case, because the special rule provides that a motion to recommit should be in order. The Chair assumes that that was done, as it is always done in the special rule, because it is compulsory on the Committee on Rules to put it in, inasmuch as the rules themselves make that provision. It was put in in order to comply with the rule. And the motion to recommit would be in order now.

Mr. WINGO. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. WINGO. I do not recall the rule, but, as I understand, the rule made the Senate bill in order, and the Committee of the Whole adopted as one amendment the House bill amended. Is that the status?

The SPEAKER. The rule provided that the House bill should be considered in lieu of the Senate bill as an amendment and should be allowed to be amended. The Chair assumes that the reason of that was that it would prevent the reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. WINGO. That is the point I want to suggest. The rule did not provide, as it might have done, for the consideration of the Senate bill, and then leave it as it might under the rules of the House to an amendment in the nature of a substitute; but the rule provided that the Senate bill should be considered in a certain way-that is, by the consideration of the House bill. I am inclined to think that the Chair is right, although it occurred to me at first that it might make some difference. On reflection I do not think that it would.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill.

Mr. GOOD. And on that I move the previous question.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is the gentleman from Mississippi opposed to the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I am opposed to the bill. The SPEAKER. The question is on the previous question. The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to recommit the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of no quorum. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 59, nays 297, not voting 73, as follows:

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented concurrent resolutions adopted by the Legislature of the State of Michigan, which were referred as indicated below

To the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

House concurrent resolution 7, requesting Congress to repeal the Esch-Cummins Act.

Cummins Act.

Whereas the so-called Esch-Cummins Act, enacted by Congress at the last regular session, places an unjust burden of taxation and transportation charges upon the people of the State of Michigan.

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That we earnestly and urgently petition the Congress of the United States to repeal the Esch-Cummins Act.

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be mailed by the clerk of the house of representatives and the secretary of the senate to the United States Senators for Michigan and to the Michigan Members of the National House of Representatives.

States Senators for Michigan and to the Michigan Members of the National House of Representatives.

House concurrent resolution 8, memorializing Congress to restore to the States control of intrastate railroads.

Whereas the Congress of the United States has, by the Interstate commerce act as amended by the transportation act of 1920, attempted to control the capital securities of railroad corporations organized under State sovereignty whose lines are built wholly within the State, thereby depriving the State of its control thereof and indirectly placing under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission all matters of improvements, extensions, betterments, abandonment and discontinuance of railroad lines and facilities, and has attempted to deprive the State of its control over capital securities of corporations created under its laws; of its control over extensions, betterments, abandonments, and discontinuances of railroad lines wholly within the State; of its control of train service wholly within the State; of its control of train service wholly within the State; of its control of train service wholly within the State; of its power over police regulations, grade separations, safety appliances, and sanitary terminals; and has established rates for intrastate commerce, and the Interstate Commerce Commission has assumed to set aside State freight and passenger rates for intrastate traffic, and has sought to deprive shippers and travelers of the right to complain of the confiscation of their property by the extortion pursuant to the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission of rates and fares "substantially and unreasonably in excess of a fair return upon the value of the railway property held for and used in the service of transportation"; and such action upon the part of the Congress of the United States, as construed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, has crippled manufacturing industries, destroyed the value of farms and of farm products, placed an unreasonable burden upon the public, enabled the railroads to pay extortionate and unreasonable costs of operation, crippled transportation, and impaired the general welfare of the people: Now, therefore, be it and impaired the general welfare of the people: Now, therefore, be if Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring). That the Legislature of the State of Michigan urge upon all Members of the Congress of the United States, and particularly the Members thereof representing the State of Michigan, the amendment of the interstate commerce act as amended by the transportation act of 1920 so as to restore to the States the control of the capital securities of all railroad corporations created under the sovereignty of the States and operating railroads wholly within the territorial limits thereof; the control by the States of intrastate rates over intrastate traffic; and the authority of the States to compel service by railroads in the transportation of persons and property on the basis of a fair return upon the fair value of the used and useful property of the railroad company.

To the Committee on Commerce:

House concurrent resolution 20, memorializing Congress to amend the La Follette Act so as to alleviate burdens now carried by Great Lakes shipping.

La Follette Act so as to alleviate hurdens now carried by Great Lakes shipping.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Michigan (the Senate concurring), That the existing laws of the United States governing the operation of vessels upon the Great Lakes and connecting waters are unreasonable to an extent that makes their continued operation a grievous burden and in many cases an impossibility. The conditions on the Great Lakes are vastly different from those on the high seas; runs are comparatively short and steamers are seldom out of sight of land, and then only for a comparatively short time. The laws in question give vessels too little authority in times of danger; vessels plying on short runs are unnecessarily required to operate under the three-watch system; the operating season is too short, unnecessary men are required, thus adding to the expense and forcing the already high passenger and freight rates to a still higher and almost prohibitive level. These severe and inelastic regulations are totally unnecessary upon the Great Lakes. Neither necessity nor safety has counseled them. They have well-nigh paralyzed the passenger traffic and made the freight traffic an insupportable burden to the public. In view of these facts the Congress of the United States is respectfully requested to so amend and modify the La Follette Act, so called, as to alleviate these restrictive and burdensome conditions, and to do so as quickly and speedily as possible: And he it further Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the clerk of the house of representatives to each of the Senators and Representatives from this State in the Congress of the United States, and they are hereby respectfully requested to use their utmost endeavors to secure the amendments to the said law.

REMOVAL OF SOLDIER DEAD FROM FRANCE.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I have here a letter from an ex-service man and brother of one of the dead heroes of the World War, in which he asks me to have inserted in the Record some resolutions recently adopted by a post of Veterans of Foreign Wars, in reference to the removal of the bodies of dead soldiers from France. I ask unanimous consent to have the letter and resolutions entered in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The letter and resolutions are as follows:

NEW YORK, May 5, 1921.

Hon. David I. Walsh. Scrate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: My attention has been called to an extract from the Congressional Record of April 26, 1921, in which appear a letter from the Rev. Dr. Harlan and the letters of Owen Wister and Thomas Nelson Page protesting the removal of our soldier dead from Thomas Nelson Page protesting the removal of our scale.

My brother was Maj. James A. McKenna, jr., of the One hundred and sixty-fifth Infantry (the old Sixty-ninth New Yerk). He was killed at the Battle of the Ourcq July 28, 1918. I personally buried him and know that it was his wish that he be put to final rest in this his own country, for whose cause he gladly gave the last full measure of devotion.

The post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, which has taken his name, has passed the inclosed resolution.

Would you see to it that it be published in the Congressional Record? I know it would give great comfort to many mothers, who after all, are the real heroes, for while we fought they watched and waited and suffered.

Sincerely,

Resolutions.

W.M. F. McKenna.

At a regular meeting of the Major James A. McKenna. jr., Post, 199, Veterans of Forcian Wars, held in Brooklyn, N. Y., April 29, 1921, the letters of Owen Wister and Thomas Nelson Page, as printed in the New York Times of April 15, 1921, were read, whereupon the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

resolution was unanimously adopted;

"Whereas upon the entry of the United States of America into the World War this Government promised to its people that the remains of such of its citizeus who might make the supreme sacrifice upon the altar of its cause in a foreign land would be returned for final interment in this country upon the request of the next of kin; and

"Whereas our Government is fulfilling this promise in an eminently satisfactory manner; the utmost tenderness, respect, and devotion being shown to our heroic dead; and

"Whereas the right of the next of kin transcends any considerations or claims upon the part of strangers; and

"Resolved, That the aforementioned letters have produced and have caused only additional sorrow and pain, where it should be the desire of all true Americans to give comfort and solace. They unjustly reflect upon the integrity of our Government. They are un-American and barbaric; it is further "Resolved, That the circulation of any propaganda which has for its solject, even though indirectly, the retarding of our Government's sacred work in fulfilling its promise to bring home the soldier dead is unreservedly condemned."

EMERGENCY TABIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2435) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, and to provide revenue; to regulate commerce with foreign countries; to prevent the dumping of foreign merchandise on the markets of the United States; to regulate the value of foreign money; and for other purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to have printed in the RECORD the telegram which I send to the desk.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

QUINCY, FLA., May 5, 1921.

Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

At a meeting our association was instructed to wire urging you reconsider your position with reference to tobacco schedule in the emergency tariff measure. Position of our farmers is that farmers far outnumber manufacturers in Florida, and it is decidedly more worthy to assist the farming end of the tobacco business. By investigation you will find very little wrapper tobacco imported from Cuba at high duty used by Florida manufacturers. We grow in Florida 3,000,000 pounds wrapper tobacco. Farmers are at row's end unless tariff is raised on imported tobacco. Sumatra importers are bringing in double the quantity here-tofore imported, and with favorable rates of exchange prevailing can destroy domestic growing business. Please do not oppose tobacco schedule. stroy do

FLORIDA AND GEORGIA TOBACCO GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.

Thursday, May 5, 1921.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, it may be worth while in connection with the discussion of the bill as it now presents itself to the Senate to review very briefly the course of the legisla-

Something near six months ago the House began the preparation of a measure which it was claimed was intended and would relieve the farmers of the country from the competition of alleged excessive importations of like or similar foreign commodities to those produced in this country. At that time a very different situation existed from that which exists to-day, as I propose to show, or attempt to show, before I finish.

At that time it was claimed by the proponents of this bill that agricultural products were selling at prices but little, if any, above the cost of production, and that this situation had been brought about by excessive foreign importations of these products, and that a tariff prohibiting or restricting further importations would restore agricultural prices to a fair level, if not to the high level which obtained during and immediately after the war. It was declared that it was distinctively a farmers' emergency bill; that the recognition it gave to manufactured products was incidental and inconsequential. This was the contention when the bill first came to the Senate during the last regular session of the Sixty-sixth Congress.

Almost immediately after the bill was reported to the Senate from the House opposition on the Republican side of this Chamber of a serious character developed, more especially from the representatives of the great industrial centers of the East and North, who, while feeling sure that many of the duties imposed would not affect at all, or, if at all, not to any appreciable extent, prices, they greatly feared that certain of these duties, such as those imposed upon sugar and meats, would tend greatly to increase the cost of living.

The House had demanded that the bill be passed without amendment. It was authoritatively stated that if amended it would not be accepted by that body and legislation would fail. In these conditions it was for a time doubtful whether the bill would be favorably acted upon by the Senate, and it probably would not have been but for the fact the Finance Committee decided to disregard the injunction of the House and to amend it, and did so amend it as to make it less objectionable to the opposition element of the majority party, but still by no means satisfactory.

This feeling of opposition did not grow less as the discussion proceeded. While the Republican vote was cast almost solidly for the bill, that vote, it is well known, did not really reflect the sentiment of many members of the majority, and it is generally believed it would not have received enough votes in this Chamber to have passed if it had not been for the fact that it was known beyond peradventure that if it passed it would be vetoed by the President.

I charged in closing the debate on the bill that this was the situation, and I challenged denial. I went further than that, and I then stated that in my judgment, if the President vetoed the bill, it would not be reintroduced and passed in its then form at the extra session and sent to President Harding for his signature.

Mr. President, I have no idea that this bill would be here to-day, embracing substantially everything that was in the bill that passed at the last session, but for the amendments that have been added to it and which materially change its Indeed, it was announced from the White House and proclaimed to the country after a conference between President Harding and Republican representatives of the Finance and Ways and Means Committees that the farmers' emergency tariff bill would be dropped, and undoubtedly that course would have been pursued if a way had not been devised venient vehicle to tack on by way of amendment provisions which would convert it in effect into a protective measure of general application more efficacious in many instances than would be the Payne-Aldrich tariff rates in restraining and excluding competing importations of all kinds.

From the Republican standpoint this scheme of using the alleged farmers' emergency bill as a vehicle to extend, in effect, the vaunted benefits of protection to the industrial products of the country until a general revision of the tariff could be accomplished was an inspiration and it quickly resulted in bringing about a change in attitude with respect to this measure. The antidumping and the foreign currency valuation provisions of the House bill were intended to accomplish this purpose, and will accomplish it, and it is to get the benefit of these two amendments that this bill is now before the Congress. doubtedly it was expected that the House dumping bill provision at the time it was agreed upon and when it was written into this bill would impose heavy penalties at the customhouse upon importations of all kinds coming from a large section of the world, which penalties it was thought would be sufficient to restrain and in many cases prohibit these importations. formation which has since been obtained through inquiries made by the Senate Finance Committee tending to show that this will not be the case was not then known, and the facts which were developed with respect to dumping at the hearings before the Senate committee was a surprise to the proponents as well as the opponents of this bill. If this provision of the House bill would accomplish the purpose in this respect it was thought it would and intended it should accomplish it would undoubtedty operate as a substantial and far-reaching protective tax upon importations not only now upon the dutiable list but some now upon the free list.

The foreign currency valuation provision as originally agreed upon and written into the House bill, if enacted into law, would operate as an embargo upon importations from a large part of the world. It was the decision to add these two provisions to the original farmers' emergency tariff bill that brought about the change in the purpose of the administration and the Congress with respect to this measure. But for these two provisions the farmers' emergency tariff bill would have been dropped. as at one time it was announced it would be, and we should have heard nothing more about it. This bill is before Congress now because it is no longer chiefly a farmers' emergency tariff bill, but because it is, in potential effect, a protective-tariff measure, which in many cases will operate more effectively to that end, as I have before said, than would the high and repudiated rates of the Payne-Aldrich bill. With these amendments changing, as I have stated, the scope and character of the measure, the opposition to the bill on the part of certain powerful elements on the Republican side of the Chamber disappeared. It is true the Finance Committee have changed the foreign currency valuation clause of the House bill by substituting for it a new rule for the valuation of imports, but I believe a careful investigation will show and that results will show, if this bill as amended by the Senate becomes a law, that this change will be broader in its scope and be more universal in its application than the House provision, and will probably be as effective in increasing the taxes to be paid at the customhouse upon foreign merchandise.

Mr. President, the bill is back here for the reasons that I have assigned. The bill will be passed. It will get the solid vote of the other side of the Chamber, not because of its so-called farmers' emergency features but because of these added provisions, which will make it, in effect, a tariff measure of wide application and imposing a high rate of taxation.

Now, Mr. President, let us examine for a few minutes the provisions of the bill as it came from the House. I am going to discuss the House dumping and valuation provisions as well as the substitute, because I know perfectly well that the House is very much wedded to the bill as it passed that body. I know that its Members are resentful, if not incensed, because the Senate has modified it in material particulars; these provisions will probably reduce somewhat the changes. When this measure gets into conference I am apprehensive that the Senate conferees will be forced-if they do not voluntarily do so-to compromise these differences and accept with modifications the vicious currency scheme of the House bill. Therefore I feel impelled to discuss at some length the House bill. That is the bill that the Republican Party framed in pursuance of the agreement to revive this bill after it had been agreed to scrap it, and that bill showed they want not protection, but an embargo upon merchandise of certain kinds and from certain

Let me refer first to the antidumping provision of the House to use this, the so-called farmers' emergency bill, as a con- bill. That, Mr. President, is one of the most remarkable propositions ever presented to Congress for enactment into law. Under that provision every article of foreign merchandise brought into this country, without an exception, without any question being raised as to whether it was brought in to be dumped, without reference to whether such importation would injure an American industry or tend to prevent the establishment of an American industry, without any qualifications as to the purpose and the effect of these importations, would become the subject of investigation by the appraisers to ascertain whether there was any element of dumping.

It was not then known as it is now known that practically all imports to this country are now sold in our markets at prices far above the home market price of the country of origin. That was not known or believed until it was developed in the hearings of the Senate Finance Committee by the testimony of certain appraisers and inspectors and members of the Court of Customs Appeals who appeared before that committee. They did not know that when they passed this dumping provision.

The country had been led to believe otherwise.

The House bill was based and written upon the theory that dumping was rampant in this country. Undoubtedly, following the war, there was more or less dumping here by reason of the fact that we had ourselves dumped an enormous quantity of war supplies then in Europe upon the allied countries of Europe at almost give-away prices, and the fact that each of the warring countries, having no further use for the vast war accumulations, had sold those upon the markets of their respective countries and elsewhere where they could at whatever they could get for them, that produced a condition which led to dumping on this country for a time.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator has just said that immediately following the war there undoubtedly was dumping into Now, as much as I believe in an antidumping this country. law, I do not think that is the fact. I should like to have the Senator state some things that were dumped into this country at figures lower than the cost of production, using the term "dumping" as we understand it—that is, as referring to products sold in this country for a less price than the producing cost in the country of production.

I think the public possibly have a little different idea as to what dumping is from legislators and lawyers who study that question. They think if a thing is put into this country at a very cheap rate it is dumping it, if it is below what they can produce it for themselves; but, speaking from the technical standpoint of what we understand by "dumping," I do not know of anything that has been dumped into this country by these foreign countries, even of their war supplies, for less than the cost of production. I admit that we sold things in France for 20 per cent or less of what it cost us to produce them, but I do not know of anything that was sold in the United States in return for less than its cost.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am not sure that I have any reliable knowledge on the subject, but judging from my correspondence one of the complaints, for instance, is that automobiles and automobile supplies of American manufacture, which were sold by the War Department in France, are brought over here, and the automobile people say they were dumped in here at such extremely low prices that it is interfering with their business. I was wondering whether that was the class of articles the Senator had in mind.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I was speaking then with reference to the war supplies that were sold by this Government in Europe, and by the different European Governments to their own citizens, for a purely nominal sum, and of course the amount of such goods being far in excess of the requirements of those countries, they were anxious to dispose of them at any prices they could get, and while I am not prepared to offer any specific case, I am advised that many of these surplus war supplies were exported and sold here at what might be called sal-The Senator from Ohio mentions automobiles. He might have included airplanes, because I heard talk here of the necessity of special legislation to protect the airplane industry from utter annihilation by the dumping of war planes

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not like to interrupt the Senator, but we generally get some information by these cross-questions, and I have yielded to the Senator, so that I think he will be willing to yield to me, to clear up this situation.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I know it was claimed last year, and is into this country the old airplanes that were used in the late war, and there may be something in it. I can not speak with authority, but I know those who were manufacturing are desperately in earnest in the belief that great danger will follow. I think the case the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] referred to was probably in regard to the importation of some trucks which the French had brought into this country. understand that about 70 of the trucks which we sold to France for from 10 to 20 per cent of their cost were reshipped by France and sold on our western coast. But I do not understand that even in that case they were sold at a figure below the cost of production in the foreign country.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the information I had came from automobile sources, and they complained generally of the imminent dumping of automobiles and automobile supplies. am not prepared to say that it may or may not have been trucks; I do not know. I also recall that I have had some very earnest representations made with regard to airplanes, and so on, by those who are interested in the manufacture of them.

Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. President, I am asking my questions just for information.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I would like to ask the Senator from Ohio how extensive those imports were?

Mr. POMERENE. I do not think any statement was made to me as to that in any of the letters I have received. They simply referred to that as one of the ominous clouds appearing in the East which confronted the industries. I of course took the representations with a good many grains of allowance, as I do all of this legislation advocated by men inspired by a purely selfish interest

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Before the Finance Committee the testimony was that there might be some of this impending, but it was not extensive, here and there an isolated instance, but not sufficient for us to base legislative action on.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is the Senator from Indiana talking about the recent hearings?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Yes; our recent hearings.

Mr. SIMMONS. But we were talking about what happened with reference to the war supplies that were dumped.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Precisely; that is what I was talking about, the automobiles and trucks coming back to this country from France, after having been sold there by our Government, and sent back here for sale. There is very little of that being done. Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, no doubt every Senator received letters similar to those received by the Senator from Ohio from the automobile makers in the State from which he comes. received similar letters, and I had an investigation made by the Treasury Department. I think the basis of the complaint was that there were 70-odd trucks shipped and delivered at Los Angeles, and they were put on the market there at a lower price than that at which the same trucks made to-day in the United States could be sold.

They thought that was the beginning of a flood of trucks and automobiles into this country, but up to the present time there have been no automobiles brought in, unless it was after the report I got from the Treasury Department was submitted to me. But there were those 70 trucks which were imported into this country, trucks of American make, and they were sold to France at a very low price. However, I know of nothing else that has come into this country under similar circumstances.

I may add, however, that I am told there are about 500 air-planes which are being held up at the ports of the United States, not allowed to enter the United States on account of a patent dispute, and until that dispute has been decided they can not enter the United States. I do not know how long it will take.

Mr. POMERENE. What provision of law is there which prevents their entry?

Mr. SMOOT. It is a question of the infringement of a patent. Mr. POMERENE. Am I to understand that because there may be an infringement case pending the article which is the subject of that infringement may not be imported? Mr. SMOOT. That is as I have been told, Mr. President.

Mr. POMERENE. I would be delighted to see the provision of law under which it is done. I have never come in contact with it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think the interruption is going too far.

Mr. SMOOT. I was just about to close. I was going to say to the Senator that that only came to my attention the other

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Republican leaders of the House Mr. McCUMBER. I know it was claimed last year, and is still claimed, that there is danger of other countries dumping credited as without justification and as even absurd, as Senators now seem to regard these complaints of dumping, why, I ask, did the House leaders insert this antidumping provision in the House bill and upon what ground is it proposed to retain it in the Senate substitute, which only amends it in respect to its administrative features?

If there is no dumping now and was none, when all the markets of the belligerent countries of Europe were congested by the vast accumulations of war supplies design and sacrifice prices far in excess of domestic requirements, why was sacrifice prices far in excess of domestic requirements, why was the vast accumulations of war supplies dumped upon them at this antidumping provision inserted by the House? Why was it retained in the Senate substitute? And should it not be stricken out of the bill now?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hardly know how to answer the question

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not desire to embarrass the Senator from Utah, and I would not have addressed my question directly to Senators over there if I had thought it was going to embar-

Mr. SMOOT. It is not answering that is embarrassing. is rather embarrassing to undertake to answer a question that has been put in two forms. But I will assure the Senator it is not going to embarrass me in the least. The Senator asks why we struck the dumping provision out when the House put it in.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not ask that question. You did not strike it out. I asked why you did not strike it out.

Mr. McCUMBER. We did not insert it, because it was already there.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator asked why the antidumping provision was put in the bill if there was no dumping.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I would like to know.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it will be some time before the regular tariff bill is passed, and this country and some of the countries of Europe are getting back to normal, and the goods the Senator has referred to as sold to those other countries at such low prices have been consumed, to a large extent; they are getting to work in the old countries, and the fact that they have not been dumping in the past is no reason for supposing that they will not dump in the future, and with the depreciated currency in all of the countries of the world, when conditions get back to normal and the people begin to produce goods, as Germany is producing to-day, dumping could be carried on to a great extent in this country, and without an antidumping provision it will be carried on, and that is why we put that clause in there

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President— The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Ser Carolina yield to the Senator from Indiana? Does the Senator from North

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I yield to the Senator and any other Senator on that side. I want information.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. My understanding is that the Ways and Means Committee incorporated the antidumping clause, not because of dumping that was going on at the time of the passage of this act through the House-

Mr. SIMMONS. You should not put it in an emergency bill,

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Merely as an insurance policy a guaranty against future dumping, something that might happen.

Mr. SIMMONS. If that is so, I want to ask the Senator this question-

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Will not the Senator permit me to finish?

Mr. SIMMONS. I thought the Senator was through.
Mr. WATSON of Indiana. When the bill came over to our committee in the Senate, speaking only for myself, I would have been entirely willing to have stricken out the antidumping feature, but upon investigation on the House side which satisfied me, I found out they would not stand for it. Therefore, inasmuch as it had to be put in or have this legislation fail, we thought we would perfect it, and therefore we have changed it, and, I think, very greatly bettered it. Does the Senator think so?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think you have bettered the dumping feature, undoubtedly, in respect to its administrative features, but otherwise it is substantially the same.

Then we have this situation, Mr. President, at a time when it is admitted there is no dumping now, was none before the war, and has been none since, although post-war conditions were more favorable to dumping than present conditions or any conditions likely to arise during the life of this emergency bill, as a matter of insurance against the future; as the Senator from Indiana put it, it is deemed expedient in a six months' emergency bill to insert and retain an antidumping clause instead of waiting for the general tariff revision, now in process of framing, when you can provide for a possible future condition. An emergency tariff ought to address itself to conditions which exist at the time and not to conditions which may possibly, but not probably, arise in the future.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—

Mr. SIMMONS. If that is the only reason for putting this provision in an emergency tariff bill it is a reason which shows your bad faith. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does not the Senator believe, irrespective of whether there is any dumping going on now, that the permanent tariff bill at least should contain an antidumping provi-

Mr. SIMMONS. Oh, Mr. President—
Mr. McCUMBER. That is a fair question.
Mr. SIMMONS. Oh, perhaps, with conditions and qualifications in a permanent tariff bill, but only then to provide against a well-grounded expectation based on facts and conditions, not mere speculation as to possibilities. If the statements made by the Senator are accepted there is no ground for any apprehen-

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator is mistaken when he says that even the House Members believed at the time that dumping was going on. The Senator is in error in that respect. But let me say that the Senator is in error if he thinks the House put the antidumping provision in because they believed there was dumping at the present time. It reaches only to the future, and if it is put in a general tariff bill when there is no dumping going on to protect us against a future condition, while it may not be necessary in a temporary bill it certainly is not

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no doubt in the world that the House believed at the time that they passed it that there was a great deal of dumping. I believed it myself. I was of the opinion the members of the Finance Committee believed it was going on until they heard the statements of the customs officials.

Mr. McCUMBER. I for one did not believe it, and I have not believed for years that it was going on.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator voted in the Finance Committee to report the dumping bill that I introduced in the Senate and which was on the calendar at the last session of Con-

Mr. SIMMONS. No; the Senator is mistaken about that. I have not voted for your bills at all.

Mr. SMOOT. The antidumping bill that I have referred to the committee was approved in the committee, and I do not know of a vote against it, and it was then put on the calendar. Mr. SIMMONS. Very frequently I have not voted in the committee. That is a very different thing.

Mr. SMOOT. It contained very different provisions with reference to dumping as amended by the Senate committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. The point, and the only point I am seeking to make now, is that when this was incorporated in the bill it was incorporated because it was believed it would materially advance the exactions that would be laid upon foreign imports into this country and would reach the free list and would be a great benefit to that class of our industries that had heretofore been the beneficiaries of tariff protection. A mere apprehension as to the future would not justify such legislation in an emergency bill.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, if I recall correctly, as the so-called Underwood Tariff Act passed the House in 1913 and came to the Senate it contained an antidumping provision very much like that we have incorporated in the pending

Mr. SIMMONS. No.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. That is my recollection. Mr. SIMMONS. No. The provision of that law, if the Senator will pardon me, was that where there was underselling going on on the part of foreign producers or exporters for the purpose and with the intent of injuring or destroying an American industry it should be penalized.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Let me ask the Senator if the basis of the provision is not the same in this instance, because

Mr. SIMMONS. No; the element of intent was involved in the other bill. The provision at that time was intended to cover just such a case as that of the dye industry. It was said that deliberately, purposely, and intentionally the German dye monopoly was pursuing a course with the purpose and the intent and with the certain effect of destroying the establishment of the dye business in this country.

Mr. McCUMBER. It had to be systematically followed. Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I recall the provision very indistinctly, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. The provision was to meet a case like that, where a foreign monopoly or a foreign industry was selling its products in this country, not for the purpose of profit, not in the ordinary course and way of business, but with a view to destroying an industry already established in the United States or so as to prevent the establishment of a business in the United States. That was entirely different from the situation as we find it in connection with this bill.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The basis of the pending antidumping provision is that the Secretary of the Treasury must find that the dumping, whatever the article may be or in whatever quantities it may come, is not necessarily for the purpose of destroying an American industry, but that it may destroy an American industry or is likely to destroy it or to prevent the establishment of an American industry.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes. There is a provision of that kind in the antidumping clause of the pending bill, but the provision as to that in the act of 1916 is wholly different—that law is predicated on the intent and purpose of the exporter-the merchandise must have been brought in with the intent and purpose to destroy or injure an American industry, and so on.

The Senate committee provision is altogether different from the antidumping law of 1916. The Senate amendment simply provides that before the appraisers look for dumping the Secretary of the Treasury must have declared that importations were being brought into this country which were likely to injure an American industry or which would tend to prevent the establishment of an American industry. His finding is in no way conditioned on intent or purpose, while the intent and purpose is the predicate upon which action under the law of 1916 must be based.

Mr. President, under this bill it is not Mr. HITCHCOCK. even necessary that there should be in existence an American industry competing with the foreign product.

Mr. SIMMONS. Under the House provision, the Senator

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; even under the provision as reported by the Senate committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. Oh, no; it is not necessary that the industry should be in existence. If importations are being brought in for the purpose of preventing the establishment of an industry, or of an industry that is likely to be established, the provision applies.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the following language of the provision as reported by the Senate committee:

That whenever the Secretary of the Treasury, * * * after such investigation as he deems necessary, finds that an industry in the United States is being or is likely to be injured, or is prevented from

Mr. SIMMONS. Exactly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So that, while we may not even have an industry of a given character, somebody may agree that importations of a certain commodity may prevent such an industry being established.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is true, but that differs from the House provision very broadly. The House did not require any finding of that sort; but, on the other hand, the House required that there should be an investigation by the appraisers of every importation that came into this country, with a view to ascertaining whether it came within the definition of dumping.

The Senate amendment just read authorizes an investigation into dumping charged in any case only and when and after the Secretary makes the findings required by the language the Senator has just read.

The provision in question would unquestionably lodge in the Secretary of the Treasury a very broad and sweeping discretion. If the Secretary's findings call for an inquiry the only effect would be that the appraisers would investigate with a view to ascertaining whether the imported merchandise in question was subject to the penalty imposed upon dumping. In other words, to make the matter entirely clear, the finding of the Secretary simply starts an investigation, that is all. The House bill did not require any finding. It arbitrarily directed the appraisers to look for dumping in every case though there was no complaint or suspicion of that practice. The Senate provision would limit these investigations to cases where the Secretary finds that there is probable cause to suspect or believe there is dumping, and that that dumping would likely result in the injury to an American industry, or in preventing the establishment of an American industry. His finding simply starts the investigation, but the finding of dumping would not exclude the merchandise from this market. It would simply result in the Government assessing against it the dumping tax.

Mr. SMOOT. The difference, the Senator means. Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; the difference between the charged by the exporter and the market price in the country of origin. That is right.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to make a suggestion, I think the criticism of the Secretary's investigation does not lie in the fact that as a result of his investigation he may discriminate by levying a duty, because in the end the fact must be found that the customary market value in the country of export is greater than the selling price on American soil. If this power is abused—and I do not say that it will be abused, but, of course, the Secretary will detail the power to subordinates—the danger would come, it seems to me, if there should be an attempt to play favorites in the matter. The opportunity is in the negative way. As I understand the bill there is no power to apply the dumping clause until the Secretary, through his agents, investigates the fair market value and the fact, is ascertained that a condition exists where the sales in this country of a foreign product are below the customary sales at home. There is, however, no appeal from the Secretary's decision; there is no power to force him to act; and, of course, if there were discrimination it would give the opportunity to use that power exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury to apply the dumping clause in A's case and withhold it in B's case arbitrarily, because he did not proclaim that the idea of a fair market price had been violated.

I do not know whether I make myself clear to the Senator or not.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator does. The Senator, as I understand him, means that the Secretary might withhold the investigation in favor of one industry and order it against another industry

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly. In other words, it gives that arbitrary power. I do not say it will be abused, but I think it puts it in the dangerous position that all laws do where you leave to the discretion of individuals the finding of a great fact, whether it is an economic fact or a moral

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the Senator from North Carolina will allow me

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. We are face to face, however, with the counterproposition. As the bill came over from the House it was necessary to investigate in every instance whether or not the facts constituted dumping, and in addition to that the House bill required a bond if there was even a suspicion on the part of the collector that the goods were being sold for export to this country for a less price than they were sold for consumption in the home country.

That was considered an enormous hardship upon the importers, and the importers naturally complained of that, and I suppose it is entirely satisfactory to them that the bill was so changed that we would not impose this enormous duty and require the bond unless there was some suspicion or some evidence to the effect that it was a case of dumping. I think the Senator would necessarily find that there was just as much danger of a subordinate making his own complaint in one instance in favor of the proposition and in another instance against it as there would be in the case of the Secretary. This provision is simply made so that we will not make an investigation of every one of the imports into the United States, and look for dumping, and impose a penalty, and cause delay, unless there is reasonable ground to believe that there is that danger. The power to determine that reasonable ground must be lodged somewhere, and it seemed that the proper place to lodge it was in the Secretary of the Treasury

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think the Senator is right about that. I realize that the determination must be lodged somewhere, but I do not think you have put your finger on the right place. I do not want to interrupt the Senator from North Carolina in his speech if he desires to go on now. Mr. SIMMONS.

No. Mr. UNDERWOOD. If I am not disturbing the Senator, I will put this in.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is not disturbing me at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My experience in legislation is that where you can follow a track that has already been made, and you know how it works, it is safer to keep in the original

This dumping proposition is nothing new. Some eight years ago I spent some time in giving it study and thought; and although I am not as fresh on the matter now as I was at that time, at the time the present law was sent to the Senate it contained an antidumping clause relating to the tax value of goods that were on the taxable list and not on the free list. This bill extends it to the free list, but the provision in the House bill as it came to the Senate eight years ago, to a large extent, followed the Canadian antidumping clause. That is an antidumping clause that has been tried for years, and we know what it can do. That has been in operation, and we know from practical experience what can be accomplished by it; and it may be just as well, if the Senator from North Carolina does not mind, to let me read that clause right here and have it in the RECORD.

I am reading from H. R. 3321, Sixty-third Congress, first session, a bill to reduce tariff duties, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, that passed the House on May 8, 1913, and came to the Senate. Of course, this provision was afterwards stricken out in conference; but on page 220 of that bill, under section R, the antidumping clause reads as fellows:

That whenever articles are exported to the United States of a class or kind made or produced in the United States, if the export or actual selling price to an importer in the United States, or the price at which such goods are consigned is less than the fair market value of the same article when sold for home consumption in the usual and ordinary course in the country whence exported to the United States at the time of its exportation to the United States, there shall, in addition to the duties otherwise established, be levied, collected, and paid on such article on its importation into the United States a special duty (or dumping duty) equal to the difference between the said export or actual selling price of the article for export or the price at which such goods are consigned, and the said fair market value thereof for home consumption, provided that the said special duty shall not exceed 15 per cent ad valorem in any case, and that goods whereon the duties otherwise established are equal to 50 per cent ad valoren shall be exempt from such special duty.

"Export price" or "selling price" or "price at which such goods are consigned" in this section shall be held to mean and include the exporter's price for the goods, exclusive of all charges thereon after their shipment from the place whence exported directly to the United States

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, is not that practically section 202 of this bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Substantially?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not substantially at all, except that your provision relates to dumping and this provision relates to dumping; but the machinery of the two provisions is entirely dif-

In the first place, the machinery of your provision relates to every article which may come into the United States. You make it relate to those articles on the free list which, by your own legislation, you say there should be a tax on; but you say that for the benefit of the American people they should have them free of taxation, such as fertilizer and some classes of raw material. You also say, when you put them on the free list, that there is no danger from foreign competition; that your markets should be open to the world, and the domestic producer is in no danger from the importation of those articles. Yet, through a machinery set up by individuals, you can put that price, not only on the American consumer, but on industry, so as to hamper your industry in the future. I think it is most unwise to extend these provisions to the free list.

But that was not the proposition I intended to discuss. Under this provision and the Canadian dumping clause, which is the same, the man who is suffering from the fact that goods are taken into the country and threatening his business immediately complains, naturally. If he makes no complaint, there is no use bringing on the antidumping clause. But he is sure to be on guard. He will sound the alarm the minute he begins to feel that dumping is done, and then there is just one thing to be inaugurated, and that is for the collectors and the appraisers to find the fact as to whether the goods are being dumped here at prices below the normal, fair-value price in the home market, and that arbitrarily takes effect; that is the law. It is the law for all. But in your provision you do not make it the law for You put it in the power of one individual to withhold the law if he wants to or exercise the law if he wants to.

I am not charging that your Secretary of the Treasury will improperly use this law. Of course, he will not exercise his power under it personally; but I say you unnecessarily put into this bill a provision under which you leave the discretion, even where dumping takes place, to the arbitrary power of an individual, instead of putting in the law the conditions which shall govern as to whether the antidumping clause shall take effect or not. I beg the pardon of the Senator from North Carolina for interjecting these remarks, but I thought it might be well to have this clause discussed in that connection.

Mr. President, in the main I agree with the Mr. SIMMONS. Senator from Alabama. The machinery set up by the House bill would not only entail enormous expense, requiring a multitude of officers, but it would be impossible of administration. because the necessary facts would not in many instances be accessible or ascertainable. On the other hand, while the Senate amendment is a great improvement on the House provision. it is subject to the criticism made by the Senator from Alabama as well as that made by other Senators to the lodgment of arbitrary power in an administrative officer who would ordinarily act in the premises through his subordinates. It would probably be better to simply confine the investigations to cases where complaint is made and based on verified statements showing a reasonably grounded opinion that dumping was being practiced in the particular case.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield. Mr. CUMMINS. If it will not disturb the Senator from North Carolina, there is one matter I would like to have him, or somebody, make clear to me. I am wondering whether the phrase, "fair value," in section 201, is the equivalent of the phrase "foreign-market value" as used in section 202, which provides:

That whenever the Secretary of the Treasury * * * * after such investigation as he deems necessary, finds that an industry in the United States is being or is likely to be injured, or is prevented from being established, by reason of the importation into the United States of a class or kind of foreign merchandise, and that merchandise of such class or kind is being sold or is likely to be sold in the United States or elsewhere at less than its fair value.

What does the term "fair value" mean as used in that sectien? Is it the fair value in the United States, or the fair value in some foreign country? I am moved to make this inquiry because when we come to section 202, which is the section under which the antidumping provision is to be enforced, and which follows the finding of the Secretary of the Treasury, we find that the additional tax can only be levied where the purchase price, or the exporter's sales price, is less than the fereign market value. I would like to know whether those two phrases were used synonymously, or whether they were used to express a difference between the application of section 201 and the application of section 202.

Mr. SIMMONS. My attention had never been directed to that language in the way in which the Senator now calls it to my attention. I would assume, however, that the construction which would necessarily be placed upon that, taken in connection with the rule which obtains in ascertaining whether a product is dumped in this country, would be that the phrase "fair value" used in this connection there had reference to the relation between foreign market value and the price charged by the exporter, because the investigation which the Secretary is to inaugurate as the result of that finding is for the purpose, not of ascertaining whether the value is fair as compared with the American price, but whether it is fair considered in connection with the price with which it is to be compared and considered in order to determine and decide the question of dumping. The purpose of inquiry which the finding inaugurates to determine is whether there is a dumping—and the American market value has nothing to do with that.

In ascertaining whether there is dumping, you have to consider the export price and the market price in the country of the origin of the product, and only those two things have to be considered. If the export price is less than the market price in the country of origin, then there is dumping; otherwise there is no dumping. So it would seem that you would have to interpret "fair price" with reference to that definition and the objective of the investigation.

Mr. SMOOT. It says "importation into the United States"; so it must refer to foreign goods.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Secretary of the Treasury must first act and find that a particular commodity is coming into this country at less than its fair value. What is the fair value?

Mr. SIMMONS. There is nothing in that section which defines "fair value." There is nothing anywhere in the bill which defines "fair value." The point I am making is that by content of the section of struction that language would seem to refer to the value which enters into the determination of the question of whether there is dumping or no dumping.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then it ought to be "fair foreign-market value," or "foreign-market value."

Mr. SIMMONS. The question is whether the value is a fair one, determined by the price at which the article is exported to this country, as compared with the home-market price.

Mr. CUMMINS. What does the Senator from North Dakota say about that?

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator from North Carolina will allow me, I think when you use the words "fair value" it practically means the cost of production in the foreign country; that is, a fair cost.

For instance, for the purpose of taxation, outside of the antidumping clause, an article may be manufactured for $1. It may be sold in the foreign country for $2, and there is a good, big profit made upon it. Yet, that is the foreign sales value. But in the case of the antidumping provision, if we want to determine whether it is sold for less than a fair value, then we do not take as the basis the market price for which the thing is sold; but if the Secretary finds that it is really being sold for exportation at a price less than it really cost to produce it and still at a reasonable profit in the country of production, it would come under the antidumping provision; and there should be that clear distinction between the foreign market value for the purpose of levying your tariff and a fair value for determining whether or not an article is being dumped into this country for the purpose of destroying an industry.

Mr. CUMMINS. If you mean a fair value as determined by the cost of production in the country which produces it, with a fair profit added, I think you ought to say so. I do not think the fair value necessarily means the cost of production with a profit added. Oftentimes the fair value of an article may be much less than its cost of production or without regard to profit. It seems to me that, in order to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to perform the duty which he is charged with under this section, you ought to make his duty somewhat clearer than it now is.

Mr. SIMMONS. I agree with the Senator that the language needs definition. I had not noticed it. I think it is very obscure and should be clarified by amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Under Title II, section 203, the rule is laid down for finding out the purchase price, and they follow that section in determining what the purchase price shall be.

Then, as the Senator from North Dakota said, in the antidumping provision all we can say is what is a fair price based upon the purchase price as laid down in the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. In section 201 the term "fair price" is not used.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; we say "fair value." Mr. CUMMINS. Neither section 202 nor section 203 can be put in operation until the Secretary of the Treasury, under section 201, has performed his function. His function is to say whether a given commodity coming in is likely to come into this country at less than its fair value. Looking at it, not from the standpoint of a Treasury expert, because I do not know much about these things, but from the standpoint of a lawyer, I express the opinion that the Secretary of the Treasury would find it impossible without a good deal of legislative interpre-tation to determine what his duty is.

Mr. SMOOT. Under section 201 it is simply an investigation. The question of the foreign market value is to be determined when the special dumping duty is imposed, but in this investigation-and that is all there is to it, to see whether a special dumping duty is to be imposed—if such a special dumping duty is to be imposed, then we have to find out the foreign market value.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. I have no objection to either section 202 or 203, but the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury under section 201 is something more than mere investigation. He must investigate and then issue an order. He publishes an order to the effect that a given commodity, naming it, or series of commodities, naming them, is or are coming into this country at less than a fair value. I should like to know where that fair value is to be ascertained and by what rules it is to be I think it would not be difficult to do it.

Mr. SMOOT. I can only say that, taking a case just as it would come up if the bill were enacted into law, there might be some producer of a certain article in the United States complain that goods of a similar character that were being imported into this country were being imported at less than a fair value,

Mr. CUMMINS. Fair value ascertained in Great Britain or fair value ascertained in Germany or in France, or in what country, or in our own country?

Mr. SMOOT. In whatever country it came from.

Mr. CUMMINS. It does not say so.

Mr. SMOOT. But it must be, because the complaint would be that the goods from France or the goods from England or the goods from Germany that came in here were coming in at less than a fair value, and therefore the investigation is made, and section 201 authorizes that investigation.

In that investigation it is found from the testimony that is given that the goods came in at less than a fair value. if that thing happens, immediately they commence to make an investigation as to what the foreign market value is, so as to impose the dumping duty.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand; that is section 202.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. But, as I repeat, section 201 has first to be complied with before section 202 can be operative. thing I have in mind is this: It seems to me quite possible that under section 201, with its somewhat, I think, inaccurate expression, the Secretary of the Treasury could raise the duties upon every article and commodity that comes into the United States, even though there is nothing like the dumping which we have ordinarily in mind when we speak of dumping.

Mr. SMOOT. Before that could be done there would have to be complaint and investigation made, and I do not think there is any Secretary of the Treasury or any appraiser in the Government service who would for a moment make such a decision after fair investigation and fair value had Leen established. But I will say to the Senator there are many goods that will be shipped into this country where we will know upon the face of them that there is not a fair value.

Mr. CUMMINS. I wish to reach those cases.

Mr. SMOOT. If we put in the fair market value, every investigation would lead the Secretary of the Treasury, as the law provides, to an investigation of the foreign market value. This is the only place where we say "fair value." Every other place in the bill it says foreign market value, and that is the reason we did not want to go to the foreign market to find that out. We can find it out here.

Mr. CUMMINS. Every place in the bill, so far as I am able to see, other than this section, where the words value or market price have been used, they have been carefully defined, so that really the work of application is made easy. This is the only place in which there is no definition, and the latitude, I venture to say, is very great.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it ought to be. I think in this particular case, where investigation is to be made, the Secretary of the Treasury ought to have latitude, because there are instances of goods coming in here which, upon examination of the goods and comparison with goods coming from other foreign countries, show that there is not a fair market value given. In such cases as that we would not have to go to the foreign country to make an investigation, but we would know upon the face of the situation that it was not a fair value, and we would then put the machinery in operation. After that, when the special dumping duty applies and the purchase price must be established, section 202 and section 203 go into minutest detail and we say whether it is the home price or American price or whether it is the foreign price and what constitutes the purchase price, either in the foreign country or in this country.

Mr. CUMMINS. I apologize to the Senator from North Caroline for interrupting him in this way.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have been very glad to yield to the Senator from Iowa. Undoubtedly the language used is obnoxious to the criticism the Senator makes. The only guide the Secretary would have in finding the fair price would be, as it appears to me, the objective of the investigation his findings would start, and as the result of that would be determined by whether the price charged by the exporter is below or above the market price in the country of exportation the standard would have to be the foreign market value.

Friday, May 6, 1921.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] on yesterday, in the course of certain colloquies in interruptions made in my speech, called attention to the uncertainty of the phrase "fair value" as used in the antidumping provision of the bill in connection with the required findings of the Secretary of the Treasury antecedent to investigation to determine whether or not there was dumping. I stated then that I thought that language would have to be construed in connection with the context and the purpose of the inquiry, and that in that sense it would probably be construed to mean the "fair market price" in the country of exportation. While I think that is true as a legal proposition and is the construction that should be given to this language, I feel after reflection that in a matter of such importance the obscurity should be removed, if it can be done without handicap to the purpose in view by clarifying emendation.

Mr. President, I spent a great deal of time yesterday in discussing dumping. I did it deliberately and purposely. For months and months my patience has been, if not exhausted, severely tested and taxed by the never-ceasing cry of "Dumping!" "Dumping!" I could hardly open my mail, morning or afternoon, without having to read letters from somebody telling me about some countries dumping in this country the character of goods they produce or in which they deal. I could not undertake the reading of the House hearings on the tariff without having to wade through all sorts of longdrawn-out stories of the ruin threatened or being inflicted upon this and that industry by the wholesale dumping of like foreign goods into this country-stories about the Danes dumping butter into this country, Dutch dumping cheese into this country, France dumping elives, Egypt dumping cotton, China dumping peanuts, Germany dumping a part of almost everything she produces into this country, all to be sold at sacrifice cost prices, greatly to the injury of the complaining industry. The atmosphere of the Committee on Finance and of the Committee on Ways and Means, when hearing the testimony of these people who came here seeking special favors through tariff duties, reeked with the odor of dumping. The House committee wrote this bill and inserted this antidumping clause in it under the influence of the sentiment generated and nourished in that atmosphere. In all this and the other propaganda out of which this bill with this antidumping clause had inception and birth there was no suggestion of relatively high prices of imported merchandise; the talk was low prices and competition with goods produced by pauper and underpaid wages and offered here at starvation prices.

When the bill came to the Senate some of us ventured to suggest that this provision and the currency valuation clause would establish a system of customs taxes not only unequal in application and uncertain in amount, but in many cases exorbitantly high, resulting in injustice to the American consumer and the serious disturbance of our foreign trade.

Under these circumstances the Senate committee met, called experts, supposed by reason of official knowledge, observation, and experience to be informed as to the essential facts upon which these provisions were necessarily predicated, and as a result of their testimony, and possibly a change of policy resulting therefrom, when the bill gets into the Senate and is taken up for discussion the whole line of argument is changed and we are assured by the other side of this Chamber through its spokesman upon the Finance Committee that the provision is practically innocuous; that there is no dumping going on here now, and that there never has been any dumping here in the sense of the definition in the bill, and that the provision was inserted in the House bill and had been retained in the Senate substitute because of a fear or of possibility that the unexpected might happen and that what has not happened in the past may peradventure happen in the future.

Mr. President, it was this situation that moved me in my remarks on yesterday to endeavor to test out the facts and grounds of the attitude of the majority upon this provision. In view of the statement made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber], in his opening speech of the day before, the apparent attitude of the other side of the Chamber with respect to this matter was somewhat confusing and I wanted to try out the thing. I wanted to get the facts. The people had undoubtedly been led to believe that there was a great amount of dumping going on in this country. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] in his speech had said there was no dumping. I wanted to see what the other Republican Senators, especially those on the Finance Committee, had to say with respect to this provision of the bill. I wanted to present the dumping question in such a way that they would express themselves if the Senator from North Dakota did not reflect the real opinion of the other side of the Chamber with reference to this question.

Again, the Senator from North Dakota in his speech had confined himself largely to the situation with respect to Germany, and I wanted to find out if there was no dumping from Germany whether there was anyone on the majority side who claimed there was dumping here from anywhere else, so I asked yesterday if there was no dumping from Germany was there any from Great Britain or any other European country. I was solemnly assured by Senators on the other side that there was none. I inquired if it was claimed that there was dumping from any part of the world. I wanted no doubt about the record in respect to this matter. I wanted the record made clear and unmistakable. And so, Mr. President, when hereafter we hear these charges of dumping, when we hear these complaints of the people, we shall be able to say that it has been openly admitted by the party in power upon the floor of the Senate, in the face of the American people, that there is no dumping which the antidumping measure they will soon enact in response to the demand of the people for effective protection against dumping will reach and remedy.

Mr. President, I wanted also to find out why, since they claimed there was no dumping, the majority party had put this antidumping provision in the House bill it was proposed to keep after they discovered it was innocuous. The answer was that there may be dumping in the future, and if it does no good it will do no harm.

Again, I sought to learn why it was thought necessary or expedient under these circumstances to put this provision in a six months' emergency bill when a general and permanent measure was in preparation. To this definite question no answer was forthcoming or could be obtained. I took up a good deal of time yesterday in discussing these phases of the antidumping clause, and I think it was time well spent.

Let us consider briefly the several positions as developed in these discussions of the majority with respect to this antidumping provision of the bill.

Does the situation show an emergency? Surely it does not, There is no emergency. First, because it is confessed there is no case where any foreign country is or has been selling us goods for less than the price charged in its own markets, and that is the kind of dumping defined in the bill and which is penalized—no other dumping comes within its provisions.

There is no emergency in this case because there is no dumping-just as there is no emergency in the case of the agricultural products embraced in the bill, because in the case of many of these products, such as corn, there are practically no imports and no amount of duty could affect the domestic price, because in cases where the importation, as in the case of peanuts and vegetable oils, the alleged influx claimed at the time this measure was first determined upon—if it then existed—has ceased, and importations in every such case have in recent months not increased as the proponents of the bill claimed, but on the contrary have rapidly and continuously decreased until to-day they are comparatively negligible. In other words, the assumption of facts upon which the necessity and emergency is predicated do not exist—in some cases never did exist-and in others if they ever existed have ceased to exist.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President-The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRELD in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SIMMONS. In just a moment. In the case of dumping, Mr. President, people who complained from one end of the country to the other came to the Congress and asked the Republican Party to help, and instead of giving them bread the Republican Party, as frankly admitted upon this floor, has given them a stone. The farmers throughout this country have come here complaining of the situation and asking relief from this Congress, and, as in the case of dumping, they offer them relief which is utterly ineffective to cure the evil. In the case of the farmer, as in the case of the complainant against dumping, the Republican Party has nothing to offer him except a

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I would suggest a "gold instead of a stone.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is more descriptive of what it is, far more descriptive, and I thank the Senator for the expression.

I now yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am examining the hearings before the Committee on Finance, and I find the testimony of Mr. Doherty at page 98, and I am wondering how the committee regarded Mr. Doherty's attitude and what value they placed upon his statements.

Mr. SIMMONS. My recollection is that Mr. Doherty gave about as illuminating and as clear and as full testimony as anybody who appeared before the committee. He is now engaged in some private business, but for 18 or 20 years, I think, he had been connected with the Customs Service.

Mr. FLETCHER. I find the following on page 98:

Senator Reed. Do you know of any instances where they are seiling abroad cheaper than they are at home?

Mr. Dohery. I do not. But on that point the gentleman will recall the testimony of one of the Government witnesses, Mr. Davis, who said there is no dumping at the present time. There could not be under present conditions. It reminds me very much of that chapter on Snakes in Ireland. There are no snakes in Ireland. In the matter of antidumping, there is no dumping going on now at alk.

Then Senator SIMMONS asked him:

Can you give the committee, from your investigations, any idea about how much these prices have increased over prewar prices, measured in percentage?

That is, the foreign price. Mr. Doherty answered:

I do not know whether we have reduced these to percentages, gen-

Senator SIMMONS, Give them approximately.

Mr. DOHERTY, Approximately, from 25 per cent up to 400 and 500 per cent in some instances. For example, these gloves that I have mentioned advanced from $2 to $3.68. That would be pretty near 80 per cent increase.

Then, on page 103, the following occurred:

Senator Reed. As a matter of fact, you claim, then, that this bill, if it is passed, will operate distinctly in favor of Germany and Austria and those countries, or against them?

Mr. Doherty. It will close our markets to those countries. It will be an embargo, in effect, against the goods from Central European countries, from Poland, Austria, Jugoslavia, Germany, Rumania—Senator Simmons. It applies only to countries where there has been a depreciation in the value of the currency?

Mr. Doherty. Yes.

That seems to bear directly on that question, both as to the increase of prices in foreign countries and also on the question of dumping.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Doherty is right. Germany is selling her goods and merchandise in our markets for prices higher than she sold them to us before the war; so are most other foreign countries. Germany sells here in some cases 100 per cent higher than similar goods are sold in the German home There is no dumping in her case, because the bill defines dumping to be the selling in our own markets of foreignmade goods at less than goods of a similar character are habitually sold in the market of the country of production. So there is no technical dumping in the case of Germany, or possibly any other foreign country. We are probably the only country that dumps, according to that definition, and so dump habitually.

But it is not of technical dumping the people complain. As much harm may be done by selling only slightly above a low foreign market price as slightly below. What the people demanded was relief against either practice. This bill denies that relief. It provides against a condition which Senators say does not exist and refuses relief against a condition which the people claim does exist and which it would seem may be equally hurtful.

The Republican majority are apparently preparing to say to these complainants, "We did the best we could; we passed an antidumping law," just as they are preparing to say to the farmers, "We did our best; we put a duty on your products," though they know a duty will be futile in accomplishing what they ask, namely, to establish a remunerative price for his products. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] said if this antidumping clause would do no good it would do no harm. They may say the same thing about the duty this bill puts on corn and some other articles it includes which tariff duties can not possibly help. But is it true in either case that such fake remedies can do no harm? I think the practice to promote partisan purposes discredits legislation, shows its bad faith, and that can not be other than hurtful.

Is there any justification for this fear-this alleged apprehension-now practically admitted to be the only reason or excuse for retaining this provision penalizing a kind of technical dumping admitted not to exist at this time?

The proponents of this provision claim that the reason there is no dumping now is because the bill defines dumping to be the selling of foreign goods by the exporter in this country at a price below the prevailing price in the country of production for home consumption and that the standard of prices in this country are and always have been higher than in any other country in the world. In these conditions naturally the foreign exporter wants to get the benefit of these higher prices and so places upon the goods sent to this country a higher price than he could get in the home market-and for that reason though he sell here below the American level he is not chargeable with dumping. But they say this situation may change, and because of their apprehension that it will or may they have retained and insist upon retaining this provision in the bill. Do Senators believe we are in danger of losing our primacy of maintaining the highest level of prices in the world? I do not believe it. Our prices, whether high or low, have always been relatively higher than those of other countries. They may fall here, but if so they will also fall elsewhere—the relative range will remain in our favor.

If our present higher prices cause the foreign exporter to invoice his goods to us at prices above those prevailing in his own country, he will by the same token continue to do the same thing as long as our prices remain relatively higher than those of his own country, and there will be no dumping.

I have already spoken too long upon the subject, but before I leave it I want to say just one thing more about it. Mr. President, the thing we condemn in this statute and penalize if done to us we ourselves have done and have long done systematically and habitually to every nation in the world. Indeed, our great and growing export trade has been built up through systematic dumping as a national policy; especially is this true with respect to our great organized and monopolized industries. We have, as we always have had and will continue to have, the high- 1.60 cents per mark, in excess of the prices at which she sold us est standard of prices in America that obtains in the world. these conditions it must be apparent we could not and can not successfully compete in the open markets of the world and sell our surplus there unless we are willing to sell below the American level. The price level of every country on the globe is below ours, and when we enter their markets in world competition we must come down to their price level or get out of the contest. That would in present conditions mean national disaster. not suggesting retaliation. I am simply suggesting the inexpediency and unwisdom, not to say foolhardiness, of the great dumper nation of the world denouncing and penalizing other nations for doing to us what we habitually, as a supposedly necessary business policy, have done and continue and must continue to do to them, and that for no reason except a vague and apparently ungrounded fear that at some time in the future dumping here, which it is admitted does not exist, may develop.

It is a course which, in my opinion, will inevitably make a bad impression abroad-which will be of doubtful good from a business standpoint and may, from an international standpoint, do positive harm, as well as subject us to the suspicion and charge of national uncharitableness and selfishness

Mr. President, it may be that the dumping provision in this bill is innocuous. If it is innocuous, it ought to be stricken out, and if some real remedy is needed, a substitute ought to be offered which would cover the case, and not a bill which is so restricted by definition that it includes nothing.

But, however that may be, with reference to the dumping clause, the foreign currency valuation clause in the bill as it passed the House, and in the Senate amendment to that bill, is a provision which will operate to increase, and increase to a very large extent, the amount of taxes which the ultimate consumer in this country will have to pay upon all articles of merchandise on the dutiable list in one bill from certain countries of Europe, South America, and Asia, possibly; but in the other as to merchandise from any part of the globe.

Under the bill as it passed the House, Mr. President, we have a scheme of determining the value of foreign coin by legislative enactment. We arbitrarily fix that value which in effect, in its actual application, as to importations to this country, in many instances, notably in the case of Germany, will increase from three to four times the valuation basis upon which tariff duties are to be collected. Of course, Mr. President, there is no change in the present tariff duty; that is not necessary under this scheme. Under this scheme there is a different method of valuing foreign imports from that which obtains under the present law.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SIMMONS. In just a moment. So that the present tariff rates in their entirety are retained as to everything not specially provided for in the tariff emergency provisions of this bill, but a different basis of valuing foreign goods for applying customs taxes is provided, namely, a legislative fixing of the gold value of the paper currency of a foreign country selling us merchandise and invoicing them at prices expressed in the currency of their country. This price is converted into gold not at the market exchange price but at this arbitrary legislative rate.

Now, I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts. Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I ask the Senator to give at some time a concrete illustration of how this valuation works

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall try to do that. Mr. President, that is the bill as it passed the House. Under this provision defining the basis of valuation and changing it, in answer to the question of the Senator from Massachusetts, it is fair to say that only those countries will be affected seriously by this provision of the bill as it passed the House whose currency is depreciated.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That means nearly all countries in Europe now.

Mr. SIMMONS. Nearly all countries of Europe and probably some other countries. In that respect the Senate committee amendment differs. The provision contained in the Senate committee amendment will have a broader application.

Mr. President, the bill as it passed the House does not change the method of valuation at the customhouse. It only defines the value of foreign currency converted into gold; foreign currency valuation will be converted on the basis of exchange rate fixed in the bill.

According to all the testimony, Germany is to-day importing goods to this country and selling them upon the American market, at prices estimated in gold on the conversion basis of similar products before the war, and in many instances, according to the testimony of the witnesses, approximately as high as the prices that obtain in the American market for American goods. German goods which are coming in now pay on this basis of currency exchange on a higher valuation at the customhouse than the valuation on which they paid before the war. The amount of revenue this Government is getting from them under the present law is more than it was getting from them before the war under the present law.

Yet the House says that, in order to further restrict importations into this country hereafter, the German mark, for the purpose of determining the value of these German goods in the customhouse, shall be estimated at not less than onethird of the face value of the paper mark. Now, the face value of the paper mark is something over 23 cents; I forget the exact fraction. One-third of that would be the customhouse basis of calculation for the purpose of conversion under this House bill provision, so that hereafter in converting the marks into gold to ascertain the price on which German goods would be taxed, instead of calculating a mark as worth 1.6 cents, it would be calculated as worth about 7.5 cents, over three times as much as at present exchange rate. Automatically that would have the effect of greatly raising the valuation of the German goods for the purpose of customs taxation.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. So that if an American purchaser invested a thousand gold dollars in German goods that had been imported to this country, those goods would be valued at over $3,000 for the purpose of taxation at the customhouse in New York.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is my understanding. The goods are invoiced in paper marks and converted into gold on the basis of 7 cents per mark instead of 1.60 per mark. Of course, that would not be so glaring in many other cases as it is in the case of Germany. Her currency is enormously depreciated. It is worth almost nothing at this time.

The House provision is an absolute legislative monstrosity. There is no explanation of its inclusion in the bill by that body except that they intended that this should be not a protective levy, but that it should operate as an absolute and complete embargo against importation of all products coming from countries having greatly depreciated currency. The Senate substitute is not so bad. It has a broader application, it is true, but it is not so bad. The Senate substitue eliminates the currency valuation provision as proposed by the House and substitutes for it a different method of valuation of foreign imports, as I have before explained.

Under the existing law the imports are valued at the customhouse for purposes of taxation at the price at which those goods are ordinarily sold in the markets of the country of origin. The testimony was that in many cases, especially goods from Germany, exporters and importers were selling here at from 25 to 100 per cent more than the home market price. The Senate substitute provides that for the purposes of levying duties upon imports from all countries the valuation shall hereafter be fixed either at the market price of the merchandise in the country of origin or the exporter's sales price, whichever is the higher of the two in the law.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Is there any precedent in previous tariff legislation for that system of valuation?

Mr. SIMMONS. None in this country. Some Senator said that was a just provision—that is, that in his opinion it furnished the proper basis for valuation for the levying of tariff

The answer to that is that while it may possibly be defended in principle, yet in many instances it will operate very harshly against imports from one country and bear very lightly upon imports from another country.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—
Mr. SIMMONS. Just permit me to conclude this thought, and then I will yield.

However that may be, it is a very late day for the Republican Party to discover that in all the years during which they have been passing tariff bills in this country it has never occurred to them heretofore that it would be just or expedient to value imports upon the basis of the exporters' sales price rather than upon the basis of the market value in the country of exporta-There is not a tariff law upon the statute books, and the Republicans have put many there, that varies this general principle of valuation. They all recognize the selling price in the market of origin as the fair and proper measure of value for the purpose of taxation.

I now yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator if the difference between the export price and the selling price in the country of origin has varied to any great extent prior to the currency difficulties that now exist.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think it has varied in different markets. Mr. McCUMBER. How much?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know. I am not prepared to answer that question.

Mr. NORRIS. I was wondering if there was any material

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me answer that in this way: Senators on the other side when we were discussing the question said that it is perfectly natural that Germany should be valuing these products for purposes of export twice as high as the price at which they can be sold in Germany, because naturally Germany wants to get the full benefit of the high prices that obtain in the American market, and therefore she sends her goods here valued and to be sold at higher prices than they sell for in her own country; otherwise she would not get the benefit of our high prices, and naturally she wants to get the benefit of those high prices.

If that is the reason why Germany is doing this thing, can the Senator tell me why that reason should not apply hereafter as well as now, when things have become normal?

Mr. NOPRIS. He would charge the highest price he could, but the point is, without discussing the propriety of those two prices, which I presume is a fact and seems to be undisputed, that I am not asking the Senator to explain the difference in It seems to be an existing fact. The point on which I was tryin, to get light was whether that kind of condition ever existed before. If it did not, then of course there would have been no reason for changing the basis of the relations.

Mr. SIMMONS. I presume in some countries it did exist. For instance, Egypt raises 1,500,000 bales of long-staple cotton. That is not enough to supply the demands of the world. By reason of the fact that she is the only country that produces it, except about 60,000 bales which are produced in this country, she has a monopoly of long-staple cotton. There is an active market everywhere. The price in the British market, There is an the price in the American market, the price everywhere is very high. Great Britain and America are in competition for that cotton and their competition makes the foreign price very high. But I imagine there has been a time, if it does not exist now, when the home market for this cotton in Egypt was very low compared with the price in other countries.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me, if the Senator wishes to discuss the reason for that difference in price, that it must be that wherever there is a difference in price there is no very great competition between purchasers for home consumption and purchasers for export. In the case of Egypt, to which the Senator refers, whoever owned the cotton would sell it wherever he could get the most money for it, and if there was a demand and a shortage in the world of that product the exporters, if they were paying a higher price, would get it all, and there would be none left for home consumption. In other words, the point I wish to make is that if there were free and unrestricted competition the domestic price and the export price would be somewhere about the same.

Mr. SIMMONS. To a large extent that would be 50, but not always. The illustration I gave with reference to Egypt is more strikingly brought out and emphasized by the situation that exists in China and Japan, but especially in China. China is a great producer of peanuts, which is an essential article of food in China. China consumes enormous quantities of peanuts. She has to import very frequently many million bushels, but notwithstanding that she sells to foreign markets every year a large amount of peanuts and buys from other countries where she can get them cheaper. The price of peanuts in the markets of that country is materially lower than the price they are invoiced and sold at here, and when those peanuts arrive in this country they are sold but little below the domestic price. I mean by that the exporter's sales price is very little below the prevailing American price and very much more than the domestic market price in China.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a perfectly fair question upon the real matter at issue, and he can answer it in any way he sees fit?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.
Mr. McCUMBER. Leaving out of consideration the wickedness of the Republican Party and the equally satanic impulses of the Republican members of the Finance Committee—

Mr. SIMMONS. They are fine fellows, all of them.

Mr. McCUMBER. And getting right down to the simple proposition, suppose that an article is produced in Germany and sold for 25 cents. The same article is sold for export in Germany for 50 cents. The American price of the same article is $1. The importer pays 50 cents for that article. He can get $1 for it in the United States, making a good, fair remuneration and profit. If he gets the American price and can sell at that profit, ought he not to pay the Government a tax based upon the 50 cents, rather than a tax based upon the 25 cents? In other words, should not the Government have that benefit rather than put it into the pocket of the importer, at the same time leaving sufficient for the importer to make a good profit?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I am not saying that the principle upon which the proposed system of valuation is based is not defensible. There is the viewpoint which the Senator now suggests. It is very strange, however, that the idea has never before occurred to the Republican Party. As a matter of policy, we could adopt it in this country, and possibly, although it would work hardship upon some countries and would be discriminately favorable to other countries, it could be defended in principle; if we wanted to adopt that standard in a tariff bill we could do so, and I do not think it would be the subject of any very serious controversy.

Mr. McCUMBER. It has not been adopted heretofore, let me say to the Senator, because the invoice price has practically at all times corresponded with the foreign selling price.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I am not complaining of the principle which has been applied in this provision for the first time in the history of this country. What I am complaining of is that it is a device adopted at this particular juncture in an emergency tariff bill, not for the purpose of changing the method or standard of valuation-that is not the essential thing which Senators have in mind-but they have put this provision into the bill for the purpose-and it will accomplish that purposeof increasing at an indefinite and uncertain rate the amount of taxes which will have to be paid at the customhouse under the present tariff act upon every article of merchandise which comes from certain countries of the world.

Mr. President, if it is desired to put this provision into the general tariff bill, let it be done, and then let the taxes be levied upon that foundation. I want to say to Senators now that upon the proposed basis of valuation the amount of taxes which we shall collect at the customhouse from imports from more than half of Europe—indeed, from nearly one-half of the world, for the law applies to other countries besides the countries of Europe-the taxes which will be collected at the customhouses under the present law will be very much higher in many instances than those which would be collected under the old valuation if the Payne-Aldrich law were in force, and in some instances they will be 100 or 200 per cent greater.

This provision should not be adopted as a tax provision except in connection with a general revision of tariff duties, because in fixing tariff duties the valuation basis of importation is an important factor and element for consideration in determining the just and proper rate of duties. The present rates were fixed with reference to the lower basis of valuation, and if you change that standard to the higher basis of the exporter's selling price you automatically and unequally increase the amount of the taxes to be paid. Logically, you would not levy as high a tariff rate to accomplish your purpose, whether it be revenue or protection, on the higher valuation as on the lower. Hence I say this basis of valuation can not with fairness to the consumer as well as to the exporter be fixed except in connection with a general revision of the tariff schedules

It is proposed through this provision of the bill, Mr. President, to levy a tax upon the people-an indirect, hidden, indefinite, and unequal tax-the amount of which is unascertained and which it will take time to investigate and ascertain, by applying the present tariff rates to a different and much higher basis of valuation than the one they were fixed and enacted to be applied to.

When a tariff duty is levied the people know what taxes are being put upon them; they are written upon the face of the Every man knows what burdens the Government has asked him to assume, but here it is proposed to levy a tax upon all the people of this country, with slight information in advance as to how much present taxes will be increased. This is a dangerous precedent in imposing taxes, and one which, Mr. President, ought not to be resorted to except in connection with a readjustment of tariff rates.

Mr. President, I wish to put into the Record a statement furnished me by certain tariff experts, some of whom testified before the Finance Committee, who have addressed themselves to the study of this question, giving as approximately as they can within the time for investigation the increases in valuations of certain articles of foreign merchandise if the valuation provision reported by the Senate committee is adopted.

It will be seen, taking Germany, for instance, that on all kinds of beads the increase in valuation will be over 50 per cent; on certain cheeses coming from Italy the valuation will be increased 144 per cent; on certain other classes of cheese coming from Italy the increase will be 581 per cent; on confectionery of a certain kind coming from Austria the valuation will be increased 1872 per cent; on surgical instruments from Germany the valuation will be increased from 833 to 50 per cent; artificial horsehair from Germany is increased in valuation 120 per cent; lighting fixtures from Czechoslavakia, from 100 to 150 per cent; drawing instruments from Germany, from 75 to 135 per cent; rifles from Austria, from 50 to 100 per cent; china-ware from Germany, from 100 to 150 per cent; fancy goods, from 50 to 200 per cent; dinner ware from Czechoslavakia, from 30 to 80 per cent; earthenware of a certain kind from Germany, from 50 to 100 per cent; and so on, the rates increasing to a greater extent on commodities imported from some countries than in the case of other countries.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, the list which the Senator is reading was inserted in the RECORD yesterday by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose].

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well; then I will content myself with the reference to the articles to which I have called attention.

Mr. President, I desire to insert in the Record a comparison in parallel columns in connection with the alternative-valuation methods proposed by the Senate committee substitute. The comparison shows the method of measuring the foreign market value—that is, country of origin—and the export value; that is, the price at which the exporter sells the merchandise.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the comparison will be printed in the RECORD.

The comparison referred to is as follows:

Rules prescribed in Title III, sections 302 and 303, for ascertainment of value for the purpose of assessing ad valuem duties.

FOREIGN MARKET VALUE.

Pointies Market values.

Price at which such merchandise is sold or freely offered for sale to all purchasers in the principal markets of the country from which exported in the usual wholesale quantities and in the ordinary course of trade for home consumption (if not so sold or offered for sale, then for export to countries other than the United States).

This price shall include:

1. Cost of all covering or con-

2. All costs, charges, and ex-penses incident to placing in con-dition, packed for shipment to United States.

Time: Price at time of such exportation, or as of date of such purchase or agreement to purchase.

EXPORT VALUE.

Price at which similar merchandise is sold or freely offered for sale to all purchasers in the principal markets of the exporting country, in the usual wholesale quantities and in the ordinary course of trade for exportation to the United States.

This price shall include: 1. Cost of all covering or containers.

2. All costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition, packed for shipment to the United States.

3. Amount of any export duty by exporting country.

This price shall not include: 1. Costs, charges, United States import duties and expenses incident to bringing from place of shipment to place of delivery in United States.

Mr. SIMMONS. It will be seen from this statement that the two methods of value differ in two respects: First, market value is based upon the price for home consumption; and, second, the export value is based upon the price of exportation. value does not include the tax imposed upon the exportation of the article, while the export valuation includes any export tax that may be imposed by the country of production.

Thus, Mr. President, if we adopt the higher export price we not only levy a tariff tax upon the merchandise but we levy a tariff tax upon the export tax, which export tax also operates as a protective-tariff duty for the benefit of the American producer. So the American producer in his competition gets the benefit of the export tax, and then the amount of that export tax is actually required to pay a tariff tax in this country for his further protection. I will not discuss that further.

Mr. President, I have been examining the report made by the Finance Committee upon this bill. In that report they bodily copy the report of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, drafted, I suppose, by Mr. Young, whose name that bill bears. In that report I read as follows:

There is now a large surplus of farm products in this country caused partly from under consumption, but chiefly by the dumping here of great quantities of foreign products. This surplus will continue to increase so long as present world conditions exist.

Mr. President, I can see how a man might have said that six months ago with some show, at least, of justification, when temporarily imports to this country were inflated, largely, as I said yesterday, as the result of the enormous war supplies of the various allies and the Central Powers which had been thrown upon the market and had to be absorbed, and were seeking a market anywhere it could be found, at any prices which could be obtained; but it passes my comprehension how any man with reasonable knowledge of the facts as they exist to-day with reference to importations could make that declaration in a solemn document, and assert that the assumption of those facts furnishes the foundation and the basis of legislation imposing enormous tax burdens upon the people of this country.

Mr. President, the trouble about this agricultural emergency tariff is that it is based upon a false assumption of fact.

should be evident to every one at all familiar with the facts as to the domestic production and consumption of some of the agricultural products embraced in this bill that no amount of tariff duties can affect the American price one way or the other.

For instance, take corn. We raise about 3,000,000,000 bushels of corn annually in this country. During the last eight months of the present fiscal year we imported only 500,000,000 bushels of corn. We exported during the same period 24,000,000 bushels, nearly five times as much as we imported, and our imports bore to our production the relation of 5,000,000 to 3,000.000,000. Yet, Mr. President, the corn farmers of this country are told that the importation of 5,000,000 bushels, an amount less than is raised in some counties in the Central West, is the chief cause of their present distressful condition. They are told that these 5,000,000 bushels of corn imported here from abroad have broken the price of corn in this country and reduced it from $10 a barrel to about $3.50 to $4 a barrel.

Is-it possible with the boasted initiative and constructive ability of the Republican Party the only thing it can think out and do in response to the appeal of the millions of corn producers of the country for relief from present deplorable conditions is to place a tariff tax of 15 cents a bushel on 5,000,000 bushels of corn imported into this country during the past eight

Is there a man of ordinary intelligence who has investigated the matter as you have on the other side of the Chamber, and who understands the effect of the duty you are giving him, who does not know that that is a fake? Why do you want to try to deceive the farmer in that way?

I could follow that up with illustrations from the bill, but, Mr. President, I do not intend to go into that at this time. What I desire to do now is to file some tables for the purpose of showing that importations have been for many months past, and are still, rapidly decreasing, and that importations in general, taking those from the world as a whole, are not excessive; that they are probably not as large as we might expect them to be under the conditions that exist now. And especially that agricultural importations are not increasing as the majority would have the farmer believe, but have for months been rapidly decreasing and with respect to many articles embraced in this bill have practically ceased as the case of peanuts and many of the vegetable oils will illustrate.

Mr. President, I have here a table of imports from different groups of countries for February, 1921—the present year—and for February, 1920. First let me take European importations:

In February, 1920, the imports from Europe taken as a whole, in round figures, were $106,000,000. In the month of February, 1921, just one year afterwards, the total imports from Europe were $55,000,000, or just about one-half.

Take the Central American States. In February, 1920, the imports were $4,770,000; in February, 1921, they were $2,352,-000-about one-half.

In the case of Cuba, in February, 1920, the imports were $72,000,000; in February, 1921, only $28,000,000.

The total for North America in February, 1920, was $136,- 000,000; in February, 1921, only $78,000,000.

Argentina: We have heard a great deal of talk about the flood of importations from Argentina, especially agricultural imports. Attempts have been made to frighten the farmers with the predictiou of rapidly growing imports from Argentina and Brazil, both great agricultural countries. In February, 1920. our imports from Argentina were $15,000,000; in Febru-In February, ary, 1921, only $5,000,000, or one-third.

Bolivia: $951,000 last year, as against $379,000 now.

Brazil: Another country from which we are said to be in danger of importations. Brazil's exports to this country in February of last year were $17,000,000; in February of this year, $9,000,000.

Chile: Last year, in February, $12,000,000; this year, in February, $4,000,000.

Colombia: Last year, $4,000,000; this year $2,000,000.

All the other States of South America are in about the same

Mr. President, I come now to Asia. We have heard more about the dangers of Asiatic competition than about the dangers from imports from any other section of the world, I presume.

In my section of the country the farmers have been led to believe that in all probability in a few years Japan and China will come over here and take charge of our markets, as far as agricultural products are concerned. Some of them have been led to believe that those conditions are to be precipitated upon us right now. These facts about China are that in February, 1920, our imports from China were $20,000,000; in February, 1921, they were only $7,000,000 in round figures.

Our imports from British India in 1920 were $14,000,000, in round figures; in 1921, this year, they were $8,000,000, in round figures.

Japan has been held up to the farmers of this country as one of the greatest menaces, to agriculturists especially. We imported from Japan last year, in February, $43,000,000, and in February of this year only $11,000,000, stated in round figures. Taking the whole of Asia last year, in February, we imported $117,000,000, and this year in that month we imported $42,000,000.

We have heard much in these tariff discussions and propaganda about African invasion of our markets. In February, 1920, we imported from Africa $27,000,000, and this year in February we imported $3,000,000.

Now, Mr. President, I have certain tables here brought up to date. These tables show the importations of various specific articles included in the present emergency tariff bill, in one column is given imports during the months of January and February, 1920 and 1921, respectively, and in the next column the imports are given for the eight months ending February 28, 1920 and 1921, respectively. I want to call attention to only one or two of these schedules. These tables were prepared for me by the Actuary of the Treasury, an expert, and are, I am sure, correct.

We have heard a great deal from the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] about importations of Canadian wheat to this country, and I discover from these tables that the entire importations of wheat into this country during the eight months of this fiscal year ending February 28, 1921, were 41,- 775,965 bushels.

Now, let us see, Mr. President, about the exportations during that period. The exportations of wheat from this country during the eight months ending February 28, 1921, were 209,857,400 bushels, and of the 41,000,000 which came in during those eight months of the present fiscal year ending February 28, 1921, there were exported from this country during the two months of January and February of this period 39,813,584 bushels, or there were exported during two months of this year within 2,000,000 bushels of as much wheat as came in from Canada during the first eight months of the present fiscal year. Yet we are legislating here upon the assumption that the American wheat market is being destroyed by the importation of wheat from Canada. Nearly as much was exported in two months as was imported in eight months, and five times as much was exported as was imported during the eight months ending February 28, 1921.

Mr. President, I have already extended this discussion beyond the time I expected to take, and, as much as I am tempted to do it, I will not take up the various items covered in this bill as I intended to do. But I do want to refer to one other feature of it.

There is a fear on the part of some of the peanut growers of my State with reference to importations of peanuts from abroad. They have been told, just as the woolgrowers have been told. that the importations of peanuts from abroad have been enormous; that there are ships loaded with them on the way; and that when they get here they will take charge of our markets. A great many of the people in my State have believed that and have been writing to me about it. I have the statistics here for the months, first, of January and February of last year and of this year, expressed in dollars and also in pounds.

I find that in January and February, 1920, there were imported into this country 25,520,246 pounds of peanuts. There were imported during the same months of 1921, only 3,959,917 pounds, or only about one-sixth as much. Peanuts run from 22 to 25 pounds to the bushel.

During the eight months ending February 28, 1920, there were imported of peanuts 47,000,000 bushels, in round figures, as compared with 12,000,000 bushels in 1921, or just about one-fourth as much. Importations have progressively declined from month to month.

The same outcry is made against the importations of peanut

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator made a rather poor comparison when he drew a comparison between peanuts and wool, Mr. SIMMONS. I was only comparing them with reference to the amount alleged to be coming in. I was not making the comparison in any other sense.

Mr. SMOOT. I say that the Senator was unfortunate in his comparison, because up to December 259,617,641 pounds of wool arrived in America from abroad. That is according to a report just received from the Department of Commerce.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator let me have that memo-

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly. That was for the year ending December, 1920.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was speaking of 1921. I have later figures than those.

Mr. SMOOT. For 1921 the figures are even worse than those for 1920.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. SMOOT. I have a statement here showing that I am correct.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator can put whatever statement he has in the Record, and I will change my statement if it is found incorrect to conform to the facts.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all I care about.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator is mistaken, but I may be mistaken.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is not stating any figures of his own. He is taking his figures from reports furnished by the United States Department of Agriculture and the Department

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; in the statement I made about wool a little while ago I was not reading. I was stating it from memory. I was reading from the books as to the other matters. The correct figures for the fiscal year 1921 will be found in the tables I have referred to and which I will attach to my remarks in the RECORD.

There is a statement made in the report of the committee on this bill to which I wish to call attention. The report says:

From the standpoint of the public it is believed the costs of retail will not be materially affected by reasonable duties on farm products. Under our present very faulty distribution system, which is sadly in need of reformation, the prices paid to farmers seem to bear little relation to the final sales price. For instance, we have seen the price of wheat reduced in half during recent months and the cost of bread remains at the same exorbitant price in most, if not all, the cities, Onions and some other products which are now unsalable on the farm excepting at far below cost of production are selling in the stores at about the same price as formerly.

Mr. President, there we have the whole thing. We have the farmer, with no protection, getting only one-half the cost of his onions when he sells them in this market. He is told that is because he has no protection; that if he had protection he could get a bigger price. Here is the dealer and the storekeeper, who buy these onions from the farmer, who sell them in the same market with no other protection than the farmer had, and yet he gets for them twice what the farmer got.

Mr. President, how can it be that the absence of tariff has destroyed the farmer's market for his onions and makes them practically worthless in his hands, but that same lack of tariff does not affect the price which the dealer and the storekeeper can command in the same market for the very same onions they bought from the farmer at below the cost of production? I would like very much to have that matter clarified. Why is it that the tariff, from the Republican standpoint, beats down the price of a product in the hands of the farmer to below cost and yet does not affect the price of that article when it goes out of the hands of the farmer and into the hands of the dealer and the merchant and the speculator? That is what Mr. Young says in this article has happened and is happening, and we know it is happening every day.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, when this measure, so far as its tariff features are concerned, was before the Senate, toward the close of the last Congress, I had occasion to express my views regarding it. Nothing has occurred to cause me to modify or change them. It would be unnecessary to repeat them now.

The fact is, on account of the situation in reference to the rates of exchange, the disorganized markets, demoralized credits, and the advantages possessed by the United States over other countries at this time, there is no need for tariff legislation. Conditions are rapidly changing, readjustment is taking place, a stricken world is gradually recovering, and in the unstable, unsettled conditions prevailing everywhere no permanent tariff laws should be enacted at this time.

The outstanding fallacy in connection with the pending bill is the claim that its enactment would benefit those engaged in agricultural pursuits in the United States.

If the bill was confined entirely to agricultural products, there would be at least an appearance of good faith in such claim, but since it embraces manufactured goods, for which the farmers and other consumers must pay prices increased far beyond the duties, if the measure accomplishes what its proponents claim, it is made clear, beyond question, that it is not even intended to be of real benefit to the farmers of the country. If it becomes a law, the producers of agricultural products will be sorely disappointed, in so far as they may expect it to operate to their advantage.

Since it is to remain in effect only six months, it may not work any serious harm. It will, however, accomplish no good result and its pretensions will be exposed by experience.

I have always felt very great sympathy for every effort put forth that might make for a sound and healthy agriculture. Whatever would encourage and stimulate those who produce the Nation's food, it has been my hope and purpose to favor and advocate.

The fundamental industry of the country is agriculture. If that languishes and suffers depression, all the people must feel the painful effects. No country can enjoy permanent prosperity if farms are abandoned, if agriculture is made unprofitable, and the conditions of rural life are hard and uninviting. In the United States there are 6,449,242 farms. Of these, 3,924,851 are operated by owners, 68,512 by managers, and 2,455,879 by tenants. Nearly one-third of our population are interested, directly or indirectly, in agriculture: This is a sufficient statement to indicate the importance of that industry, but it is not all that might be said. Every man, woman, and child in the country who has to have food and wear clothes is concerned. What we sometimes hear mentioned as the "farmer's problem" is equally the problem of every citizen. Whether we are farmers, or merely consumers, we must all move forward or backward, suffer or prosper, along with those engaged directly in agricultural pursuits.

It becomes, therefore, appropriate when we are considering any measure that is put forward as having a bearing on any of those problems to refer to and urge any real, substantial, helpful proposal which might be advanced as a solution of any of the problems and offer any relief against any of the difficulties which confront those engaged in agriculture.

SOMETHING WORTH WHILE-REAL PINANCIAL HELP.

The Federal farm loan act constitutes the firm foundation for agricultural growth and development. It provides the only financial system ever devised in this country to meet the financial need of the farmer. Under that law some $426,000,000 have been been found for those actually engaged in farming, for the wholesome purposes set forth in the act, at an interest rate of 5½ per cent, with amortization and other privileges of incalculable benefit to those who have long been burdened with excessive interest rates and charges, and in many instances unable to obtain any financial accommodation. No industry in existence could have survived these burdens and difficulties and deprivations which agriculture has been obliged to endure through all the years to July, 1916.

The amount mentioned has been made available to the farmers of the country since then, notwithstanding the case of Smith against Kansas City Title & Trust Co., recently decided by the United States Supreme Court, which was pending for some 18 months, during which time the Farm Loan Board practically ceased to function. The effect of the suit paralyzed the operation of the system. Happily the validity of the act was fully sustained by the Supreme Court, and operations have Under that act the money which is loaned to farmers for the purposes set forth in the law is obtained by the sale of farmloan bonds to the public. The law provides that the borrower can be required to pay to the Federal land bank only the same rate of interest which the bonds bear, the proceeds of which are loaned to borrowers, plus the cost of administration, which shall not exceed 1 per cent. This cost has not heretofore exceeded one-half of 1 per cent. As the business increases and the transactions multiply this cost will be still further reduced. The bonds are offered at 5 per cent, so that the borrower can not be called on to pay more than 5 per cent plus the cost of administration, which has heretofore not exceeded one-half of 1 per cent.

It is plain, therefore, that the lower rate of interest which the bonds bear the lower rate the borrowers will pay. It was for this reason these bonds were made exempt from all taxation-municipal, State, and Federal. A bond exempt from all taxation can be sold more readily and at a lower rate of interest than one that is not. Whatever will increase the demand for these bonds enhances their use and promotes their sale, will be advantageous to the system, to the borrowers, and therefore to the real farmers of the country.

With this in view I have proposed a bill, and I sincerely hope the committee will report it favorably and that it will be enacted into law, to amend second and third paragraphs of section 27, farm loan act, to read as follows:

That any bank of the Federal reserve system may buy or sell farm-loan bonds; any member bank of said system may accept time drafts against a deposit of such bonds as security; acceptances of a member bank thus made, or the direct obligation of such bank, maturing within 60 days, when accompanied by farm-loan bonds as collateral security not less in face value than the amount of such direct obligation, shall be eligible for discount by any Federal reserve bank.

I submitted this bill to Mr. W. W. Flannagan, who is thoroughly familiar with the farm loan act, the Federal reserve act, and our financial systems generally. He has been a banker, a student of finance, and has been connected with the move-ment and the hearings and the actual framing of the farm loan act, and knows it thoroughly. He is in full accord with the originators of the whole scheme and most desirous of serving the agricultural interests. He was secretary of the Farm Loan Board until their activities were stopped by the suit referred to, and I have great confidence in his judgment on any financial question. I adopt his views in every detail with regard to the merits of this bill, and I desire to insert here as a part of my remarks his letter to me on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

NATIONAL UNION OF FARM LOAN ASSOCIATIONS, Washington, D. C., April 15, 1921.

Hon, DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: I have examined with a great deal of interest the provisions of your bill (S. 4994, 66th Cong.; S. 620, 67th Cong.) and highly commend its purposes and the effective method thereby provided to secure capital for the farmer at a low rate of interest, while preventing the farm loan system from becoming an annual charge against the revenues of the Government, in the form of forced purchases of farm loan

Your prominent connection with the rural credit movement from its very inception as chairman of both of the commissions which were sent abroad to gain information and make a study of the subject, as author of the first rural credit bill introduced into Congress, as member of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee of the Sixty-third Congress, which secured a great amount of valuable testimony on the subject through the hearings it held, as member of the same committee of the Sixty-fourth Congress, which considered and reported the bill that afterwards became the farm loan act, as member of the conference committee which gave final effect to this work, and your consistent advocacy of every public measure which has had for its purposes the advancement of the welfare of the American farmer entitles any measure proposed by you on this subject to the most favorable consideration from the American people.

I concede that the business of agriculture is fundamental and that its prosperity is a necessity for the continuation and advancement of our civilization, and that it is the duty of the Government to provide, if necessary, the means, at the expense of all of the people, whereby this prosperity is assured to those who are worthy and willing to engage in this fundamental industry, but I think it would be a mistake to make any system of finance dependent for success upon annual appropriations from the Treasury, even if such appropriation results in an undoubtedly sound investment yielding in normal times a profit on such investment.

In other words, while it is sound from an economic viewpoint in a democratic government to tax all the people in order to be certain that those engaged in the production of the necessaries of life find it sufficiently attractive to continue that pursuit so that the adherents of agriculture remain contented and happy, and its development keep pace along other lines of human endeavor, it is not necessary to adopt this procedure, if other means can be found, justified by our experience, wholly in keeping with our system of finance, whereby the farm-loan system may be made independent of receiving recurrent Government aid, dependent upon the changing views of each succeeding Congress. To make it so dependent is to leave the system incomplete in itself as a system of finance, and invites continual criticism, if it does not spell failure.

I think you have found "the other means" in your bill, the merits of which I purpose to discuss in this letter as I see them.

The ultimate success of the farm loan act in serving its avowed purpose "to provide capital for agricultural develop-ment" must, of course, depend upon the ability to sell readily farm-loan bonds bearing a low rate of interest at not less than The restrictions thrown around the issuance of these bonds under the provisions of this act leave no doubt as to the security they offer as far as human foresight can make them secure, and it is not necessary to discuss here the nature and value of such security.

The experience of the world in the collection of debts from the time debts were first known and interest charged for their deferred payment, demonstrates beyond question that productive real estate is the surest and safest of all security, never failing except with the government which defends the title thereto, and not always then.

The very meaning of the word "real" indicates the permanence and safety of the security which real estate affords.

Now, in order that these bonds shall sell readily, there must be a constant and continued demand. Demand comes from human desire, a state of mind, a wish to be benefited. benefit offered for the loan of capital is profit in the form of interest, and though it is a recognized economic fact that the higher the interest rate the lower the security, periods in financial history occur-especially following the great destruction of capital which every war causes—that irrespective of security, capital, because of its scarcity, demands and commands higher rates of interest than often the business of the borrower can afford to pay. Especially is this the case when Governments become borrowers in large amounts to meet the devastation of

We have just this condition which confronts us to-day in the case of farm-loan bonds. The markets are flooded with offerings of high-class securities issued by governments, railroads, industrial and mercantile establishments, every form of human endeavor, all seeking the use of capital at higher rates of interest than the business of farming will justify, more than the farmers can pay and properly live. Yet he must live and prosper, yea, more than that, he must be satisfied and contented, or American civilization dies in a supreme reign of chaos.

In finding a market for farm-loan bonds we can not compete on the basis of profit derived from the rate of interest offered, and the demand must therefore come from some other right, benefit, or advantage which they offer. The genius of Salmon P. Chase solved a similar problem for the Government, when during and at the close of the Civil War the necessity of floating large volumes of United States bonds arose, in order to fund the indebtedness caused by the war, at a lower rate of interest. United States bonds were selling far below par; there was no demand to justify a large issue; greenbacks were at a heavy discount and gold was selling at a premium. Chase saw some other inducement than high interest was necessary, that he could not compete on this basis, so he gave to United States bonds the circulating privilege. He allowed national banks to deposit with the Comptroller of the Currency United States bonds and the privilege of the issuance of circulating notes against such deposit. He utilized the bank function of note circulation to supply the pressing necessities of the Government, and later, by taxing State-bank notes out of existence, gave us a uniform currency, circulating at par throughout the whole country, which continues to this day. The result of this advantage or benefit was that United States bonds bearing 2 per cent interest have commanded a premium on the market, while similar bonds bearing a much higher rate of interest sold for less than par. This shows conclusively that advantages or benefits may be given under the law which will create a demand for bonds, irrespective of the rate of interest they bear; or, in other words, the security of the principal being assured, the rate of interest the bonds bear is not always the governing factor in creating a demand and establishing the market price.

The Federal reserve law has now changed this collateral benefit held by national banks and practically given a monopoly of the circulating privilege to the Federal reserve banks. Under the operation of this law, the bank function of discount is interwoven with the bank function of circulation or note issue, so that no circulating notes can be obtained as a medium of exchange unless preceded by a discount of commercial paper at a Federal reserve bank.

Such discounts create reserves for the other member banks, so that in order that circulating notes may be had for the purposes of trade the banks must draw against their reserve balances with the Federal reserve banks. They can not count the circulating notes thus drawn as a part of their lawful reserve, nor can they restore their reserve by a redeposit of these notes, so that in order to obtain circulating notes to meet their customers' requirements for this medium of exchange the banks must convert "reserve funds" in the form of bank balances or credit with the reserve bank into "nonreserve funds" and replenish the same by another discount. These balances are created by discounts, as stated; they are called rediscounts, and must consist of paper previously discounted by a member bank of a particular nature—that is, such paper must represent a debt incurred by the sale and transfer of a commodity, or, in other words "commercial paper." The Federal reserve act is based on the theory that there never can be any excess of commercial paper, and is intended to afford the means whereby such paper can always be readily converted into cash, thus encouraging and facilitating business.

But observe that the business thus intended to be facilitated is the business of trading—the buying and selling of commodities on time, the extension of credit for short periods. It is the merchant who is intended to be and who is benefited. He is the man who is afforded the credit facilities whereby he can extend to his customer time for deferred payment,

Now, the farmer is not a trader nor a merchant. He does not buy and sell his products for profit. Through utilizing the forces of nature he creates the products which the merchant buys and sells for his own profit. The farmer must sell when his product is ready for market, and he sells such product usually once a year.

What your bill does is to give the farmer some of the indirect benefits of the Federal reserve act. It affords a point of contact between the Federal reserve act and the farm loan act whereby the benefits of the former, now held exclusively by the trader, may be shared by the producer. And in extending this benefit to the producer it does not lessen but increases the benefit to the trader. The benefit to both is increased through the medium of the commercial banks, which in turn are also benefited through the additional facilities they are thus enabled to extend to all classes of business interests.

This benefit comes to the farmer through the farm loan act by creating a constant and broad market for farm loan bonds, It comes from creating a demand for such bonds from the banking and commercial interests of the country. Every national bank and indeed every member bank of the Federal reserve system will want to hold constantly some of these bonds as a secondary reserve, an asset that is always convertible into cash under your bill, irrespective of the maturity, and always bearing a reasonable rate of interest until so converted. It is not an idle or noninterest bearing reserve, as is the case with money in the vault or balances with the Federal reserve banks. Every country banker will readily appreciate the advantage of having such an asset. He may not have the oppor-tunity in his locality to keep on hand at all times "commercial paper" to meet the requirements of the Federal reserve bank when he needs a rediscount. His "average balance," which the city bank requires him to keep in order to entitle him to a discount, may not have been "satisfactory" to the city bank, Indeed, having farm-loan bonds among his assets removes the necessity of "keeping balances" for the purpose of obtaining discounts, and they pay him a better rate of interest than he can get on such balances. He will need such balances only for the purpose of supplying "exchange." He will have a feeling of comfort and independence which he can not have when dependent upon the convenience or necessities of his city bank correspondent or perhaps the will or the whim of some officer thereof. The rate of interest he will have to pay on his rediscounts with farm loan bonds as collateral is public knowledge, fixed beforehand, and not dependent upon market fluctuations in interest rates caused by stock-exchange dealings or otherwise.

The city bank or banker, the big insurance and trust companies, indeed all dealers in securities or traders in debts (and banking is but another name for trading in debts), will find it most convenient to have always available a security which, under any and all circumstances, may readily be converted into cash.

Nor will this demand come alone from the banking fraternity, whose business is the buying and selling of debts, but from large and small investors as well. As soon as it is understood that farm-loan bonds will always command a banker's acceptance, and that these acceptances under the Federal reserve act entitle the holder to the lowest rate of discount at the Federal reserve banks, such bonds will be sought for by savings banks and by big industrial and mercantile establishments whose business requirements are such that only at certain seasons of the year must they have ready cash. They will not find it necessary to keep large bank balances idle or bearing a nominal rate of interest, for farm-loan bonds will then be a most desirable substitute for such balances, yielding a greater profit.

A small investor will also find these bonds a profitable substitute for time deposits, being in convenient denominations and yielding a better rate of interest, yet always available to produce cash.

The privilege or benefit your bill asks for farm-loan bonds is now enjoyed by United States bonds and is no new experiment in finance.

OBJECTIONS CONSIDERED.

You are sure to have used as arguments against your bill, if not urged as fatal objections which should defeat it, (1) that it amends the Federal reserve act, and (2) the claim that it is not in keeping with the principles of that act, which is based upon having quick assets held by the Federal reserve banks in the form of "self-liquidating" commercial paper of short maturity.

These objections, when analyzed, have no real force, as I shall endeavor to show. It is true that your bill amends the Federal reserve act, and it should be so amended.

The Federal reserve act was made for the banker in order to enable him to extend short credits to the merchant or trader in commodities. It does not provide directly for the farmer, because it deals in liquid capital, while the farmer must have credits of long duration. But it does not follow that the trader should have a monopoly of the benefits of the use of liquid capital. If the farmer can put his capital, which is his land, in a form whereby it becomes liquid—as between the traders—i. e., capable of being transferred rapidly, then he becomes the indirect beneficiary of such trading.

An illumination of this thought is shown in the case of a banker who issues a circulating note for value. The note passes from hand to hand effecting transfers of property indefinitely, but the banker who originally issued it is the beneficiary, and continues so, as long as the circulating note remains outstanding.

To make a constant and steady market for farm-loan bonds as your bill will do is to make the farmer's capital liquid, and thus enable him to share indirectly the benefit of the Federal reserve act, now enjoyed by the merchant.

SELF-LIQUIDATING PAPER.

The theory on which the Federal reserve act is constructed, with reference to the issuance of circulating notes, is that the security for such notes must be commercial paper, because such paper is "self-liquidating," meaning by such expression that it is paid at maturity from the proceeds of the commodity which changed ownership when the paper was given.

If this were true in practice, the theory would be all right, but every banker knows it is not true, either in theory under the definition given for commercial paper by the Federal Reserve Board nor in practice, by his own experience.

Under our practice there is no such thing as "self-liquidating" paper. No banker attempts to follow the proceeds from the sale of a commodity which has been purchased with so-called commercial paper, unless the commodity so purchased is specifically pledged, as in the case of a bill of lading or a warehouse receipt attached, and then it is not treated as commercial paper, but as collateral secured paper.

Again, where transfer and delivery of a commodity is made upon the execution and delivery of a promissory note in settlement, no retention of title to such commodity is made by the seller and no legal obligation exists on the part of the buyer to use the proceeds of the commodity in payment of the note, except in cases of commodities or property sold on the installment plan; and in such cases no one would have the temerity to offer such paper for rediscount at a reserve bank.

I sell you a horse or a bale of cotton or an automobile for $500, and you give me your note at three months. I take the note to my bank and discount it, and my bank rediscounts it with the Federal reserve bank. In 30 days you have an offer from another Senator to give you his note for $600 at three months for the same horse, which you accept in settlement, and discount the note with your bank, which in turn rediscounts it. This Senator, feeling he would rather have an automobile, and having an offer from another buyer, after 30 days' use, to give him a note for $500 payable in three months for the horse, concludes to sell, and discounts the buyer's note at his bank, which also rediscounts.

Now, the Federal reserve bank has $1,600 in commercial paper, three notes due at intervals of 30 days, and there is one horse worth $500 with which the self-liquidating process is to be effected. A "reductio ad absurdum." The truth is that this "self-liquidating" idea is a "catchpenny" phrase and does not exist in our banking methods. The nearest approach to it is in the case of international bankers who require payment under commercial credits which they issue against the delivery of "documents" which represent the title to imported goods; but even in these cases "trust receipts" are substituted for payment more frequently than otherwise.

Self-liquidation or payment at maturity of commercial paper as the basis for rediscounts and note circulation is a myth, and the recent experience of the Federal reserve banks and member banks proves this assertion to be true.

If the rediscounted "commercial" paper was self-liquidating there would have been no call for deflation of credit by the Federal Reserve Board, as the discount line of the member banks would have been automatically reduced, giving place for new rediscounts by the Federal reserve banks without any increase in the aggregate amount of such discounts.

It is because of the fact that the so-called commercial paper held by the Federal reserve banks is indirectly renewed and continued in force by the member banks, and is not self-liquidating, that the demand comes for deflation or reduction of the ever-increasing amount of "bank credit" represented by "bills and notes discounted" on one side of the bank's ledger as assets, and on the other side by "deposit or rediscounts" as liabilities.

It is apparent therefore that the liquidity of assets demanded for the reserve banks comes only from the short maturities of their discounted paper, the opportunity thus being afforded to require payment at short intervals, and not from so-called selfliquidation. Your bill provides for paper of short maturity. It is provided that the paper which the Federal reserve banks may rediscount with farm-loan bonds as collateral security shall be the obligation of a member bank, and that the maturity shall not exceed 60 days.

It should be noted that farm-loan bonds can not come into existence until they have behind them actual productive property, double in value the face amount of such bonds, and there is in consequence a limit to the amount which may be issued, while there is no limit to the amount of so-called commercial paper that may be issued; nor is there any means of preventing an unlimited amount of such paper from being issued with each transfer of the same identical property, thus duplicating paper as the representative of the full value of such property, with each transfer and issuance.

Now, which class of paper is likely to be most liquid in the hands of the reserve banks? That made by a member bank with farm-loan bonds as collateral security attached, or that made by a customer of the member bank with the bank's indorsement with no collateral attached? In both cases the member bank is the one to bear the burden in times of deflation, or when the reserve bank feels it necessary or desirable to reduce the amount of its circulating notes. In one case the member bank is limited to the maker and indorsers as the only source from which to collect. In the other case the member bank has the whole commercial world from which to collect, by a sale of the collateral; and it must be remembered that the privilege of rediscount which is asked will cause such a constant and general demand for these bonds that they will find a ready market at par, or at a premium, whenever offered. Yours, very truly,

W. W. FLANNAGAN.

Mr. FLETCHER. To say, as we have said by law, that it is safe and advisable to authorize Federal reserve banks to rediscount paper of six months' maturity arising out of foreign-trade transactions, and contend that it is unsafe and inadvisable to authorize the rediscount of 60-day paper secured by farm-loan bonds attached as collateral, is ridiculous. The farmers' assets can be, in this way, safely and effectually made just as liquid as any strictly commercial paper. Here is the place to do something of real and permanent benefit to the farmers of the country.

I understand there will be opposition to the proposal, but I can see no justification for it.

It must be remembered the Supreme Court of the United States has held:

(a) That the Federal land banks were legally created as a part of the banking system of the United States; and

(b) That the bonds issued by the banks are instrumentalities of the United States Government and are exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation.

THE CHARACTER OF THIS SECURITY.

The 12 Federal land banks were organized by the Government with an original capital stock of $9,000,000, which has since increased through the operation of the system to over $24,000,000. The Government owns over $6,700,000 of this capital stock of these banks, the remainder of the stock being owned by the national farm loan associations, organized and provided for in the law. The United States Treasury has purchased over $183,000,000 of these Federal land-bank bonds. The banks are under the direction and control of the Federal Farm Loan Board, a bureau of the Treasury Department of the United States Government. These bonds are made lawful investments for all fiduciary and trust funds under the jurisdiction of the United States Government. They are eligible, under the laws of many of the States, for investment of all public and private funds, and in 37 States are eligible by law for investment by savings banks. They are acceptable by the United States Treasury as security for Government deposits, including postal-savings funds. They are obligations of the Federal land banks, all 12 of which are primarily liable for interest and ultimately liable for the principal on each bond. They are secured by collateral consisting of an equal amount of United States Government bonds, or mortgages on farm lands, which must be

(a) First mortgages to an amount not exceeding 50 per cent of the value of the land and 20 per cent of the value of the permanent improvements as appraised by United States ap-

(b) Limited to $10,000 on any one mortgage.

(c) Guaranteed by the local national farm loan association, of which the borrower is a member and stockholder; this stock carrying a double liability.

(d) Reduced each year by payment of part of the mortgage

It would be difficult to devise or create a better or safer security.

Why, then, should negotiable paper with these bonds as collateral not be eligible for rediscount by any Federal reserve bank? It seems to me there can be no argument to the contrary.

If it is made eligible for rediscount by Federal reserve banks new markets will be opened up for them, new demands will be created, there will be no difficulty about selling them, and that means there will be no difficulty about finding the money which the farmers of the country may need for their operations under this law.

OPPOSITION.

Strange as it may seem, there are people who would like to cripple this system. That is evidenced by this suit which was brought for that purpose. In fact, if the plaintiffs in that suit had won, they would have destroyed the system, and it is doubtful if Congress could have devised one that could take its place. In other words, there would have been no way to revive, reinforce, or patch up the farm loan act by legislation. tunately, they did not win, but their purpose is manifest, and if they can in any way interfere with the operation of the system they will do so. Not only that, but there are other people who would like to keep up the rates of interest for their own benefit, realizing that one effect of this system has been to cause a lower rate of interest, not only to farmers but all other borrowers, and they may be expected to exert themselves in attacks upon the farm loan act.

The Farm Mortgage Brokers' Association are moving in that direction. Not a little propaganda has been put forth in the nature of attacks upon the system, and especially the joint-stock land banks and the exemption features carried in the law.

There have been some 25 amendments offered to the farm loan act. I have no fear that anyone will propose a repeal That would not only be hopeless but almost of the act. criminal. There are other ways of accomplishing such a purpose as these enemies of the act have in mind. One of ways will be through the process of amendments. A slight amendment here and one yonder and one somewhere else, ap-parently innocent, each in itself, might be offered and might be passed by Congress before it was fully realized what it all meant.

I refer to this by way of insisting that it is important that the friends of the farm loan act shall stand on guard to protect and preserve it.

The farm loan act has proven itself. It has been found in principle sound and in operation practical.

It is dangerous to tinker with its structure. Some amendments heretofore proposed have been wild, some merely unsound, and some positively vicious. It must be guarded in its integrity as a cooperative, workable, agricultural, financial, and banking scheme.

Its administration should be characterized by broad vision, clear understanding, good judgment, considerations of the common good, and a genuine abiding interest in agriculture. Bureaucratic methods should be studiously shunned.

It is necessary that its friends shall be diligent, watchful, and shall carefully scrutinize and cautiously examine every proposal to amend the act.

COOPERATION.

In view of this situation, I felt disposed to favor any cooperative effort on the part of the farmers of the country to establish some agency that would serve them in this direction. I believe in cooperation. I think many of the problems which face the farmers could be solved through cooperation.

One of their chief obstacles is a lack of some economic system of distribution. By developing a system of cooperation and organizing it seems to me they could devise a plan for orderly marketing of infinite benefit both to producers and consumers. Cooperation in the purchase of their supplies, their fertilizers, and all the things they have to buy, and cooperation in mar-keting their products is most desirable, if, indeed, it is not essential to their prosperity. I will not dwell upon that thought, but it leads to this: One of the compelling ideas in the minds of those who framed the farm loan act was that the local national farm loan associations should be a real, fundamental feature and factor in the system. It was thought these farm loan associations would develop this spirit of cooperation and that they would be most useful in every community in bringing together the people of each community, having them familiarize themselves with the business carried on by the association, become better acquainted, and form the nucleus of varied cooperative efforts. It was believed-and I still believe-that out of these farm loan associations would come for each community, through this sympathetic touch and common interest, better roads, better schoolhouses, better churches, telephones, postal facilities, and all the things which would make more attractive rural life.

People cooperate to obtain higher wages from employers. Commission men and retailers manage to keep up and obtain higher retail prices from consumers. Why can not farmers cooperate to obtain fair values for their products and otherwise promote their interests?

It is not difficult to point out unsatisfactory conditions. We can even specify the causes in many instances, but it is quite a different matter to present and put into operation a remedy.

For instance, we know the producer is receiving less than he should receive and the consumer is paying more than he should pay for farm products. We know the cost of transportation is too high. We know the method or lack of system in distribu-tion is wasteful and too costly. Too many tolls by too many people pile up costs to the consumer, which go neither to the producers or to the carriers.

This is not the time to discuss those questions and we pass from them conceding the wisdom of Portia's observation:

If to do were as easy as to know what 'twere well to do, all the chapels would be churches and all the poor men's cottages princes' palaces.

It will be remembered that the temporary organization of these Fede. at land banks was effected by the Farm Loan Board and the farm loan associations in that preliminary step had no voice in the selection of the directors of such banks. thereafter the assaiations were to elect six of the directors (section 4)

It is with keen regret that there is noted a disposition to ignore and set aside these farm loan associations by the Farm Loan Board.

The temporary organization of the Federal land banks was, as proposed by that board, continued "so long as any farm loan bonds purchased from it under the provisions of this amend-ment shall be held by the Treasurer and until the subscriptions to stock in such bank by national farm loan associations shall equal the amount of stock held in such bank by the Government of the United States.'

Congress authorized the purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury of farm loan bonds under the amendment of January 18, 1918, and the provision I have quoted was inserted in that amendment. At present, therefore, the national farm loan associations are not permitted to vote for the local directors in these land banks as originally provided in the act

The Farm Loan Board seems to regard the national farm loan associations as a sort of fifth wheel and more or less of an incumbrance.

This spirit is manifested by the attitude of the Farm Loan Board toward the efforts of these farm loan associations to get together for the purpose of creating a central agency of their own choosing and under their direction to represent them in all matters affecting their rights and interests, which include the rights and interest of their members, who are borrowers, under the system, and watching and guarding the farm loan act against the insidious attacks, which, as I have indicated, they have reason to believe may be attempted.

These national farm loan associations conceived the idea of forming what they call a "National union of farm loan associations," with headquarters here in Washington, and their purposes and objects are stated in the printed circular which they have issued. I ask that the circular be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The circular referred to is as follows:

NATIONAL UNION OF FARM LOAN ASSOCIATIONS, Washington, D. C., April 25, 1921.

To all NATIONAL FARM LOAN ASSOCIATIONS:

This is to report to you the results of the meeting held in Washington, D. C., April 20 and 21, 1921, to effect a permanent organization of the National Union of Farm Loan Associations.

Two hundred and forty-two national farm loan associations were represented at the meeting either by delegate, by proxy, or by written authority.

A constitution and by-laws were adopted, a full set of officers and an executive committee were elected, and the selection of an advisory council was provided for, the constitution providing that the members of the Farm Loan Board shall be ex officio members of the advisory council,

A public meeting was held, which was attended by more than 500 farmers, which meeting was addressed by Senator ARTHUB CAPPER, of Kansas; Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, of Florida; Master John A. McSparran, of the Pennsylvania State Grange; and Madame Agresti, former secretary to the late David Lubin, American delegate to the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, Italy; and others. Letters and telegrams of indorsement were read from Hon, W. G. McAdoo and Hon. Gifford Pinchot and from former United States Senator Henry F. Hollis, whose well-known connection with the Federal farm loan act is familiar to you.

Following this public meeting, the National Farmers' Union and the National Board of Farm Organizations passed, unanimously, resolutions indorsing the National Union of Farm Loan Associations and requesting the Federal Farm Loan Board to withdraw its opposition to the formation of this organization.

The National Union of Farm Loan Associations, by resolutions unanimously adopted at its business meeting on April 21, is committed to the following program and purposes:

is committed to the following program and purposes:

1. To support the Walsh bill (S. 273), which (a) authorizes national farm loan associations to form a national organization and to support the same by appropriation from their general funds, and which bill also (b) restores to the national farm loan associations the right to elect permanent directors of the Federal land banks, as originally provided for in the farm loan act.

2. To support the Fletcher bill (S. 620), which gives the right of rediscount with the Federal reserve banks of notes which have farm loan bonds pledged as collateral security, the effect of which will be to create a broad and steady market for farm loan bonds among all the commercial banks of the country.

3. To work for the passage of bills making farm loan bonds eligible as investment for the funds of the postal savings banks, and war-risk insurance reserve, thus providing an additional market for many hundreds of millions of farm loan bonds.

4. To work for the passage of a bill to increase from $10,000 to $25,000 the maximum loan which a Federal land bank may make.

Now that the purpose of this organization is clearly defined,

Now that the purpose of this organization is clearly defined, and you are fully apprised of the character and the nature of the work it is proposed to do, will you join with us in this sincere and carefully considered plan for preserving the fundamental principles of the farm loan system, and for improving and perfecting its operations so that its benefits may be available to every American farmer who has need of them?

If you desire further and more detailed information as to what occurred at the several meetings, you may secure the same by ordering a transcript of the stenographic report of the proceedings, in whole or any part, from the Law Reporting Co., of 17 East Thirty-sixth Street, New York City, the said company having reported these proceedings at its own expense.

Feeling sure that you are in full accord with the purposes of this organization, and that you recognize the necessity for immediate and concerted action, we are,

Very respectfully, yours,

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE NATIONAL UNION OF FARM LOAN ASSOCIATIONS,

By M. ELWOOD GATES, President.

N. B.: The constitution provides that the executive committee shall be composed of two members from each district, but in order to give new membership opportunity for representation only one member from each district was selected at the meeting last week.

Mr. FLETCHER. Strange to say, the Farm Loan Board, immediately after steps were taken to form this union, notified the officers of these farm loan associations that "no business will be permitted to be done by the Federal land bank of your district with the national farm loan associations which join this union."

It was claimed by the Farm Loan Board that the directors of a national farm loan association had no right to appropriate $10 as its membership fee, or toward such a union, and they cited a decision of the Atterney General to that effect. It was then proposed to assess the members of the farm loan association which desired to become a member of this union for the purposes stated a small amount each-25 cents in one case-but the Farm Loan Board objected to that, and they apparently hold that the members of any association can not contribute individually as much as $10 a year in the aggregate toward an association or union which they feel is important as an agency to look after their interests and serve them in every way which they may lawfully ask and feel they require.

The Farm Loan Board advises each of these associations to the effect that it will refuse to recognize them; that the bank of the district in which they exist, respectively, is to have no transactions with them, and they threaten to direct that new associations be formed to take their places, and, in effect, they propose to take away the charters of these associations so far as future business is concerned and thus effectually destroy them. It seems to me that is a most remarkable position to

A typical case is presented in the affidavit and papers which I have here from Oregon. Without referring to numerous letters and communications from other portions of the country, I ask to have the affidavit and attached papers inserted as a part of my remarks, as illustrating what has been going on in connection with this matter which seriously affects some 4,000 national farm loan associations regularly organized and actively performing their work under the law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is so ordered, without objection

The affidavit and attached papers are as follows:

My Dran Sir: I am directed by the Farm Loan Board to acknowledge receipt of your answer to our letter of inquiry of some days since relative to the use of national farm loan association funds for purposes other than those authorized by law.

We regret to know that your association has used $10 of its funds for the initial expense of joining the so-called National Union of Farm Loan Associations. We inclose you herewith a copy of the opinion of the Attorney General on this subject.

The Farm Loan Board does not question the good faith of you or of your associates, but the board can not evade its responsibility, and it must be governed, as must you, by the interpretation of the farm loan act by the highest legal authority of the Government, the Attorney General of the United States.

As you have been advised through the press, the Supreme Court on Monday, February 28, rendered its decision in our case which is a complete vindication of the constitutionality of the law under which we are organized. This, the board trusts, will make it possible, if farm loan bonds can be marketed in the present market, to renew active loaning operations in the near future.

The Farm Loan Board wishes it distinctly understood that no business will be permitted to be done by the Federal land bank of your district with national farm loan associations which refuse to obey the law as given to us by the Attorney General of the United States, and unless we are advised by April 1 that the resolutions authorizing this expenditure of $10 shall be rescinded in the proper manner and the $10 restored to the association funds, the Federal land bank of your district will be notified to cease doing business with you and to proceed at once to organize in the territory covered by the charter of your association a new association, or to recommend the extending of the territory of some other association of the community to take in the territory covered by your charter, in order that the

Dear Sir: We have your letter of the 11th instant, together with a printed copy of a letter written by former Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer, dated December 21, 1920, to the former Secretary of the Treasury. We are glad to note that we have a new administration, which gives us a new Attorney General and a new Secretary of the Treasury. Your letter makes no reference whatever to our letter of the 14th ultimo in regard to above association. With this letter was inclosed a copy of a resolution adopted by the stockholders of the Rogue River Association at their annual adjourned meeting of February 5, 1921, which resolution we ask your honorable board to carefully consider before issuing an order to the Federal land bank of Spokane to suspend the Rogue River Association.

We can not conceive of such a condition of affairs that your honorable board would arbitrarily, without warrant and authority of law, suspend the Rogue River Association. For your consideration we are inclosing you a copy of opinion of Hon. W. G. McAdoo, former Secretary of the Treasury and head of the Farm Loan Board, in regard to the question of the right of the farm loan associations to pay out of their general funds membership fee in the National Organization of Farm Loan Associations, December 29, 1920; also a copy of letter written by Hon. W. G. McAdoo to Hon. D. U. Fletcher, United States Senate, Washington, D. C., on the 7th instant.

It is not conceivable that the actions of the Farm Loan Board as indicated in your letter of the 11th instant has any purpose other than to act as a scare to the farm loan associations of the United States—to prevent the proposed organization of a national union of farm loan associations, delegates to which are called to meet in Washington, D. C., April 20.

We wish again to call your attention to the resolution sent you under date of the 14th ultimo. We have your letter acknowledging receipt of same, and no objection was made to it; neither reserve, in any way that it may see fit for the benefit of the association and its members, especially when same has been fully ratified by its stockholders, as was done in this case.

Yours, very truly,

E. H. HURD, Secretary-Treasurer.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, December 21, 1920.

Department of Justice,

Washington, December 21, 1920.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 18, 1920, requesting an expression of my opinion upon the question whether the board of directors of a national farm loan association has the power to use the funds of the association for the purpose of contributing to the expenses of the promotion and upkeep of another voluntary association, including salaries of paid representatives in Washington.

A national farm loan association is one of the agencies through which, under the Federal Farm Loan System, the capital of the Federal land banks is loaned to bona fide cultivators of the soil. Under the provisions of the Federal farm loan act such associations may be organized by 10 or more natural persons who are owners or about to become owners of farm land qualified as security for a mortgage loan and who desire money on the farm-mortgage securities (sec. 7). None but borrowers on farm-land mortgages can be members of such associations (sec. 8). Every member of such association must also be a shareholder and is liable for the debts of the association to the extent of the amount of stock owned by him at par in addition to the amount represented by his shares (sec. 9).

No loan can be made through a national farm loan association without the unanimous approval of the association's loan committee (sec. 10). If the bank makes the loan, the money is paid to the borrower through the agency of the national farm loan association, which becomes liable to the bank for the payment of the loan (sec. 11).

From this statement it is quite clear, I think, that the only purpose for which a national farm loan association can be formed is for the purpose of acting as an agency through which loans are made by Federal land banks to its members. All of its assets constitute a guarantee fund for the liabilities of its members and can be diverted from that purpose only so far as authority to do so is granted by the act. These associations have not been

Director Rogue River National Farm Loan Association, Rogue River, Oreg.

My Dear Sir: The Farm Loan Board has had considerable correspondence with your secretary-treasurer, E. H. Hurd, relative to the action of your association in using association funds in the amount of $10 in payment of your association's initiation-fee to the so-called national union of farm loan associations. The Attorney General of the United States has held that the use of association funds for purposes of that kind is without authority of law. His opinion is herewith inclosed for your information. This board, as well as officers of the banks and of associations, have no alternative than to follow the law as interpreted to us by the chief law officer of the Government. The fact that lawyers without official standing or persons unconnected with the Department of Justice hold views contrary to those expressed by the Attorney General does not alter the case.

In a letter to Mr. Hurd, under date of March 11, the board pointed out very distinctly to him the consequences to your association if it should continue to refuse to abide by the opinion of the Attorney General, and we did this in the following language:

"The Farm Loan Board wishes it distinctly understood that no business will be permitted to be done by the Federal land bank of your district with national farm loan associations which refuse to obey the law as given to us by the Attorney General of the United States, and unless we are advised by April 1 that the resolutions authorizing this expenditure of $10 shall be rescinded in the proper manner and the $10 restored to the association funds, the Federal land bank of your district will be notified to cease doing business with you and to proceed at once to organize in the territory covered by the charter of your association a new association, or to recommend the extending of the territory of some other association of the community to take in the territory of some other association of the community to take in the territory of some othe

ing farmers may be her, or the first you, as an officer of your association, are fully advised of the situation, and before we issue directions to the Federal land bank to cease doing business with you and to proceed at once to organize another association in the territory now covered by your charter or to extend, if that is feasible, the territory of some other association to take in your community, we felt it only just to you that you should be advised fully of the situation. The board has a very distinct duty to perform and it is going to do it without any hesitation, and such associations as are not willing to conform to the law as it is given to us by the Attorney General will not be permitted to do any further business through the system. If, therefore, it is your desire to participate in the business which we hope soon again to resume, we would suggest that you put your association in position to do so and that we be notified of that fact at the earliest possible date.

Copy of letter sent to Mr. Hurd to-day is herewith inclosed.

Yours, very truly,

W. H. JOYCE, Member and Acting Secretary Farm Loan Board.

Mr. FLETCHER. Such action as is threatened by the Farm Loan Board would mean the destruction of the farm-loan associations arbitrarily and at will-in effect, the confiscation of their property rights, the enforced forfeiture of all their interests and privileges, some of which I will enumerate, as well as the similar results as to the rights and interests of their shareholders-simply because they saw fit to establish an agent which they considered would be helpful to them in connection with their business and affairs. Such action would be indefensible, such an attitude untenable, such a threat preposterous.

Of course, the Farm Loan Board is absolutely without any authority or power to do what they threaten, and it is most unfortunate that they should take the position which they do take in this matter. This union is not antagonistic to the Farm Loan Board. It desires to cooperate with the board.

These national farm-loan associations are an essential part of the system, their members are vitally interested, involved financially and otherwise, and they look upon this farm loan act almost as a sacred thing, and they want to see it executed, its provisions administered in the broadest, most energetic, and efficient way. They want to be helpful. Why the Farm Loan Board should undertake to arbitrarily trample upon these farmloan associations is beyond my comprehension.

Let us see what they are:

(1) Each farm-loan association is a corporation. Its articles of incorporation are executed and filed, and it is duly chartered. It has a board of five directors-president, vice president, and loan committee of three. It has a secretary-treasurer, who is entitled to compensation. It has duties and responsibilities prescribed by law-not by any regulation of the board, but by

(2) It holds stock in the Federal land bank of the district in which it exists. Each association shall be entitled to one vote for each share of stock held by it.

(3) Upon receipt of its charter it is authorized to receive sums to be loaned to its members. It must take stock to the amount of 5 per cent of each loan in the land bank, and it is entitled to receive dividends on that stock.

(4) The members of each national farm-loan association must subscribe for stock to the amount of 5 per cent of his loan, in the association, each member must be a borrower, and each borrower is entitled to dividends on the stock.

(5) Each association must provide for the increase of its capital stock, and is entitled to one-eighth of 1 per cent semi-annually upon the unpaid principal of loans.

(6) The shareholders in these associations are held, under the law, individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of such association to the extent of the amount of stock owned by them, at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount paid in and represented by their shares.

(7) The law further provides that the reasonable expenses of the secretary-treasurer, the loan committee, and other officers and agents of national farm-loan associations, and the salary of the secretary-treasurer shall be paid from the general fund of the association, and the board of directors is authorized to set aside such sums as it shall deem requisite for that purpose and for other expenses of such association.

(8) The powers of national farm-loan associations are expressed in section 11 of the act.

SEC. 11. That every national farm loan association shall have power—

First. To indorse, and thereby become liable for the payment of, mortgages taken from its shareholders by the Federal land bank of its district.

Second. To receive from the Federal land bank of its district funds advanced by said land bank, and to deliver said funds to its shareholders on receipt of first mortgages qualified under section 12 of this holders on receipt of first mortgages queened act.

Third. To acquire and dispose of such property, real or personal, as may be necessary or convenient for the transaction of its business.

Fourth. To issue certificates against deposits of current funds bearing interest for not longer than one year at not to exceed 4 per cent per annum after six days from date, convertible into farm loan bonds when presented at the Federal land bank of the district in the amount of $25 or any multiple thereof. Such deposits, when received, shall be forthwith transmitted to said land bank, and be invested by it in the purchase of farm loan bonds issued by a Federal land bank or in the first mortgages as defined by this act.

The third paragraph of this section has been amended, but

The third paragraph of this section has been amended, but the language given remains.

In the face of the express provisions of the law creating these associations, separate, corporate entities, with rights and privileges, it is a bald assumption of authority to ignore them or, in effect, take away their charters. They have express authority to acquire and dispose of such property, real and personal, as may be convenient or necessary for the transaction of their business. They have express authority to select officers and agents and to pay them and other expenses of such associations.

To assert that these associations can not create an agent, such as a union of farm loan associations, and incur the expense of $10 toward its maintenance, in connection with their business and their work, and in furtherance of their rights and interests, is to misconstrue the law. When they have power to acquire and dispose of property, real or personal, which may be necessary or convenient for the transaction of their business, it is absurd to say they can not appropriate $10 out of their general fund, or raise it by special assessment, or any other reasonable sum, for purposes which they deem helpful and beneficial in their work or business.

These associations can meet once a month if they like, and appropriate money for the purpose of having a picnic, or for the purpose of hiring a boat and going fishing. It would be all the better for them if they did this. That would be in accordance with the spirit of the law. These farm loan associa-tions should be on the order of community centers.

Another important matter for consideration is the rights of the members of these associations. They can not be taken away by the Farm Loan Board. All the power the Farm Loan Board has is provided in section 17, namely supervisory powers. They have the same power over the banks as they have over farm loan associations. Who would contend that the Farm Loan Board can abolish one of these district land banks, close it up and declare it shall do no more business?

The law in section 4 gives these farm loan associations the right to elect six out of nine directors of these Federal land banks. That has been changed by the amendment to which I have referred, but that is not intended to be a permanent change. This right is suspended for a while longer. That is all. This right ought to be restored to them, and will, I believe, in due course. With the power to name three of these directors by the Farm Loan Board, the Government's interest is fully protected; and certainly the stockholders, owning $17,000,000 out of the $24,000,000 of capital stock, ought to have the right to elect the other six directors.

The position of the Farm Loan Board as set out in the Oregon case mentioned and also in the letter from Mississippi, which I ask to insert, is absurd, and I trust they will recede from that position and without question, but with real enthusiastic welcome, accept the offers of this agency, lawfully and properly created by the farm loan association, as expressed in the letter of President Gates to the commission, dated April 26, which I also ask leave to place in the RECORD. So far as I am advised, there has been no reply to this letter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letters will be printed in the RECORD.

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I am in receipt of your letter of the 31st, and I certainly appreciate the interest you are taking in the organization of the National Union of Farm Loan Associations. I have been trying to get the associations in this State to join this organization, but have been up against a hard proposition on account of the Farm Loan Board and the Federal land bank being against it, and making all kinds of threats against associations that joined. I have just received a telegram from the Farm Loan Board stating that it would instruct the Federal land bank of my district not to accept any more applications from my association unless I complied with their wishes in this matter. I realize the great importance of the associations joining this organization, but I do not want to do anything that will keep the farmers in my territory from getting loans, as they need it worse than they have ever needed it before. Can not Congress give us some relief from the power that the Farm Loan Board is using and are taking all the rights away from the associations? The secretary-treasurers of the local farm loan associations are the men who get the business for the Federal land banks. I will be glad to hear from you in this matter, and again thanking you for the fight you are making in the interest of our farmers. of our farmers.

APRIL 26, 1921.

Hon, CHARLES E. LOBDELL,

Commissioner Farm Loan Board,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: The constitution of the National Union of Farm Loan Associations provides for an advisory council in the following words:

"Arr. X. There shall be an advisory council selected by the executive committee which shall consist of well-known prominent men identified with the welfare of the farming interests of the country and friendly toward the farm loan act.

"The members thereof shall be consulted at all times available by the members of the board of delegates and of the executive committee and their friendly advice sought, especially with reference to legislative matters. Any member thereof shall be entitled to a seat at all meetings of the board of delegates and at the annual and special meetings of the national union. The individual members of the Federal Farm Loan Board shall be ex officio members of the advisory council."

In pursuance thereof, on behalf of the executive committee and under its instructions, I beg to express the hope that you will accept membership on the advisory council and give us the benefit of your counsel and advice.

An impression seems to prevail among the members of the Farm Loan Board that the purpose of the national union is to antagonize said board and question its supervisory authority under the farm loan act.

I beg to assure you that such is not the case, but that, on the contrary, it is the earnest desire of the members of the national union to encourage the most friendly relations with said board and to support it in the exercise of all its legal functions to the fullest extent.

We believe that we can be of service in furthering legislation to perpetuate and increase the great benefits conferred upon the agricultural interests of the country by the farm loan act by supporting and encouraging the cooperative spirit of that act as expressed through the organization of the national farm-loan associations, and it shall be our earnest purpose to cooperate with the Farm Loan Board with that end in view by all proper and legal means in our power.

Yours, truly,

M. Elwood Gates, President,

M. ELWOOD GATES, President.

Mr. FLETCHER. It has not been my intention to criticize, much less reflect upon, the Farm Loan Board. Most of its members I am proud to regard as my warm personal friends, for whom I entertain the highest respect and esteem. Their faithful and effective public service in other fields is well recognized and worthy of all praise. I must believe they have misconceived or misjudged the purpose and character of this proposed agency of the national farm-loan associations.

They must know by this time that the people behind the movement to establish the National Union of Farm Loan Associations as their representative in the matters with which they have cooperated to charge it and those directing its activities are sincere friends of the farm loan act and earnestly desire the most harmonious relations with the Farm Loan Board. They may be assured that the union hopes to act in full accord with the board, but if that is not possible as to every detail such honest difference as may arise shall be openly considered in order that rational conclusions shall be reached in the best interest of all concerned. Any antagonism or conflict should be avoided and would be deplorable, because, if for no other reason, that would bring joy to the enemies of the farmloan system.

The responsibility for any such consequences must rest with the Farm Loan Board, since there are rights and interests of the farm-loan associations, as corporate entities, and of their members or shareholders which can not be taken away by any orders or action of the board.

These associations can not be crushed by a course of procedure which would render them dormant and inactive. That would be in violation of the law and would be based on a perversion of the power of supervision and an assumption of authority never granted.

I hope and believe the Farm Loan Board and the farm-loan associations will work in complete agreement, with the spirit and determination to make the farm loan act serve in full measure the beneficent purposes intended and accomplish the vast benefits which the pronounced success already experienced should adequately guarantee.

In the Farmers' National Magazine of April, 1921, is an article by Dr. Paul Wilkie entitled "Farm-loan system has given service," which is a very conservative, intelligent, and admirable statement. I ask to make it a part of my remarks. The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Farmers' National Magazine.]

"FARM LOAN SYSTEM HAS GIVEN SERVICE—AGRICULTURE NEEDS FUNDS—PRESENT FARM LOAN SYSTEM HAS GIVEN VALUABLE SERVICE—FARM MORTCAGE BANKERS ARE PRINCIPAL OPPONENTS—AMENDMENTS AND CHANGES SHOULD BE MADE BY FRIENDS OF SYSTEM TO INCREASE ITS POWER OF SERVICE—UNITED EFFORTS WILL PROTECT AGAINST IN-JURIOUS CHANGES. [By Paul Wilkie.]

"Word comes from Washington to the effect that certain Republican leaders in Congress have said that the Federal farm lean act is to be rewritten.

"For more than a year threats of changes in the law have been heard, but the attacks upon the system have been so much in the nature of a scattering fire that it has been difficult to tell just what provisions of the act are to be first assailed. "However, friends of the farm loan system never have been deceived as to the chief objective of the enemy. Though the farm-mortgage bankers have attacked first one part of the system, then another part—concentrating at one time on the Federal land banks, at another time on the national farm loan associations, and at still another time on the joint-stock land banks-all friends of the law now see clearly that the attackslike those of the Germans on the eastern front-have been shifted from time to time merely in an effort to find the weakest point in the line of defense and that the real object of the farmmortgage brokers is to destroy the farm loan system as a

"FRIENDS OF SYSTEM UNITED.

"Accordingly friends of the act are now prepared to present a united front in defense of all parts of the system, realizing that if the mortgage brokers succeed in killing off any part of the system they will then proceed at once to destroy whatever "The nature and purpose of the attack upon the farm loan system and the attitude of the friends of the system were aptly described in a story told by Charles A. Lyman, secretary of the National Board of Farm Organizations, at a recent meeting of a group of friends in Washington. Mr. Lyman told of the testimony of Knute Knudson in a suit brought by the widow of Ole Oleson against a railroad company to recover damages for the death of her husband. Asked to describe just what happened, Knute said, 'Vell, ve all ver valking down der drack dalking aboud the crops, ven I heard a derrible noise and den a train whistled, and I looked around and yumped just in time to get off the drack. The train went by but I didn't see Ole anywhere. I called to him, but he did not answer. I walked up the drack a ways and I found Ole's foot. A little further on I found Ole's arm. By and by I found Ole's head. Then I said, "By golly, something has happened to Ole,"'

This story seems to have a very pat application to the present attack upon the farm loan system by the farm mortgage bankers, and the fate of Ole seems to forecast the fate which the farm mortgage bankers intend to mete out to the farm loan system.

"Mr. Lyman seemed to give voice to the general judgment of those present that when it was found first that the mortgage bankers were attacking the Federal land banks and a little later that they were attacking the national farm loan associations and that finally they were attacking the joint stock land banks, the conclusion was inevitable that something was about to happen to the farm loan system.

" REASONS FOR OPPOSITION.

"There is no question about the intent of the farm mortgage bankers, and viewed from their standpoint there is no doubt that the old-style mortgage men have a very sufficient reason for their opposition to the banks of the farm loan system. During the three years that these land banks-Federal land banks and joint stock land banks-have been in actual operation farmers have borrowed almost half a billion of dollars on the long-term amortized plan, at low rates of interest and without paying a single dollar in commissions. It has been estimated by those operating these banks that the farmers of America already have been saved more than $10,000,000 in interest and as much as $10,000,000 in commissions. And, of course, the money that has thus been saved to the farmers in interest and commissions has been lost to the farm mortgage bankers. This is the concrete reason for their opposition, no matter what high-sounding phrases they may use as the excuse for their attacks upon the law and the banks.

"FEATURES OF FARM LOAN SYSTEM.

"If the friends of the farm loan system are to put up a united front against the common enemy the various parts of the system must get together and find a common basis for friendly cooperation.

The farm loan act provides for two plans of borrowing-one known as the cooperative plan, the other known as the direct-borrowing plan.

"Under the cooperative plan farmers who desire to borrow are required to form cooperative associations and buy stock in the Federal land banks. These farmer stockholders have a voice in the management of the banks and participate in the

"Under the plan of direct borrowing, the farmer may secure his loan by applying directly to a joint stock land bank, without the necessity of forming a cooperative association. The stock of these banks is subscribed by private individuals who may be borrowers but are not required to be borrowers.

"None but the stockholders, of course, have a voice in the management of a joint stock land bank and none but the stockholders participate in the profits.

"Under both plans the rates of interest are limited by law (the same limitation applying to the banks of direct borrowing that apply to the cooperative banks) and commissions are prohibited. In other words, under either plan of borrowing provided by the farm loan act the borrower is protected against usurious rates of interest and against commission charges in every and

"NO INJURIOUS COMPETITION.

"The Farm Mortgage Bankers' Association of America has expended considerable energy and much money in an effort to make it appear that the banks under the direct-borrowing plan are in competition with the cooperative banks. And as a matter of fact there is a mild degree of competition between the banks of these two plans. However, it has not been and need never be injurious to the banks operating under either plan. On the contrary, a little competition may be good for the esprit de corps of both kinds of banks.

"It will be recalled that the Federal land banks are not permitted to lend more than $10,000 to a single individual and that the joint stock land banks are permitted to lend as much as $50,000 to a single individual. The suggestion has been made—and has some merit—that the Federal land banks should be permitted to lend as much as $25,000 to a single individual. A suggestion also has been made that there should be a dividing line as to the size of loans which each type of bank could make, so that there would be no overlapping and, therefore, no real competition. In other words, if the Federal land banks are not to be allowed to lend more than $10,000, then the joint stock land banks should not be allowed to lend below that amount.

"This is not a matter that is difficult to adjust, and doubtless is one which could be readily disposed of at a conference between the presidents of the Federal land banks and the joint stock land banks, the conference to be presided over by the members of the Farm Loan Board.

"FIELDS OF SERVICE DISTINCT.

"However, there are distinct fields of service for each kind of bank, the distinction arising from the differences in the preferences of farmers as to the plan of borrowing they desire

"In a general sense there need be no competition between the joint stock and the Federal banks, because neither type of bank has been able to furnish one-half the loans for which farmers have applied, and both banks have had to refuse loans on account of lack of funds.

"Agriculture needs and will need all the funds that can be supplied for many years to come. Farmers should guard against the loss of any agency that can make loans on the long-term amortized plan at low rates of interest. Therefore the friends of the various parts of the farm loan system will do well to pool their interests and present a united front to the common enemy. With the friends of the system united, there is little danger that any injurious amendment to the farm loan act will pass either House of Congress."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, is not some one on the other side of the aisle going to discuss this very important bill?

There have been only two speeches made on the majority side in defense of this proposed legislation, both very short. Is no one going to explain its provisions this afternoon?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, everything has been fully explained as to the additional matters that have been added to the bill. The agricultural schedule was discussed for about a month last winter, and that schedule has not been changed in a single item or a single expression. Inasmuch as that has been so fully covered, and the Senator from Mississippi discussed it so long, especially the provision relating to sugar, during the last session, we have felt that it was unnecessary to go over and rehash what it had already taken us two months to go over. I do not know of anyone on this side who wishes to discuss the other provisions of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, I can understand why Senators on the other side of the aisle do not want to discuss and defend the agricultural section of the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. We have done it once; there is no need of doing it twice

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from North Dakota at the last session of Congress was the only one who attempted to defend the proposition at all, and he discussed only the wheat item. It is so iniquitous that I congratulate the Senators on the other side of the aisle on the policy they have adopted of trying to let the measure go through without saying anything

But, Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY 1 is prepared to discuss the bill this afternoon.

Mr. McCUMBER. We shall be very glad to hear of the iniquity of the measure from the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I understand it has been announced that there will not be any amendment made to the tariff features of the bill, but notwithstanding that statement I propose an amendment placing a duty upon hides. I ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, during the last session of Congress I discussed in detail the different provisions of the socalled emergency tariff bill and went into the subject matter of it very thoroughly, and gave rather exhaustive statistics.

Under these circumstances I do not intend to again consider those features of the bill in that way. It would be a mere repetition and unnecessary, as the bill we now have before the Senate is in the provisions relating to a tariff on agricultural products identical with the bill considered at the last session.

The difference between this bill and the former one lies in the antidumping provision, and also in the addition of a provision prolonging the present regulation as to dyes and chemicals. The bill is such a hodgepodge and so unsound in every principle of scientific tariff legislation that it is hard to know where to begin to attack it.

As originally conceived in the House the measure was very much shorter and dealt with a much smaller number of industries. After it was rushed through there, with practically one day's debate, it came over to the Senate and hearings were held by the Finance Committee, and for the obvious purpose of ob-taining more friends for this bill additional duties on other commodities were added, thrown together, I might say, and the result was the present monstrosity.

I am very sorry that the majority did not deem it wise to abandon this legislation, at least temporarily, and take up what the country was really expecting, namely, a revision of the revenue laws. There can be no doubt that it is for the best interests of business communities and the country as a whole that the present revenue laws should be revised, and revised as soon as possible. The legislation was war-time legislation, passed with war conditions in mind, and with the idea that it would be amended as soon as the war was over.

The Democratic Party made some revision before it went out of power, against the opposition of our friends on the other side. and proceeded to reduce the taxes in certain important particulars. When the present majority party came into power it was with the understanding that they would revise that legislation. They had control of both Houses of Congress, and it was for them to take the situation in hand and do what was unquestionably for the best interests of the community. President Wilson advocated the revision of the law, but no heed was paid to his request. It was evidently the idea of the majority party that it was better politics to leave the present high taxes on the statute books. Probably politically they were wise, but as to the statesmanship of such a course there can be but one conclusion.

Now that it is proposed to revise the revenue legislation later, I say that I regret it is not to be taken up immediately and considered before the tariff, so that the country could have an opportunity as soon as possible to receive the help that would come to business from such action. The folly of the present policy is more than ever brought out and emphasized when we realize the difficulties of drafting any tariff legislation at this time. Heretofore when a tariff bill has been considered America has always been a debtor Nation. Now we are a creditor Nation, with a great supply of gold in our Treasury; in fact, there is so much gold in this country that we do not desire to increase it.

To-day Europe owes us something like $10,000,000,000, which she must either pay us in gold or in commodities. either export commodities to us and in that way help change the balance of trade, or she must pay us in gold, which she can not do. The proposition is perfectly simple, and every banker in the country knows that there is no other way to remedy the present condition than to stabilize foreign exchange. Apparently our friends upon the other side are still of the belief that a tariff is the panacea for all ills, and that it will immediately commence to cure business conditions and make the country once more prosperous. In fact, at the other end of the Capitol one of the Republican leaders has even gone so far as to intimate that he would be willing to forego the debt owed us by our allies if by so doing he would be able to keep America a high-protection country. It seems to me that no better example than that could be given of the extreme to which the friends of protection are willing to go, but of course such a policy will not be followed, and our debts will be paid us by our allies, for the political leaders and the country at large would not be satisfied with any other course.

The pending bill places duties that are really prohibitive, duties higher than those in the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill, on practically all the necessities of life, the food we eat, and the clothes we wear. If we glance through the bill for a moment and look at the articles enumerated we will see that there are duties on wheat, corn, beans, potatoes, onions, rice, cattle, sheep, even frozen meats, "meats of all kinds," as well as cotton, wool, sugar, butter, cheese, milk, condensed milk, and tobacco, so that from the time the consumer sits down to the time he leaves the table and has his smoke everything is to pay an additional tax.

In other words, if the theory of the bill is correct, the American people are to pay the losses, which the western farmer is now suffering because of the world condition. The manufacturer, the ordinary individual in business, is not to be reimbursed for what he is losing on account of the war with Germany, but the farmer must be taken care of, so he is to have special legislation and the rest of our people are to pay for it.

As I called attention in my former speech, this is an appalling conditions of affairs, especially to those of us who come from New England and the Eastern States. To-day there are To-day there are 3.000.000 to 5,000,000 people out of work in the country. own State of Rhode Island the Government statistics show that something like 21,000 people are out of employment. My own information is that there are a great many more than that who are not working anything like full time. One can not pick up a financial paper without reading comments on the condi-tion that exists to-day, and then the hope is expressed that it will improve, followed by long articles telling how this can be accomplished, and general statements made evidently with the idea of trying to keep a good face with a deplorable condition. But how can we expect conditions to improve, how can we expect the laboring man to look with any satisfaction or degree of acquiescence upon the situation or without a strong feeling that injustice is being done him when his wages are being reduced and his cost of living is attempted to be increased?

The only way that it will be possible with any degree of fairness to reduce wages will be also to do everything possible to reduce the high cost of living. Just as soon as the last election was over wages were reduced pretty generally throughout my State. What the connection was between the two I leave to the workingman to decide. However, the fact remains that all through the industrial centers there has been a reduction in wages that is continuing and will probably continue for some time to come. and yet the first important financial bill that is brought in for the consideration of the Senate is a bill to place duties on the necessities of life and to increase the already high cost of living which must naturally follow if the theory of the bill is

I do not believe that the bill will work out as its proponents think it will. I do not believe that we are going to regulate very easily the price of these commodities and that we are going to obtain revenue from commodities which we export in tremendously greater quantities than we import. I am inclined to think, although I can not speak with the authority of a western man, that the reason there were some large importations of Canadian wheat into this country last fall was because the Canadian farmer was advised to sell at the then market price and the American farmer was advised to hold his wheat. The result was that the miller had to obtain wheat, and he naturally bought it from the people who were willing to sell. The Canadian surplus of wheat was disposed of, and the American farmer had his wheat left on his hands.

Wheat is only one of the many articles that are covered in the bill which we export in tremendous quantities and whose prices are really determined in foreign markets. The price of wheat is determined in Liverpool, not in Minneapolis. Corn is one of America's greatest agricultural staples, and it seems as absurd to place a duty upon it as it does to place a duty on some of the other commodities enumerated. But the framers of the bill were not satisfied with protecting the farmer and went a step further and put a duty on frozen beef and a duty In my opinion, the people who are really going to profit from this legislation are not going to be the farmers, but the middlemen, the Beef Trust, and the Sugar Trust. Thousands and thousands of carcasses of sheep are already stored in our warehouses, and yet the public has received very little benefit from this increased supply. If an increase in supply does not bring about a lowering of price, the middleman must be having something to say about what shall be the retail price. It seems to me that he, and that these great trusts like the Sugar Trust and the Beef Trust, are going to see that if there is any opportunity of raising prices on account of the new tariff that they will get the first and full advantage of it, and if the farmer gets anything it will, indeed, be a matter of surprise.

There is another fact to be considered in connection with this proposed legislation, and that is that as we are taxing all raw materials we are really lowering the tariff on the manufactured products. The result is that we are not only hitting the necessities of life, but we are also changing the duties on the finished product, doing so without any scientific consideration or upon any sound basis.

There is no question that a measure such as this is very apt to produce retaliation in foreign countries that are good customers of the United States. Canada is a very good customer of ours and her exports of wheat to this country have been small, compared with the things which she purchases from us. The Argentine is already talking of retaliation, and, as the matter has been reported in the press, attention is called to the fact that, while our President has been expressing his faith in the Monroe doctrine, and emphasizing our regard for our neighbors to the south of us, one of the first things we do is to place a high protective duty upon the statute books that can not fail but react on the exports they wish to send us.

Mr. President, there is also the danger that, if this tariff bill works out as its proponents contend, the consumers of the country will continue what they commenced after the recent war, namely, a strike against buying, which can not fail to have a retarding influence upon our return to prespective.

have a retarding influence upon our return to prosperity.

But enough of the agricultural features of the bill. I now wish to turn for a few moments to the provisions of the measure which are contained in the antidumping sections. This is a new feature of the bill, and was apparently added in order that it might afford a new method of extending protection, probably with a hope that it reight attract support from other sections of the country.

The mere fact that the little amount of dumping from which we suffered directly after the war is now over does not apparently appeal to the framers of the bill. The statistics show that to-day we are not suffering at all from commodities being dumped into this country. In spite of that section 201 gives the Secretary of the Treasury the power, which he can delegate, to investigate, and if he finds that any industry in the United States "is being or is likely to be injured or is prevented from being established"—even if an industry does not exist here—if he has an idea that one might be established and is prevented "by reason of the importation into the United States of a class or kind of foreign merchandise" or likely to be sold here "at less than its fair value," he is then directed to make such findings public, describe the merchandise, and give certain instructions to the appraising officers at our ports how to proceed.

In section 202 the bill sets forth that—

If the purchase price or the exporter's sales price is less than the foreign market value (or, in the absence of such value, than the cost of production) there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in addition to the duties imposed thereon by law, a special dumping duty in an amount equal to such difference.

Roughly speaking, this duty is the difference between the export purchase price and the price at which the commodity sells in the market of production.

But the extraordinary feature of this proposed legislation is that it applies not only to dutiable articles but to commodities that are on the free list. Why there should be any objection to admitting to this country commodities that are on the free list, no matter how low the price at which they are sold, is difficult to conceive, for, if I understand the theory of the free list at all, the idea is that certain articles shall be allowed to enter this country without any duty, because by so doing a benefit accrues to us. This special dumping duty simply does away, in part, with the free-list provisions of the existing tariff law.

For the purpose of determining whether in the case of importations there is dumping certain definitions are given. I think that possibly it may be of some interest to the Senate to consider them somewhat in detail, as this section of the bill is novel, and I do not believe it has been very thoroughly studied by many Senators.

The purchase price as defined in section 203 is the price for which an article "has been purchased or agreed to be purchased, prior to the time of exportation," by the importer or his agent. This price shall include "the cost of all containers and coverings"; "all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition, packed ready for shipment to the United States less the amount, if any, included in such price attributable to any costs, charges, United States import duties, and expenses incident to bringing the merchandise from the place of shipment in the country of exportation to the place of delivery in the United States"; the amount of any export duty imposed by the exporting country; the amount of any import duties imposed by the country of exportation which have been rebated or not collected; the amount of taxes imposed in the exporting country "upon the manufacturer, producer, or seller, in respect to the manufacture, production, or sale, which have been rebated, or which have not been collected, by reason of the exportation of the merchandise to the United States."

The next important definition is the exporters' sales price, which is the price for which the goods are sold or agreed to be sold in the United States before or after the time of importation by the exporter or his agents. This price shall include "the cost of all containers and coverings and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition, packed ready for shipment to the United States"; the amount of any import duties imposed by the exporting country which have been rebated or which have not been collected because of exportation to the United States; the amount of any taxes imposed in the exporting country "upon the manufacturer, producer, or seller in respect to the manufacture, production, or sale, rebated, or not collected." This price shall not include any export tax imposed by the exporting country on exportations to the United States or the costs, charges, United States import duties, expenses incident to bringing the goods from the place of shipment in the exporting country to the United States, commissions paid for selling in the United States, and generally expenses incurred by the exporter or agent in the United States in selling identical or substantially identical merchandise.

Then, the foreign market price is the price at which such merchandise is sold or freely offered for sale to all purchasers in the principal markets of the country from which exported, in the usual wholesale quantities and in the ordinary course of trade for home consumption; or, if not, then for exportation to countries other than the United States. This price shall include the cost of all coverings or containers and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition, packed for shipment to the United States. The price at the time of such exportation, or the date of such purchase or agreement to purchase, is to be considered the time at which the price is to be computed.

If we take into account these conditions regarding the purchase price, the export sales price, and the foreign market price of the commodities, it will be seen that theoretically the duty imposed under the dumping clause may possibly be reached. Undoubtedly, if there were any large extent of dumping in this country, it would entail enormous expense to arrive at conclusions under all these technical and difficult enumerations. The expense entailed and the number of appraisers that would be required would undoubtedly be very large; but to my mind one of the iniquities of the provision lies in the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury-and not only the Secretary, but the person upon whom he can confer these powers and duties-is given such very wide discretion as to what shall or shall not be inves-Naturally the Secretary, with all the work that he has do, will be unable to attend to this matter personally, and will have to delegate it. It seems to me most unwise in any case that Congress should allow such wide latitude to any Cabinet official, or to any official, no matter how able. It is unsound in peace times to grant such extensive powers as are contained in this section of the bill.

If a dumping clause is to be considered, the plan of the Underwood tariff bill as it passed the House, but which was rejected in the Senate, should be carried out, and Congress should determine what imports are subject to such dumping duties and what are not; and unquestionably the entire free list should not be included.

Section 403 of the bill relates to the currency provisions, so that there may be a standard for determining the value of the goods in American money; and naturally, in the depreciated condition of European currency, this is an important section. It provides for quarterly estimates by the Director of the Mint, and that if these vary as much as 5 per cent from the value measured by the buying rate in the New York market at noon on the day of exportation, then such latter rate shall govern.

Title V has for its object the continuing of the present legislation on dyes and chemicals. It provides that the license power now exercised by the War Trade Board section of the Department of State shall cease and shall be turned over to the Treasury Department, and continued for six months longer. The reason for turning it over to the Treasury Department is because this was a war measure that was passed in 1918, before the close of the war, and will cease to be in effect if the joint resolution declaring a state of peace to exist, which passed the Senate the other day, is finally passed by the other House and signed by the President.

Personally I believe that it is a mistake to continue these war powers in times of peace. This provision will work hardship to many manufacturers who will be unable to obtain the dyes that they need of the quality they need, and especially it will do harm to the consumer, which is more important, because he will receive clothes dyed with inferior dyes.

Mr. President, I have covered in this very general way my objections to this bill, because, as I said in my introductory remarks, I had already gone very thoroughly into its agricultural features in a speech that I made in the previous Congress. I know the bill is absolutely unscientific. I believe that it is inexcusable, and can not fail to do harm and injustice not only to my own State but to all the people of America who are now going through a period of depression.

As I said before, with between three and five million men out of work, with not very much light appearing, our friends on the other side of the aisle, after coming in on a platform of reducing the high cost of living, are now proceeding in their very first legislation to show how filmsy these promises that were made, what scraps of paper they were. They are repeating their former history, when they were elected on a pledge to revise the tariff, and then passed the Payne-Aldrich bill and revised it upward instead of downward.

For my part, I can but voice my opposition to this measure and vote against it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, does any Senator on the other side wish to speak on this bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; we are ready to listen to the Senator from Mississippi.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives requesting a conference with the Senate on the bill (S. 1084) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes, and the amendment of the House thereto.

Mr. McCORMICK. I move that the Senate disagree to the House amendment, agree to the request for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. McCormick. Mr. Moses, and Mr. Underwood conferees on the part of the Senate.

EMERGENCY TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2435) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies. and to provide revenue; to regulate commerce with foreign countries; to prevent dumping of foreign merchandise on the markets of the United States; to regulate the value of foreign money; and for other purposes.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I desire to submit the following unanimous-consent agreement, which I ask to have read; and I call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Assistant Secretary. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that at not later than 3 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Wednesday, May 11, 1921, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill (H. R. 2435) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, and to provide revenue; to regulate commerce with foreign countries; to prevent dumping of foreign merchandise on the markets of the United States; to regulate the value of foreign money; and for other purposes, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 12.30 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the difficulty which I have always felt existed in regard to agreements of the character now before the Senate is found in the fact that if an amendment, however meritorious it may be, is not voted upon before the hour fixed, there is no time to present the amendment or discuss it. If this proposition could be changed so that after 3 o'clock any amendment brought forward could be discussed under a 5 or 10 minute rule, I would make no objection to it.

I have no desire to delay the passage of the bill. I want to discuss it, but I can not be ready to discuss it as I want to do before Monday. If the Senator from Pennsylvania could modify his request so that it would permit discussion of amendments not to exceed 10 minutes by any one Senator, it would be agreeable to me.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, according to that we would be here, perhaps, until midnight.

That is entirely possible, but it is not likely. Mr. REED.

Mr. PENROSE. I think anything is likely. The Senate has been adjourning or taking a recess at 3 or 4 o'clock in the afternoon because no Democratic Senator was ready to speak. hours yesterday were wasted in a tedious discussion about matters which never should have consumed the time of the Senate, but which should have been ventilated in committee, While I want to defer to the wishes and convenience of Senators having a desire to debate this question, I feel it to be my duty to keep the Senate in session, so far as I am able, and to keep the bill before the Senate, unless we can have some distinct understanding as to when this measure can come to a vote.

I have no assurance, if this request is modified, according to the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, that we can hold a quorum in the evening. This great debate on the so-called emergency tariff bill has been listened to by about three Members of the Senate and one occupant of the correspondents' gal-Does the Senator from Missouri expect a larger audience when he addresses the Senate?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I shall have to take my chances upon an audience. Of course, I do not expect to change the views of the chairman of the committee; I perhaps shall not change the views of a single Member of the Senate; and it may be regarded as an utter nuisance that I say anything upon the bill; but, in so far as I am concerned, I intend to say some things, if not to the Senate, at least to the country, and I do not know whether the country will pay any attention to them or not,

Mr. PENROSE. They will not.

Mr. REED. The Senator may be correct about that; but that is not the question I am discussing. I am discussing the mere reservation of the right of any Senator who sees fit to present an amendment, and to discuss it after 3 o'clock, to have 5 or 10 minutes to call the attention of the Senate to the purpose of the amendment. I have seen amendments defeated when offered the reason for which did not appear until the last moment, and the Senator offering them and other Senators were barred from That is the sitthe opportunity to explain them to the Senate. uation I have in mind.

I repeat, anything I may say may be utterly immaterial and be listened to neither by the country nor the Senate, but that is not the question I am discussing. There is plenty of time reserved under this proposed agreement to allow me to make the speech, which will be a weariness to the flesh of the chairman of the committee and everyone else, perhaps. I am entirely content with 3 o'clock on Wednesday, provided the right is reserved to a Senator offering an amendment to have at least five minutes to explain it to the Senate, and any other Senator ought to have the right, of course, to take the other side.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest to the chairman of the committee that in order to reach an agreement we meet at 11 o'clock on Wednesday and apply the five-minute rule at 12 o'clock. That would give from 12 to 3 for debate on amendments.

Mr. REED. If I understand the Senator, that means a modification of this proposed agreement so that after 12 o'clock on Wednesday no one shall speak more than five minutes, and that we shall vote at 3 o'clock.

Mr. CURTIS. That is the suggestion.

Mr. REED. Make it 10 minutes, and with that modification I shall agree to it.

Let the Secretary read the unanimous-con-Mr. PENROSE. sent agreement as modified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the agreement as modified.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT.

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 3 o'clock p. m., on the calendar day of Wednesday, May 11, 1921, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill (H. R. 2435) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, and to provide revenues; to regulate commerce with foreign countries; to prevent dumping of foreign merchandise on the markets of the United States; to regulate the value of foreign money; and for other purposes, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 12 o'clock meridian, on said calendar day, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than five minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than five minutes upon any amendment offered thereto. offered thereto.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thought it was to be 10 minutes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let it be made 10 minutes.

Mr. REED, Make it 10 minutes.

Mr. PENROSE. A much more preferable speech can be made in 5 than in 10 minutes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I know the impatience of the Senator from Pennsylvania to save the farmers of the country, and that 5 or 10 minutes difference in time will make a very great difference to him. However, I believe there ought to be enough time given for an intelligible explanation of any amendment which may be offered by a Senator. I am speaking of it now not only with reference to this measure but to the general

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator prefers 10 minutes?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. PENROSE. If that will give the Senator a greater feeling of freedom, I will agree to it. I hope the Chair will put

Mr. SIMMONS. The roll must be called.
Mr. PENROSE. The roll was called, and I thought that complied with the rule. However, I am not sure of it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the Senator that I think to make it entirely binding it will be safer to call the roll, because other legislative business was laid before the Senate, and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCormick] moved a conference. To make it entirely within the rule we had better have the roll called.

The unanimous-consent request was sub-Mr. SIMMONS.

mitted after the roll was called and not before.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The Senator from Pennsylvania proposes the unanimousconsent agreement, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT.

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 3 o'clock p. m., on the calendar day of Wednesday, May 11, 1921, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill (H. The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I am informed that no Senator desires to address the Senate to-day on the pending measure, or any other measure, and I therefore move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask that the Senator withhold the motion a moment.

Mr. PENROSE.

Very well; I withhold it.

N. Will the Senator not move an adjourn-Mr. HARRISON. ment instead of a recess until to-morrow?

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Senator prefer an adjournment? Mr. HARRISON. I prefer an adjournment. Mr. PENROSE. If we adjourn, it means that we shall stay here later in the day to-morrow.

Mr. HARRISON. That may be; but to-morrow there will be before the Senate a resolution I served notice that I would call up at the first opportunity, and under the rule I can not call up the resolution to-morrow unless we take an adjournment.

Mr. PENROSE. I shall move an adjournment, but I will withhold it until after a brief executive session for action on certain nominations.

Mr. HARRISON: Very well.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, May 7, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 6, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, may every heart have its hymn as we come before Thee with memories that make life sweet. But as it is an expanding quantity, give us the joy of being unsatisfied; then it shall have a continual growth. We bless Thee for Thy rule and standard of conduct, and may we have delight in Thy statutes, and keep before us the end of the commandment, which is, "Now abideth faith, hope, charity; these three; but the greatest of these is charity." Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5010) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5010, making appropriations for the support of the Army.

QUESTION OF CONSTITUTIONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. TINKHAM rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. TINKHAM. I rise to offer a resolution on a question of high constitutional privilege.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman claim that it is of higher privilege than the motion of the gentleman from Kansas? Mr. TINKHAM. I do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. TINKHAM. I am going to suggest—
Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution be reported.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the absence of a quorum, inasmuch as the matter is of a great deal of importance

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

QUESTION OF CONSTITUTIONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Tinkham] be reported. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers a resolution, which he claims is so privileged as to have precedence over the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill. The Clerk will report the resolution for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution.

Whereas the fourteenth article, in addition to and amendment of the Constitution of the United States, section 2, provides:

"When the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State," and

Whereas it is generally and commonly alleged and is susceptible of proof that in many States of the United States the constitutions thereof and the laws enacted by their legislatures have, in effect, denied or abridged to large numbers of citizens qualified under the Constitution of the United States the right to vote in such States, and that such alleged nullification of the Constitution of the United States the direct or indirect, constitutes flagrant and persistent disregard and violation of the fundamental law of the land and is subversive wholly of law and of liberty itself; and Whereas no greater political discrimination could exist between the several States of the Union and of their citizens than the general conference upon each of the States alke of the power to prescribe qualifications for electors (subject alone to the inhibitions of the fifteenth and nineteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States) upon a basis of population, and the coexistence of an extensive and evasive unconstitutional denial of the exercise of the franchise to some citizens by some States, resulting in disproportionate political power, accentuated and enlarged by the recent enfranchisement of females; and

Whereas the House of Represen

Resolved. That the Committee on the Census or any subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized and directed to proceed forthwith to make diligent inquiry respecting the extent to which the right to vote is denied or abridged to citizens of the United States in any State in violation of the Constitution of the United States; and said committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths to witnesses, to conduct such inquiry at such times and places as the committee may deem necessary, and to report its findings and recommendations to the House at the earliest possible moment, either separately or together with such report as said committee may submit in connection with proposed legislation providing for a reapportionment of Representatives in Congress, to the end that such reapportionment shall be constitutional in form and in fact.

Mr. MONDEUL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order

Mr. MONDELL, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the resolution that it is not privileged under the rules and not privileged under the Constitution, and does not present a question of privilege before the House; and further, if it were privileged, in the present situation of affairs the motion made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony] takes precedence as a privileged question. If the resolution were held in order it would remain for the House to decide whether or not it would take up the Army bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Tinkham].

Mr. Tinkham. Mr. Speaker, Rule IX of the House, entitled "Questions of Privilege," says:

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of Members individually in their representative capacity only; and shall have precedence of all other questions, except motions to adjourn.

Under that rule, on page 284 of the Manual and Digest, under section 656 the following words, decisions, and references ap-

It is evident, therefore, that a question of privilege takes precedence over a matter merely privileged under the rules (Hinds' III, 2526-2530; 6454). So also certain matters of business, arising under provisions: the Constitution, mandatory in nature, have been held to have a rivilege which supersedes the rules establishing the order of business. privilege as bills providing for census or apportionment (Hinds' I, 305-308), bills returned with the objections of the President (IV, 3530-3536), propositions of impeachment (III, 2045-2048, 2051, 2398), and questions incidental thereto (III, 2401, 2418; V, 7261), matters relating to the count of the electoral vote (III, 2573-2578), and resolutions relating to adjournment and recess of Congress (V, 6698, 6701-6706).

All of these decisions, Mr. Speaker, establish the great constitutional legislative doctrine that where there is devolved upon the House of Representatives a duty or a function man-datory in character by the use of the word "shall" in the Constitution, as distinguished from the exercise at its will of a power to legislate where the word "shall" is used in the Constitution, legislation introduced to perform a duty or function mandatory in character as a matter of high constitutional privilege takes precedence over ordinary legislation or over a matter merely privileged under the rules. That is what those cases in Hinds' establish, and that is the great legislative constitu-tional doctrine of this House, and has been the great constitutional legislative doctrine of this House time out of mind.

Such high constitutional privileges relate to legislation, Hinds has said, concerning the census or apportionment. Why? Because Article I, section 2, of the Constitution provides in relation to the census the following:

The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent term of 10 years, in such manner as they shall by law

This is a mandatory injunction upon Congress that a census be taken every 10 years. It is a thing to be done by Congress. Congress has no option and no discretion.

Section 2 of Article XIV in addition to and amendment of the Constitution-and that is the section which involves this resolution that I have offered-provides that-

Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But—

In the same paragraph, with the connective "but" as the only condition upon the making of that apportionment—and there is no other interpretation possible, except as a connective, vital part of that apportionment of Representatives-

But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State being 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State.

This is a mandatory injunction upon Congress that an apportionment of Representatives "shall" be made after the census has fixed the number of inhabitants in the several States, and that there shall be a reduction of the basis of representation where disfranchisement exists. Congress has no option or discretion. Those directions under the Constitution, Mr. Speaker, are mandatory. No apportionment can be made unless if disfranchisement exists the Constitution is carried out in relation to the mandatory section which says that there must be a reduction in representation. Article I, section 7, paragraph 2, of the Constitution provides that the President if he approve a bill shall sign it, but if not he shall-return it with his objections to the House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their journal and proceed to reconsider it.

This is a mandatory injunction upon Congress to proceed to enter the objections at large on their journal and proceed to reconsider the veto of the President. Congress has no option or discretion.

Article XII, in addition to and amendment of the Constitution in relation to the electoral count, provides:

The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all certificates and the votes shall then be counted.

This is a mandatory injunction upon Congress to proceed to count the votes of the electoral college. Congress has no option or discretion.

Article I, section 2, of the Constitution provides:

The House of Representatives shall have the sole power of impeachment.

Although this section is not mandatory in the sense that the House of Representatives must act in the same way that it is mandatory upon it to have the census taken and an apportionment made, and a reduction of representation, and to reconsider a veto of the President, and to count the electoral votes, it gives the House of Representatives the exclusive constitutional power of impeachment, and it has always been held that this power drew to itself high constitutional privilege in relation to presentation of matters of impeachment in the House of Representatives. Although that section is not mandatory, telling Congress it must impeach, the great legislative doctrine for the enforcement of the Constitution is applied to that section, and it has always, from time immemorial, been the right of any Member of this House to stand upon the floor of the House, no matter what business the House might have under consideration, and impeach an officer of the United States for high crimes and misdemeanors.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not arguing the point of order. The point of order is directed against the particular proposition before the House. The gentleman is not arguing the question of his resolution. He is talking about matters of legislation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is arguing the question of constitutional privilege, and that it is so connected that the gentleman's argument is in order.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, there is involved in the decision of this question-

Mr. GALLÎVAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to ask how much time my colleague from Massachusetts has.

The SPEAKER. That is in the discretion of the Chair. Mr. GALLIVAN. I want to vote with my colleague, but if he

Mr. GALLIVAN. I want to vote with my coneague, but if he takes too long a time, he may lose my vote. [Laughter.]
Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, there is involved in the point of order made against my resolution the question of high constitutional privilege which I claim for it, and it is perfectly relevant for me to discuss the whole doctrine of high constitutional privilege. tutional privilege and what it includes, its limits, and its philosophy, whether the honorable Representative from Tennessee realizes it or not. It is impossible that a charge can be made of wasting time on a matter of this character when there is a possibility that decisions which have given strength and force to legislation under the Constitution are in jeopardy.

Article I, section 5, of the Constitution provides that the House shall be judge of election returns and qualifications of its own Members. This gives exclusive constitutional power to the House of Representatives over election cases. always been held that this power drew to itself the high constitutional privilege in relation to the presentation of election The existence of the doctrine of high constitutional privilege has been laid down in decisions vital, sweeping, living decisions by Carlisle (4 Hinds, 3532), Randall (3 Hinds, 2575, 2578, 3577), Keifer (Hinds, 308), Reed (1 Hinds, 307), and Henderson (1 Hinds, 306). The three latter decisions relate to apportionment bills.

There was a decision by Speaker Henderson in the second session of the Fifty-sixth Congress, which will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 520, and in Hinds', volume 1, page 305. That decision, Mr. Speaker, was a sweeping decision of the right of such a resolution as I have introduced to have attached to it the high constitutional privilege. Let me read the decisions. This is in exact point, because the resolution I have offered I have drawn purposely in conformity with the resolution upon which Speaker Henderson ruled. What was Speaker Henderson's ruling just 20 years ago upon such a resolution as mine?

The SPEAKER. The matter seems to the Chair clearly settled by Article XIV, section 2, of the Constitution. This is a most important section, and gravely touches the very vitals of the Republic as such, and makes mandatory upon Congress certain things that shall be done by Congress if certain conditions exist. This resolution alleges that certain things exist—expressly provided for by the section just read by the Clerk. The resolution and the preamble must be considered together. What is the object of the resolution providing for the investigation to be made by the Committee on the Census? It is to ascertain the truth of these facts and lay them before Congress so that proper action may be taken by this body.

My resolution proposes the same thing. There is soon to be made an apportionment of Representatives under the census of 1920 by the Committee on the Census. It is mandatory under the Constitution. It is also mandatory by the Constitution to reduce representation, or the base of representation, in accordance with any disfranchisement. To ascertain what disfranchisement exists so that the Committee on the Census can act in accordance with the Constitution, my resolution has been offered.

Speaker Henderson then said:

Can any wiser course be suggested for carrying out the clear mandates of the Constitution than by the provision of this preamble and the resolution? The grave charges are made and the resolution to carry out the proper investigation and the treatment is before us.

It is here now before us on the Speaker's desk:

The whole matter, waiving all discussion of the rules of this House, comes under the higher rule than our rule, the constitutional rule which is here absolutely mandatory, and the Chair is unable to see why we should wander even among the precedents, which the Chair has looked over to some extent and which are all one way, when we have the plain language of the Constitution before us. The resolution is evidently carefully drawn in pursuance of the language of the Constitution. The Chair only hopes that he will never have occasion to settle a more difficult question than this, which seems to him so simple. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

It was the same point of order 20 years ago that has just been made by the leader of the Republican Party here.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker— Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I have not finished.

Mr. MONDELL. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Mr. TINKHAM. The honorable Representative from Wyoming is granted his pardon; and now I request him not to interrupt me again until I have finished. In the decision of Speaker Henderson, Mr. Speaker, you have the complete and exact precedent for the action I have taken this morning; and the decision, to be found in First Hinds' Precedents, 307, is the first decision and the cornerstone in the great legislative edifice entitled high constitutional privilege.

Now, let me read to you, Mr. Speaker, your general duty to sustain any previous decisions, which has become a precedent of this House.

Hinds, volume 2, 1317, states that the Chair is constrained in his ruling to give precedence its proper influence. On January 10, 1842, Chairman George W. Hopkins, of Virgin 1, in the course of a ruling made in Committee of the Whole,

A chairman does not sit here to expound rules according to his own arbitrary views. A just deference for the opinions of his fellows should constrain him to give to precedent its proper influence; and until the House should reverse them, to give them all the consideration which is due to cases heretofore settled by a solemn decision of

Mr. Speaker, there is a solemn decision of this House on a resolution such as I have offered that it has high constitutional privilege. That is the Henderson decision. Again, to remind the Chair of its duty to maintain precedents and the absolute vital necessity of doing so for the good order of the House and for proper legislative procedure by precedent, to which Members may look for guidance and direction and for the protection of their rights, I want to read an extract from section 1 of Jefferson's Manual of Parliamentary Practice, contained in the Digest and Manual, page 93, immediately after the Constitution of the United States:

SECTION I. IMPORTANCE OF ADHERING TO BULES.

Mr. Onslow, the ablest among the speakers of the House of Commons, used to say, "It was a maxim he had often heard when he was a young man, from old and experienced members, that nothing tended more to throw power into the hands of administration, and those who acted with the majority of the House of Commons, than a neglect of, or departure from, the rules of proceeding; that these forms, as instituted by our ancestors, operated as a check and control on the actions of the majority, and that they were, in many instances, a shelter and protection to the minority against the attempts of power." So far the maxim is certainly true, and is founded on good sense, that as it is always in the power of the majority, by their numbers, to stop any improper measures proposed on the part of their opponents, the only weapons by which the minerity can defend themselves against similar attempts from those in power are the forms and rules of proceeding which have been adopted as they were found necessary, from time to time, and are become the law of the House, by a strict adherence to which the weaker party can only be protected from those irregularities and abuses which these forms were intended to check, and which the wantonness of power is but too often apt to suggest to large and successful majorities.

And whether these forms be in all cases the most rational or not is really not of so great importance. It is much more material that there should be a rule to go by than what that rule is; that there may be a uniformity of proceeding in business not subject to the caprice of the speaker or captiousness of the members.

Mr. Speaker, I want now to direct the attention of the House

Mr. Speaker, I want now to direct the attention of the House and the Speaker to the fact that there is no authority on earth to which an appeal can be made if the House of Representatives does not exercise the mandatory powers which have been devolved upon it by the Constitution. No court, no authority, can compel the House to review, to reconsider, a veto of the President. No power outside of this House can compel this House to count the electoral vote. No authority is there outside of this House itself that can compel a census or an apportionment to be made. Therefore the House, in relation to the mandatory powers that it has, should have the widest latitude given to its membership that those powers may be enforced, Otherwise the Constitution would be nullified. If the Henderson decision is overruled a long and vital step has been taken for the nullification of the Constitution, not only in relation to the enforcement of the fourteenth amendment but a general precedent established.

If the resolution now before the House is sent to a committee it may be stifled there.

You have a Committee on Rules which can make anything in order it desires and anything out of order. To-day as a new creation you have a committee which is known as the steering committee. They are all-powerful. With their action, the action of seven men, unless the constitutional right of a Member to rise here to impeach or raise any question concerning the mandatory sections of the Constitution be recognized, you have nullified the Constitution, so far as the membership of this House individually is concerned. The law as it stands, the precedents as they stand, are that when there is a mandatory section of the Constitution a Member of this body may rise and invoke the operation of that mandate, as I am now doing. Nullification itself follows unless that is so. It is the duty of the Speaker not to take any backward step or close any door in relation to constitutional enforcement, and the doctrine of high constitutional privilege is a great gateway for constitutional enforcement as it applies to the mandatory parts of the Constitution, to take no course which in any way can look to nullification. Not from Massachusetts ever should such leadership come, and yet if the Henderson decision is overruled nullification must inevitably follow. What difference does it make whether the use of this privilege may be used for purposes of delay in the legislative proceedings? That is trifling compared to the fundamental power of each Member in relation to the mandatory sections of the Constitution, which are a vital part of it—its heart, its essence, its soul. If constitutional high privilege is abolished or curtailed by any decision of this House, it will be greeted by applause by those who desire nullification and as little power as possible be given to the supreme law of our land.

The question involved in the resolution is one pertaining to equal representation among the several States of the Union and equal political power among the citizens of the United States. It pertains also to the most colossal electoral fraud the world has ever known. On this question moral cowardice and political expediency dominate the Republican leadership of this

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, in closing I desire to direct the Speaker's attention to the precedent, which is complete and sweeping, in such a resolution as I have presented. I desire to direct his attention to the fact that the mandatory part of the fourteenth amendment pertains not only to the apportionment where it uses the word "shall" but also to the words "shall reduce representation." Both are vital parts, and being vital parts, one of the other, each of the other, therefore this doctrine of high constitutional privilege applies to it, not only by the law of this House and the Henderson decision but by com-I mon sense and by the right of those who believe in the enforcement of the Constitution in full measure and vitality. Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, before I proceed with the discussion of the point of order I desire to call the attention of the House to some of the language used by the gentleman who has just taken his seat. I shall not demand that it be stricken from the Record as under the rules I have the right to do. I desire to have it remain in the RECORD as indicating the character of the gentleman's alleged argument. In his closing statement he said

On this question-and just what question he had in mind is not at all clear-On this question moral cowardice and-

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that the only question before the Chair is the point of order. The gentleman should confine himself to that. Mr. MONDELL. Certainly the Speaker is not going to deny me the right to read two lines of a statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] who has just taken his seat, after allowing him to make the statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has heard the statement. Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order. The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman should confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has just said that moral cowardice and political expediency dominate the Republican leadership of this House. I just wanted to emphasize the fact that the gentleman had made that statement in making what was supposed to be an argument on a point of order, and before anyone, so far as I know, had expressed any opinion as to the point of order. In fact, the gentleman had written that into his manuscript before he offered his resolution.

Mr. Speaker, we have had a most amazing exhibition of what might occur here daily if gentlemen were allowed to extend the rule as to questions of privilege. I am glad the Speaker has allowed the gentleman from Massachusetts such wide latitude. I am glad that he has given him an opportunity to discuss everything that appealed to his fancy during the period in which he was supposed to be discussing, and did discuss to a very limited extent, the question before the House. I am glad that the Chair has given the gentleman opportunity to thus run afield and make a stump speech, because in so doing he has emphasized the danger that confronts the House in even considering these alleged questions of privilege under the Constitution. I am glad that the gentleman has quoted from Jefferson, because his quotation condemns the position he takes. His quotation from Jefferson's Manual is in favor of the rules and the enforcement of the rules, and he himself admits that there is no rule of this House under which this resolution is privileged. It is an amazing thing to me that in presenting a proposition that is privileged under no rule or any possible construction of any rule of the House, the gentleman should appeal to a statement as forceful as any ever made as to the wisdom, propriety, and necessity of adhering to the rules laid down to guide and govern legislative bodies.

Mr. TINKHAM. Does the gentleman deny the existence of the Henderson decision?

Mr. MONDELL. One sparrow never made a summer, particularly so thin and discredited a sparrow as I shall attempt to point out in just a moment, if the gentleman will allow me. I did not interrupt the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TINKHAM. Only once.

What I want to emphasize is that there is no rule of this House which by any possible construction made or urged at any time by anyone which would make this resolution privileged. If it is privileged at all, it must be privileged outside of, beyond, and in spite of the rules, and I am at a loss to understand why the gentleman invokes in defense of his contention, which offends all the rules, an argument in favor of the maintenance of the rules.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman presents this as a question of constitutional privilege. I shall not argue that there are not questions of constitutional privilege not provided for in the rules, but I insist that this resolution does not present such a privilege. If by merely invoking or referring to or calling up a provision of the Constitution and alleging that somewhere it has not been enforced, if by so doing a gentleman may have a resolution held to be privileged, we may expect a crop of such resolutions every morning of the session. [Applause.] Some might be presented relative to the nonenforcement of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.] Some might be desirous of presenting a resolution relative to the enforcement or nonenforcement of the nineteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and so on, through the Constitution from beginning to the end. If a resolution simply reciting a constitutional provision and containing a claim or argument to the effect that it is violated or nonenforced presents a question of privilege, then, Mr. Speaker, good-by to the consideration of measures in this House under the rules, for then gentlemen might do every day of the session as the gentleman from Massachusetts has done. Without suggesting to anyone on this side, as far as I know, what he purposed, without giving anyone a moment's notice or opportunity by any act of his, he suddenly presents here an important ques-tion under the claim that it is privileged under the Constitution. If gentlemen may prepare at their leisure long typewritten arguments in support of resolutions, present them without the Members of the House having had any knowledge or intimation or suggestion that they are to be presented, without the Members having an opportunity to learn what is contained in the resolution except by its reading-I have not been able to get a copy of this resolution, and I have learned what it contains only by hearing it read and by going to the Clerk's desk and reading it—if questions of alleged constitutional privilege may be brought into the House under those conditions and gentlemen given unlimited time to argue and discuss them, why, there is an end to orderly business in the House. I invoke the words of Speaker Onslow, quoted from the manual by the gentleman from Massachusetts, when he said that minorities found their only protection in the rules, and that majorities could only legislate intelligently in accordance with them. Mr. Speaker, as I have said, there is no rule of this House that by any possible construction could be held to make this resolution in order, and the gentleman from Massachusetts makes no such claim.

Mr. TINKHAM. It is not so, Mr. Speaker. Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman made no claim under the The gentleman made his claim as a matter of constitutional privilege outside the rule.

Mr. TINKHAM. Yes; the highest rule in this body.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, why does the gentleman challenge my Mr. MONDELL. Well, why does the gentleman challenge my statement and in the next breath admit that what I said is an exact statement of the truth?

Mr. TINKHAM. The constitutional rule is a part of the rules of this House

Mr. MONDELL. I say again there is no rule of this House that has been invoked or can be invoked in support of this resolution, and further than that, Mr. Speaker, there is but one decision in the whole history of the Congress that can be invoked in support of it. The gentleman has invoked that decision, and I want to refer to it briefly. I was in the Congress at the time that decision was made, and having hurriedly read the debate, after the gentleman offered his resolution, I recall, somewhat dimly, it is true, but I still recall some of the facts concerning that decision and the action of the House following it. Let me again emphasize to the Speaker that, first, there is no privilege for this resolution under the rules; second, there is no place for it under any decision made since the first Congress convened save one, and that one flies in the face of all the practice and decisions of the House. Now, let us see what that decision was and how it came to be made. The gentleman from Massachusetts has referred to it. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Olmsted, on January 3, 1901, presented a resolution somewhat in the form of the resolution now before us, not in the exact form; as a matter of fact, I have not had time to compare the two to learn in what respect they differ, but evidently the gentleman from Massachusetts has no new idea or thought in the matter, and he has evidently attempted to copy Mr. Olmsted's resolution. That resolution was offered in the Fiftysixth Congress, second session, which had a large Republican majority. The gentleman from Iowa, Mr. Henderson, was in the chair. A point of order was made against the resolution. There was some debate, not very much. The matter was not argued at length, but at the end of a rather brief argument the Speaker overruled the point of order and held the resolution in order. Then what happened? And I call the Speaker's attention to what happened, as indicating the attitude of that House touching that wide departure from the established rules and practice of the Congress. That was a Republican House with a goodly majority. Immediately after the decision the question of consideration was raised. Remember, this was a Republican House with a Republican Speaker

Mr. TINKHAM. Who raised the question of consideration?

The gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. TINKHAM. Alabama!

Mr. MONDELL.

Mr. TINKHAM. The Democratic leader?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. TINKHAM. I know all the facts.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; leaders have responsibilities. Sometimes other gentlemen do not recognize that they have, [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not wish-

Mr. MONDELL. I assume we are not deciding the point of order on the question of whether the point was made by a man from Wyoming or from Alabama or from Maine or from

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not wish to curtail the gentleman's argument, but the Chair does not see what effect it has on the point of order. If the gentleman thinks it has, the Chair will listen to him.

Mr. MONDELL. The Chair will agree with me that the action of the House of Representatives touching and affecting, and following a decision-a decision at variance with a long line of decisions and at variance with the general rule—is a very important matter. The question of consideration was raised. On that, in this Republican House, the yeas were 80 and the nays were 83. A point of no quorum was made. Whereupon an effort to secure a quorum was made. A motion was then made to adjourn, and the House adjourned. And, so far as I know

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that has no bearing on the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. So far as I know, no action was taken by the House on the matter. I submit that has some bearing on

While the vote was not squarely on the decision, the House refused to act on the resolution, and adjourned, and took no further action in the matter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, just one word more. I do not want to try the patience of the Chair and the House. This is a tremendously important matter, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Tinkham] suggests. That is the question as to whether or not by merely invoking a provision of the Constitution a gentleman may present a privileged question and interrupt the orderly processes and discussions of the House. It is an important matter. The question involved in the inquiry which he proposes and suggests is also important, but it is a question that can be taken care of and provided for under the rules of the House in due course. A resolution of this kind would be referred to a proper committee; in due course that committee could be compelled by the House to report if it did not report on its own motion and volition; in due course the matter could be taken up and passed upon. There is no situation now different from the situation that has existed for years, There is no special urgency; there is nothing before us that has not been before us for years. So that, important as the question involved in the resolution may be, the question can and will be passed upon in an orderly and proper way under the rules of the House. On the other hand, the question of privilege is an important question that must be settled now. If, Mr. Speaker, in the early days of the Republic, when the volume of business was limited, when the questions before the Congress were few and comparatively simple, the fathers saw the necessity of providing rules for the procedure of the House with a view of preventing the presentation of questions that had not been considered by committees and presented to the House in an orderly way, if in those days it was necessary to protect the House, its committees, and its procedure, as to the questions that could be brought directly to an issue by limiting the rule as to privi-lege, how much more important in this day, when the volume of business is almost overwhelming and its importance infinitely greater than most of the business of former days. If in these days, when Congress must remain in session eight or nine months in the year to transact its business, compared with three or four months of the early days, if the bars are let down to privileges which may be established by a mere reference to the Constitution of the United States, then we might just as well admit that we can not and do not expect to dispose of the Government's and the people's business.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. WALSH. If this resolution is in order, would not a motion be in order to refer it to a committee?

Mr. MONDELL. Even if this resolution were in order just at this time there is another resolution before the House entitled to consideration by the House, namely, to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the Army bill. But, Mr. Speaker, whatever may be the answer to the gentleman's question, it does not matter. What I am arguing against are decisions that would encourage gentlemen every day of the year, and every day of the session, to present, under one pretext or another, certain questions as questions of constitutional privilege, when they can be provided for and cared for and disposed of under the ordinary rules of the House.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to point out to the Speaker one or two aspects of the gentleman's argument. suggests that the question of privilege being interjected into the proceedings of the House interrupts the orderly procedure of the House and stops the business under consideration, and that because nobody has had an opportunity to examine a resolution offered under a claim of privilege that therefore a point of order should lie against it.

As I understand, the rules of the House pertain to questions of privilege, and a Member is under no obligation to notify any other Member that he desires to raise that question, and that therefore that can not have any bearing upon the point of order. Now, further, he alludes to the fact that a certain action, taken after a decision upon a point of order, expressed the opinion of the House as to whether the matter was in order or not. Mr. Speaker, that has nothing to do with it. If an appeal had been taken from the decision, certainly that would express the view. But, Mr. Speaker, I think the Chair will find that the gentleman who offered the resolution in the previous Congress made a very learned argument upon that point of order. As I recall-

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Mr. WALSH. I do not yield for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.
Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order the gentleman is not discussing the question of a point of

Mr. WALSH. I do not think the gentleman knows whether am discussing it or not. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will yield to the gentleman from Maryland to present a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gallivan] made, that the gentleman is not discussing the question before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The gentleman from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, in order to present a question of privilege a Member must do it on his responsibility as a Member of this House, and it must affect either his own rights and privileges or those of the House; and I think the only question for the Chair here to decide is. notwithstanding the absence of any specific rule under which the House is operating, whether, when a Member upon his own responsibility rises in his place and presents a resolution setting forth the existence of certain facts, that resolution is privileged, can be repealed by the House and referred or acted upon, or proceeded with under the ordinary rule.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee and Mr. TINKHAM rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Tinkham] first.
Mr. Tinkham. Mr. Speaker, I desire to respond first to the statement of the honorable Representative from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell]. He stated that he had not seen the "resolve except for a moment or two at the Speaker's desk, and he said that he was not very well acquainted with the question. Let the House value his opinion by his own confession of his ignorance of this matter.

Again he said, "One swallow does not make a summer."
[Laughter.] I understand, Mr. Speaker, he said in fact "one sparrow," but the classic version is "swallow," notwithstanding the eighteenth amendment. [Laughter.]

Let me say in response to that suggestion that one decision of the Supreme Court makes the law of this land, and one decision in this House makes the supreme law of this House, and we have a supreme decision in this matter.

Again, Mr. Speaker, he stated that there are a great number of measures under the Constitution which could be raised at any time by the doctrine I contend for. There are only, as I pointed out, and as appears in section 656 of the Manual and Digest which I have read, a very few matters of constitutional mandatory character to which this high constitutional privilege appertains and each is sustained by full decisions.

The honorable Representative from Wyoming states that the House refused to act 20 years ago after the Henderson decision. Suppose they did refuse to act. Does that mean that they could not have acted or that they should not have acted? Read the Constitution and the fourteenth amendment, which is manda-tory in character, and which says they should act. Read the Constitution and see if this Congress is not now under the oaths which its Members took to support the Constitution compelled to enforce the mandatory section of the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. TINKHAM. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is arguing that unless the House acts now on this matter it can not be acted upon. It can be acted upon at the proper time and in the proper way under the rules

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I introduced under the rules of the House in the last Congress this very resolution, not knowing of its high constitutional privilege. It was referred to a committee controlled by the honorable Representative from Wyoming, and I could not even open the door of the room to see the resolution. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I have had my experience under the rules of the House, and I now invoke my sovereign rights under the Constitution and the invoke my sovereign. rights under the Constitution and the decisions in this House and the high constitutional privilege which attaches to my reso-

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

TINKHAM. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman does me altogether too much I control no committees, and I never discussed this particular matter with any member of the committees he refers to.

Mr. TINKHAM. The honorable Representative from Wyoming is altogether too modest. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a minute?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts must confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to

Mr. TINKHAM. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. I am greatly interested in having recalled to this House the argument made by Mr. Olmsted 20 years ago-one of the most learned lawyers ever produced by the State of Pennsylvania. I heard it, and I am sorry I can not recall it

Mr. TINKHAM. I will ask the honorable Representative from Pennsylvania if he agreed with the argument of Mr. Olmsted when he made it? [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. Of course, he knew so much more than I did about it that I agreed with him. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, there is one more authority I would like to read to you, and then I will rest my case with the Speaker-a Representative from Massachusetts. Volume 3 of Hinds' Precedents, section 2553, says:

A proposition involving a question of constitutional privilege may supersede a pending motion to suspend the rules. On March 2, 1877, Mr. David Dudley Field, of New York, from the Select Committee on Privileges, Powers, and Duties of the House of Representatives, in counting the vote for President and Vice President of the United States, reported a bill (H. R. 4698) to provide an effectual remedy for a wrongful intrusion into the office of President and Vice President of the United States.

Mr. Omar D. Conger, of Michigan, made the point of order that the bill could not be reported or considered pending a motion to suspend the rules, which motion he claimed to have made before the bill was read.

The Speaker held the report made by Mr. Field from the committee be first in order, a question of high constitutional privilege being

I rest my case. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not wish to suggest any indifference to the suggestions of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], and if he urges it, the Chair will hear him; but the Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not care to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair at the outset wishes to acknowledge the courtesy and consideration which have been shown him by his colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM], in bringing this matter to his attention in advance, and telling him frankly his position, so that the Chair has had ample opportunity throughly to investigate the precedents, and if the Chair's decision is erroneous, it is not because of lack of time, or for lack of courtesy on the part of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Chair also suggests that of course this decision is entirely independent of the merits of the resolution. It is strictly and exclusively a matter of parliamentary law, and that has been recognized in the arguments, and the Chair recognizes it in his decision.

The Chair thinks that if this question were brought up as an original question, and there were no precedents upon it. every Member of the House would at once say, "Why, of course this can not be admitted as privileged," because it would give the right to any Member of the House at any time to bring forward a resolution affecting some constitutional provision and to claim that his individual resolution can at once set aside all the regular business of the House, and must be considered by the House in preference to anything else. That puts it above the rules of the House and allows one man, and one after another if filibustering is desired, to bring before the House a question that he has in advance prepared, and insist that his individual will and preference shall change the regular order which the House itself has established just because a clause of the Constitution is affected. So the Chair thinks that if this were a matter of first impressions, there would be no question about it. The Chair at any rate would have no question about it. But there is an exact precedent for this which has been followed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, and that has much embarrassed the Chair in coming to his decision. This whole question of a constitutional privilege being superior to the rules of the House is a subject which the Chair has for many years considered, and thought unreasonable. It seems to the Chair that where the Constitution orders the House to do a thing, the Constitution still gives the House the right to make its own rules and do it at such time and in such manner as it may chose, and it is a strained construction, it seems to the Chair, to say that because the Constitution gives a mandate that a thing shall be done, it therefore follows that any Mem-ber can insist that it shall be brought up at some particular time and in the particular way which he chooses.

If there is a constitutional mandate, the House ought by its rules to provide for the proper enforcement of that mandate, but it is still a question for the House how and when and under what procedure it shall be done, and a constitutional question, like any other, ought to be decided according to the rules that the House has adopted. But there have been a few constitutional questions-very few-which have been held by a series of decisions to be of themselves questions of privilege above the rules of the House. There is the question of the President's veto, and to the Chair that seems to be the only one to which there is any good reason to give a privileged status, because the Constitution says that when the President sends a veto to the House the House shall "proceed to" consider it; and that is apparently a definite order which can fairly be interpreted to mean that it shall be done at once, and that has been the practice of the House, and it has been held that without a rule in obedience to the Constitution a President's veto should be acted upon not immediately but within a day or two.

Another subject which has been given constitutional privilege is impeachment. It has been held that when a Member rises in his place and impeaches an officer of the Government he can claim a constitutional privilege which allows him at any time to push aside the other privileged business of the House. To the Chair that does not seem rational. Although impeachment is a matter of constitutional privilege, yet there is no reason why it should not be introduced like any other matter, go into the basket, and be reported by a committee. But inasmuch as the long line of precedents has given it a privilege, the Chair would not think of overruling them; but the Chair can see no intrinsic reason for the privilege. It is simply a matter of precedent.

Then have come the two questions of the census and of apportionment. The Constitution provides that a census shall be taken every 10 years, and that after the census is taken there shall be an apportionment, and there is a line of decisions holding that because of that constitutional provision, although the rules of the House have not given the Committee on the Census a privileged status, they can come in ahead of other questions of privilege, although the House will remember that a few years ago the theory that a constitutional privilege was higher than the rules of the House received a damaging blow when it was attempted to bring up a census bill on Calendar Wednesday.

Speaker Cannon held that it was in order to do so, but the House overruled that decision and sustained the sanctity of Calendar Wednesday, and held that a census bill could not come up on that day, thereby deciding that the rule of the House which sets aside Calendar Wednesday is of higher authority than the constitutional privilege of the census bill.

But these questions of impeachment and others came up in the early days of the Congress, when the relative value of a privilege made little difference. In the first half century of our existence the House was not crowded with business. thing that came before the House had ample opportunity to be heard and decided, and the question whether a subject was privileged or not was not of the same moment that it is to-day. when our calendars are crowded, when it is impossible to transact a tenth part of the business which is presented to the House, and when it is of vital importance to the House that it shall be able to determine an order of business and to consider those bills which it considers of the greatest importance. And apparently recognizing that in 1880 the House for the first time adopted a rule defining questions of privilege. It was found necessary to check the tendency to claim the floor by alleging that a matter was privileged, and so Rule IX was adopted, which says:

Questions of privilege shall be first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of Members individually in their representative capacity only; and shall have precedence of all other questions, except motions to adjourn.

It is fair to say that when that rule was adopted a motion was made that no other questions except those specified should be questions of privilege; and by that undoubtedly it was intended to shut out those questions of constitutional privilege which by long practice had become established. But that was voted down. The House obviously thought that it was not safe to say that there should be no questions of privilege except these described in Rule IX. That was in 1880, and the House had then recently, in the Hayes-Tilden contest, had a very vivid experience how important a question of privilege might be when Speaker Randall, in a turbulent House and in a great emergency, when an element in his own party was endeavoring to filibuster against the counting of the vote, held that the law of Congress and the necessity of determining the election was above the rules of the House, and insisted that there should be a vote. The Chair thinks it quite natural that Members who had had that recent experience should feel that it was not safe to decide that there should be no other questions of privilege than these described.

But this Rule IX was obviously adopted for the purpose of hindering the extension of constitutional or other privilege.

If the question of the census and the question of apportionment were new questions, the Chair would rule that they were not questions of constitutional privilege, because, while of course it is necessary to obey the mandate of the Constitution and take a census every 10 years and then make an apportionment, yet there is no reason why it should be done to-day instead of to-morrow. It seems to the Chair that no one Member ought to have the right to determine when it should come in in preference to the regular rules of the House, but that the rules of the House or the majority of the House should decide it. But these questions have been decided to be privileged by a series of decisions, and the Chair recognizes the importance of following precedents and obeying a well-established rule even if it is unreasonable that this may be a government of laws and not of men.

Now comes the decision by Speaker Henderson which stands alone on all fours with the present case. Shall it be followed? If you will notice the ruling of Speaker Henderson, you will see that it was not a carefully reasoned opinion. It seems to have been an impulsive, offhand opinion. He says:

The Chair is unable to see why we should wander even among the precedents, which the Chair has looked over to some extent and which are all one way, when we have the plain language of the Constitution before us.

He does not consider it necessary to consider precedents, but relies on the plain language of the Constitution. But, as I have already indicated, I do not agree that the language of the Constitution gives any privilege superior to the rules of the House. The plain language of the Constitution simply provides for equal representation. But this resolution and the resolution upon which Speaker Henderson ruled did not provide that at all, it did not pretend to carry out the mandate of the Constitution. This resolution simply says the Committee on Census is directed to proceed forthwith to make diligent inquiry. An inquiry is all the resolution provides, and the Chair finds it difficult to see why on a new question Speaker Henderson ruled as he did if he had given the matter careful investigation. He himself said within a year of that time in passing on the question of the constitutional privilege of the census:

If this were an original question, the Chair would be inclined to hold that if the House adopts rules of procedure and leaves out any committee from the list of committees whose reports are privileged, that that committee would be remitted to those rules of procedure adopted by the House for its guidance.

He agrees with the present occupant of the chair that, except for precedent, the Committee on the Census could not claim the constitutional privilege.

Therefore it seems to the Chair, there being this one precedent, and no others, and the claim of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Tinkham] being directly hostile to the control of the House over its own business, it being an attempt to broaden the figment of constitutional privilege, which in 1880 the House started to limit, and which it seems to the Chair for the orderly prosecution and control by the House of its business ought to be narrowed rather than broadened, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I most respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the motion on the table.

Mr. TINKHAM. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion and have a straight vote of the House on the matter overruling a previous decision.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would be for the advantage of the House for the future to have a straight vote on the appeal. The Chair recognizes that this is a matter for the House to determine, and an appeal is entirely proper, and the Chair would be glad to have the gentleman from Wyoming withdraw his motion and have the vote come directly on the question.

Mr. MONDELL. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House? and on that the gentleman from Massachusetts demands the year and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 286, nays 47, not voting 96, as follows:

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted Mr. Brennan until May 10, 1921, on account of official business.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentle-man from Kansas that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5010) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill, with Mr. Tilson in

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose an amendment had been offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull], and a point of order had been reserved against the amendment. Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Hell: Page 16, line 10, after the word "is," strike out the words "authorized in his discretion" and insert "directed under such reasonable regulations as he may prescribe"; in line 12, after the word "men," insert "serving in the continental United States"; line 13, after the word "discharges," insert the words "until the number in the Army has been reduced to 150,000 enlisted men, not including the Philippine Scouts."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. What was the point of order made against the amendment that has just been reported?

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair now recalls it, it was that it is not germane to the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. Has there been a discussion on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. There had not been any discussion. The point of order had not been made, it was reserved, so that debate was going on by unanimous consent.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the point of order was reserved by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKenzze]. Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, is the point of order still reserved?

The CHAIRMAN. If nobody wishes to make it.

Mr. WALSH. I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa wish to be heard upon his amendment?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I spoke on Saturday in regard to it. I do not see how the point of order can be made against the amendment. The amendment is germane to the language of the bill. No point of order has been made against the language contained in the bill. My amendment simply changes the language that is in the bill, and it is surely germane. It changes it from an authorization to the Secretary of War to a direction to the Secretary of War.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. After all is said and done, one set of words will amount to the same as the other.

Mr. HULL. The same language exactly. One is a direction.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is not a direction; it is in his discretion.

Mr. HULL. One is mandatory in a way. It is more mandatory than it was in the original language.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, there has been considerable discussion about the matter of the discharge of enlisted men from the service, and I have here a letter written by the Secretary of War to Mr. Kahn, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I ask unanimous consent that that letter be read in my time. The CHAIRMAN.

Is there objection?

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, May 2, 1921.

Was Department, Washington, May 2, 1921.

Hon. Julius Kahn,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

My Dear Mr. Kahn: I have observed in the debate in the House of Representatives last Saturday some discussion on the power and authority of the Secretary of War to grant discharges to enlisted men of the Army on their own application.

Concerning this matter, I desire to say that I had gone into it after taking charge of the office of the Secretary of War, and I found that in the Digest of Opinions of the Judge Advocate General, 1912, page 441, the opinion stated: "Discharges by favor are illegal." As the opinion of the Judge Advocate General was not concurred in by certain Members of Congress, on April 21, 1921, I called again for a review of the matter by the office of the Judge Advocate General and asked the specific question, "In the absence of legislation, has the Secretary of War the power to discharge enlisted men by favor?"

The Acting Judge Advocate General, in an opinion rendered April 28, 1921, reviews the history of discharges and refers specifically to section 4, act of June 16, 1890 (26 Stat., 158), in which Congress permitted enlisted men to purchase discharge from the Army, and section 30, act of February 2, 1901 (31 Stat., 748), in which discharge on account of dependency is anthorized. The Judge Advocate General quotes from a former opinion of his office, as follows:

"Prior to the passage of the act of June 16, 1890, it has been held by this office that the fourth article of war gave an unrestricted power to the President, the Secretary of War, and the commanding officer of a department to grant discharges. The purpose of the act of June 16, 1890, was evidently to restrict the authority granted by the fourth article of war to discharges by purchase only, except, of course, as to discharges for the benefit and convenience of the Government, not involving the distinction in principle that this law apparently established between discharges by favor and those by purchase, struction to be placed upon these laws, as it must be quite clear that it could not have been intended as an enlargement of power, as the statutes in the more extensive power already granted naturally included that conveyed by the acts of 1890 and 1901. Then it must have been intended as a restrictive, if it is to be given any meaning at all.

"These two laws have been restated, with certain rules prescribed for carrying them into effect, in General Orders, 90, War Department, June 30, 1911, with a provision, as to that of June 16, requiring completion of one year's service before a discharge by purchase will be granted.

"2 * It is my opinion * * that the law on the subject granted.

"" * It is my opinion * * * that the law on the subject of discharges by favor is correctly stated in paragraph 8, General Orders, 90, 1911:

"Discharges by favor as distinguished from purchase are illegal and will not be granted, except under the conditions set forth in paragraph 9 of this order."

He reviewed at length the administrative application of this decision during the past 10 years, and gives his opinion as follows:

"That under the statute law and the long-established interpretation thereof and practice thereunder, the Secretary of War is not warranted in granting discharges by favor, except as specially authorized by Congress."

in granting discharges by favor, except as specially authorized by Congress."

This interpretation of the statutes was recognized also by Congress itself in the act making appropriations for the Army, which failed of approval by the President of the United States in the Sixty-sixth Congress, since it was therein stated:

"And the Secretary of War is authorized in his discretion to grant applications for discharge of enlisted men without regard to the provisions of existing law respecting discharges."

Clearly, if the Secretary of War had the power to grant any applications of enlisted men for discharge, the enactment of such legislation would be unnecessary and useless.

Furthermore, this same language appears in the present Army appropriation bill, page 16, line 10, which was under discussion last Saturday, and confirms me in my belief that my legal advisers have been correctly interpreting the law in this matter.

I also have noted the case of Pvt. Patrick Dominic, which was discussed upon the floor of the House by Mr. Dowell. In this case the law is mandatory and provides for discharge on account of dependency only for such disability as occurs "by reason of death or disability of a member of the family of the enlisted man occurring after his enlistment." The statement of Mr. Dowell was that the death of the mother of this man had occurred before enlistment, and clearly the case could not be approved under the law.

Sincerely, yours,

JOHN W. WEEKS, Secretary of War.

Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. MONDELL. Has the point of order been reserved
The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The gentleman from Massachusetts

[Mr. Walsh] reserved the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the letter just read from the Secretary of War, and perhaps with a view of tending to clarify the point at issue, I ask that the Clerk read a copy of article 108 of the Articles of War, as enacted on June 4, 1920, that it may go into the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ART. 108. Soldiers—Separation from the service: No enlisted man, lawfully inducted into the military service of the United States, shall be discharged from said service without a certificate of discharge signed by a field officer of the regiment or other organization to which the enlisted man belongs or by the commanding officer when no such field officer is present; and no enlisted man shall be discharged from said service before his term of service has expired, except by order of the President, the Secretary of War, the commanding officer of a department, or by sentence of a general court-martial.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the paragraph which this amendment seeks to amend is entirely legislation.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The question of germaneness, in the opinion of the Chair, is the only question which can be raised at this time.

Mr. MONDELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. MONDELL. I desire to be heard upon the merits of the matter, if I may.

Mr. ANTHONY.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull] when he offered his amendment could have understood what its effect would be. He certainly does not want to make the Army of the United States a mere mob, he certainly does not want to render ineffective the Articles of War, and I am sure he does not want to create a condition under which a garrison could ground its arms at almost any moment and demand a discharge, and yet that might easily be the effect of his amendment.

And that is exactly what would be likely to happen if this mendment were adopted. The amendment provides, as I amendment were adopted. understand it—and the gentleman from Iowa will correct me if I am not correct-that the Secretary of War is directed to grant all applications for the discharge of enlisted men within the continental United States without regard to the provisions of existing law. In other words, he must, he is called upon, he is compelled forthwith to discharge every man who asks a dismarge. Is not that the effect of the gentleman's language?

Mr. HULL. Why, certainly not.
Mr. MONDELL. Then, what is it?

Mr. HULL. Under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, the gentleman from Iowa certainly does not intend the committee to believe that he offered a mandatory provision and at the same time expects the Secretary of War under the guise of rules and regulations to deny the mandate of the provision he offers. The provision now in the bill gives the Secretary of War full and complete authority, in his discretion, to discharge men on their request. The gentleman is not satisfied with that. He would direct the Secretary of War to discharge them on their application.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MONDELL. If Congress directs the Secretary to discharge on application, the Secretary has no right, under any pretense of rules and regulations, to retain men in the service, and the gentleman knows it. If all the gentleman wants to do, all he desires to do, is to have the Secretary discharge men who apply for discharge when, in his discretion, they can be discharged without injury to the service, full authority for that is contained in the bill now.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.
Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Under the effect of the amendment, as the gentleman from Wyoming has stated it, if an enlisted man is under charges which would lead to his courtmartial, and if pending the holding of that he would ask to receive his discharge, he would escape all penalty?

Mr. MONDELL. That is true; or if a company were ordered to duty, or a regiment or a command, and were lined up ready to march, they would have to be discharged on their application. Oh, the gentleman shakes his head, but if that is not the intent of the amendment, then, in Heaven's name, what is it offered for? If it is not a mandatory provision-

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman allow me to answer?
Mr. MONDELL. What is it offered for? Under a strict interpretation of that direction no man could be court-martialed for refusing to disobey an order that might be issued after he had filed his request to be discharged.

The bill now gives the Secretary full authority to discharge men who apply for discharge when they can be discharged without detriment to the service, in the following language:

And the Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to grant applications for discharge of enlisted men without regard to the provisions of existing law respecting discharges.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. HULL. In the Articles of War read by the Clerk full authority is given to the Secretary of War to discharge. At the present time they are not doing it.

Mr. MONDELL. And the gentleman proposes to put in the law a mandatory provision under which every enlisted man in the Army of the United States could file his application for discharge and thereupon and thereafter refuse to obey orders. Gentlemen, it is all right-

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MONDELL (continuing). For us to proceed reasonably in reducing the size of the Regular Army. No man on this floor, no man anywhere, has worked more earnestly and faithfully than I have to that end, in season and out of season, and at all times I have been endeavoring to reduce military expenditures. But, gentlemen, let us not make the Army of the United States a mockery and a mob. I will go as far as it is possible without injury to the service to reduce these expenditures. For two years I have been laboring with the House and the committees to reduce them, and we have reduced them far below the estimates, to a sum less than half of the estimates, but you can not overnight reduce a Military Establishment from 235,000 to 150,000 men without absolutely wrecking it and destroying its usefulness. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the apprehensions of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] are not well founded, and it seems to me further that this amendment is a very proper corollary, though it may not be a wholly necessary one, to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] adopted by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union when this bill was last under consideration. The Byrnes amendment reduced the appropriation. This amendment is designed to give direction for a reduction, a direction that it is in the power of the Congress to give. Now, gentlemen of the committee, particularly those of you who voted a reduction of the Army, I trust I may address you calmly and without any sort of politi-

The late Secretary of War, Mr. Baker, has been very much criticized on the floor of the House and elsewhere because he indorsed the action of the General Staff in enlisting men far beyond the amount of the appropriation, thereby creating a defi-There has been no suggestion from any source that Secretary Baker or the General Staff violated any law in doing this, But the suggestion has been that they violated the will of Congress, because Congress had manifested its will by limiting the appropriation to an amount sufficient for an Army of 175,000

I called attention to the fact when the Army appropriation bill was being discussed in the last session of the last Congress, that an amendment was offered here last May when the bill was up at that time limiting the size of the Army permanently to 185,000 men, and that that was voted down in the House by a vote of 222 to 115. And I suggested that the Secretary of War and the General Staff might find in that expression of the House at that time some justification at least for proceeding with the enlistments beyond the number that was appropriated for, to wit, 175,000; in that the Congress itself, although limiting the appropriation to 175,000 men, had refused to limit the Army

What is the practical situation confronting the Congress now in this matter? The Committee of the Whole by a very decided majority, with an unusually large vote, when this bill was last under consideration, adopted an amendment which cut the appropriation to 150,000 men, thereby evidencing the desire of this Congress at this time unquestionably to limit the Army to that size for the next fiscal year. Now, what is the situation, gentlemen? The present Secretary of War is not in sympathy with the position of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee

has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to object, but the gentleman has used five minutes, but not on the point of order, and it seems as though that were a reasonable length of time to discuss the general proposition. The gentleman has not been discussing the matter under consideration at all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am endeavoring to reach the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman from Wyoming that personally I would prefer the point of order should be disposed of before I talk on the merits at all. But the gentleman himself was talking on the merits of the amendment and not upon the point of order when he spoke.

Mr. MONDELL. It seems to me, as the gentleman has not discussed matters relating to the point of order in five minutes, we should get to the discussion of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was reserved to allow the gentleman from Wyoming to speak.

Mr. MONDELL. And I did speak for five minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing to yield the floor if the point of order will be taken up.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let the Chair rule on the point of order and then we can proceed. Will the Chair rule on the point of order?

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to discuss the point

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, the whole paragraph is subject to a point of order, as the Chair suggests. However, that point of order was not made. Therefore it becomes a part of the bill proper for consideration. Now, the point of order with regard to this particular amendment is that it is not germane. It seems to me that clearly it is germane. The particular sentence in the original bill is as follows:

The Secretary of War is authorized in his discretion to grant applications for discharge of enlisted men without regard to the provisions of existing law respecting discharges.

The amendment is as follows, so that that particular paragraph will read:

And the Secretary of War is directed under such reasonable regula-tions as he may prescribe to grant applications for discharge—

And so forth. So it will be seen, I think, clearly, by the Chair, that there is no question but what the amendment refers to the particular matter directly. In effect it only changes "is authorized in his discretion," and "directs" him. To say that is not a germane provision it seems to me is going altogether too far. So it appears that as far as the question of germaneness is concerned the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] is clearly within the rule.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I admit that the question is a rather close one, yet I am rather inclined to be and am of the opinion that the amendment is not germane. If it is germane, it is germane to the sentence, "The Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to grant applications for discharge of enlisted men, notwithstanding the provisions of existing law." That is an extension of the discretion of a departmental officer under which, notwithstanding the provisions of the existing law, he may during the period that this bill is in force grant these dis-It does not permanently amend the law. It enlarges, greatly enlarges, discretion within the law. What is now proposed is to change the law, at least while this bill is in operation, if not permanently, directing the Secretary of War to discharge enlisted men within certain limitations, and that is an amendment to a provision under which we simply enlarge his discretion.

I do not find in hurriedly examining the precedents one absolutely in point, but a number very similar.

A specific subject may not be amended by a provision general in nature.

To a bill for the admission of one Territory into the Union, an amendment providing for the admission of several other Territories is not in order.

Two subjects are not necessarily germane because they are related.

To a proposition relating to the terms of Senators, an amendment changing the manner of their election is not in order.

To a bill relating to commerce between the States, an amendment relating to commerce within the several States is not in order.

To a proposition for the appointment of a select committee to investigate a certain subject, an amendment proposing an inquiry of the Executive on that subject is not in order.

To a bill giving a right of way to a railroad, an amendment providing for the purchase of the railroad by the Government would not be germane, and so forth.

To a general tariff bill, an amendment creating a tariff board would not be germane, and so forth.

In the case before us the subject is not identical, and under the rule, even if the subject were identical, it is not necessarily in order because it treats the subject matter in an entirely different way.

I think that under the practice and decisions as to germaneness the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa is not

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, the argument is made in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull] that matter on the same general subject being included in the bill as presented by the committee, and no point of order lying thereto, although plainly subject to a point of order, an amendment that relates to that general subject must in itself be in order because no objection was made to the original text of the bill.

It seems to me that is straining at the effect of words in rhetoric rather than a consideration as to the effect of things really intended to be indicated by words as parts of language. The House may waive its right to object to the original text in respect to certain activities of government because it is clearly in sympathy with the purpose embodied in the language, but I doubt if it would be logical to hold that then a man, by simply seizing upon the face of these words relating to an activity or establishment or an institution, may introduce matters of a different effect and may hang his hat, as it were, on the text of the bill simply because the words seem to be of like effect. The House would waive its jurisdiction because it was satisfied with the meaning of the text.

Now, this amendment seeks to take the same words and put a different construction upon them, a construction not to the same intent, and uses arbitrarily certain words and forms in the bill as presented as the hook upon which the mover of the amendment can hang his own amendment, which will mean another thing. I doubt if that will come within the restriction of

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. This is a general appropriation bill. The paragraph beginning at the bottom of page 15 and ending on line 13 of page 16 is clearly legislation, and would have been subject to a point of order had anyone raised that point of order. That point of order, however, was not raised. Now comes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and offers an amendment, to which a point of order is made on the ground that it is not germane to the paragraph

It is not within the province of the Chair to decide as to the merits of the proposition. Personally, as a Member of the House, the present occupant of the chair would be opposed to the adoption of such an amendment and therefore does not approach the consideration of it with any predilection in favor of holding the amendment to be in order. The question is, Is it germane under paragraph 7 of Rule XVI? This paragraph of the rule

And no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

This question of germaneness has been considered in a great number of decisions, all turning upon this one point: When is a proposition or subject different from that under consideration? The subject under consideration in this paragraph is, in the first part of it, the discharge of men under 18 years of age. If it stopped there, then this paragraph might be held out of order as introducing a new subject. But it does not stop there. It The Chair will read the last clause of the para-

And the Secretary of War is authorized in his discretion to grant applications for discharge of enlisted men without regard to the provisions of existing law respecting discharges.

What is the subject of consideration in this part of the paragraph? It is the discharge of men from the Army. It provides a method; that is, that the Secretary of War is authorized in his discretion to grant applications for discharge, and so on, without regard to the existing law. The amendment proposes a somewhat different way, and yet in the opinion of the Chair it clearly relates to the same subject, in that the Secretary of War is directed, under such reasonable regulations as he shall prescribe, to grant applications for the discharge of enlisted men, without regard to the provisions of existing law respect ing discharges, until the number has been reduced to 150,000 enlisted men.

The Chair is unable, after a review of a number of decisions, to discover such difference in subject matter as would warrant the Chair in holding that this amendment is not germane to the paragraph. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony] yield me five minutes?

Mr. HULL of Iowa rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize for five minutes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], who offered the

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I trust no one thinks I am trying to convert the United States Army into a mob. I have been on the Committee on Military Affairs for some six years, and have tried as best I could to study military problems. I know that this amendment will not hurt the United States Army at all. In the first place, it only calls for a reduction of the Army to the number that you have appropriated for, 150,000 men. That is the first thing; and the next thing is that it simply, instead of authorizing the Secretary of War directs the Secretary of War to discharge these men.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman did not intend that contradiction in terms, I am sure. He said it directs the Secretary of War in his discretion. Just how do you direct an officer in his discretion?

Mr. HULL. Under such rules and regulations as he may pre-ribe. That is his discretion.

Mr. MONDELL. When you direct an officer to do a thing and then say it shall be under rules and regulations in his discretion it is not a direction.

Mr. HULL. That, I will admit, if the gentleman from Wyoming wants to know, is not as strong as I wish it were.

Mr. MONDELL. How can you make it stronger?

Mr. HULL. You are dealing with the General Staff, not with the Secretary of War; and I know the General Staff.

Mr. MONDELL. You are dealing with the defense arm of this Government. That is what you are dealing with.

Mr. HULL. And I am perfectly amazed at the way in which the General Staff has gassed, camouflaged, and used poison gas on the gentleman from Wyoming. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. That pleases the gentleman from Iowa and does not worry me.

Mr. HULL. I understand that nothing worries the gentleman from Wyoming. But I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that whereas he says he has been trying to get the Army reduced, instead of being reduced since we came into power last December the Army has been increased. Now, I propose to get it decreased in a sane and sensible way by discharging the men who want to get out. Do you know what the General Staff wants to do?

Mr. MONDELL again rose.

Mr. HULL. I can not yield all my time, but go ahead. I will ask for five minutes more.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman wants to be accurate?

Mr. HULL. Certainly I do. Mr. MONDELL. He says "since we came into power in December." Do I understand him to mean that Mr. Wilson's term ended in December, and that the term of the late unlimited Secretary Baker ended in December? He increased the Army until by a mandatory resolution we compelled him to desist; but the Army has been reduced steadily and as rapidly as it could be-

Mr. HULL. Not since the 1st of December. Mr. MONDELL. Since the 4th of March.

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes; but it is only down 2,000, which is a great reduction in 60 days!

Mr. BARKLEY. The General Staff did not go out of office on March 4, did they?

Mr. HULL. When I speak of those who want to reduce the Army, I understand that gentlemen on that side are just as anxious as we are to reduce the Army; but if we had passed a resolution on the 1st of December last stopping enlistment, as should have been done, your Army would have been down to-day to less than 175,000 men. [Applause.] We all know that. But they are still paying a bonus, and they are still not letting the men out who ought to get out, men who are needed at home; and I simply propose to direct the General Staff to let those men out, provided they can be spared. Their rules should govern that point.

Mr. McKENZIE and Mr. JOHNSON of Washington rose. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from Washington. Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I want a little information. Mr. HULL. I shall be glad to give it to the gentleman if I

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Suppose the gentleman's amendment should become a law, and suppose three-quarters of the men in the Army ask to be let out, how would the selection be made as to those who should go out?

Mr. HULL. They would let out those who could best be

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But suppose they should all want to be spared.

Mr. HULL. The officers of the Army would be the best judges of that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If I was in the Army as a private and wanted to be let out, and they decided that I could not be spared and that my colleague could be spared, would not I be a little sore about it? Mr. HULL. That is the only way it can be done. You should let out the men who want to get out, provided they can be spared from their organizations.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Would not that in the very nature of things make trouble?

Mr. HULL. No; it would not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The gentleman's amendment provides that it shall be done under such reasonable rules as may be prescribed.

Mr. HULL. Yes. We all understand that the rules are to be reasonable.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois. Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman from Iowa is opposed to discharging a man from the Army before the expiration of his enlistment, is he not? Mr. HULL. Certainly, unless he wants to be discharged.

Mr. McKENZIE. How many applications has the gentleman received from his district of men who want to get out of the Army? Mr. HULL. When that same question was asked me the other day I thought I had about 25. I think probably in my district there are about 200. If there are 200 men in every district in this country who want to get out of the Army, you will have provided for all the discharges you can afford under this amendment, and it will bring your Army down to 150,000, and the men whom I want to see get out of the Army are the men who are writing to you and appealing to you for the sake of their families to let them go home. I think we should let them go, provided, of course, they can be replaced.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Iowa has well spoken of the fact that there are men on both sides of this House who want the Army reduced. I want to ask him if it is not a fact that the reason the Army has not been reduced is because there are men in the House who do not want it reduced, but want to keep it up in accordance with the wishes of the General Staff?

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes; that is true, and we all know that the General Staff controlled the Democratic administration and that they put it up too high. [Laughter.] We are trying to cut it down.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield for a question?

Mr. HULL

Mr. BARKLEY. Has there been any easing up of the regulations of the department since we passed our resolution here in December with reference to reducing the size of the Army? In other words, has it been any easier to get a man out than it was in the winter?

Mr. HULL. Not one bit easier.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FISH. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Iowa be extended five minutes.

Mr. ANTHONY. I shall have to object to that.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas objects.
Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull] would be an exceedingly dangerous proposition to put into this bill. The amendment by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] to the bill provides that the amount for pay shall be reduced to that required for 150,000 men, and the Borah amendment then directs that the Secretary of War shall reduce the Army to conform to the amount of money which we appropriate in this bill. By the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina you cut the appropriation to $73,000,000. The language is very positive and plain that the Secretary of War shall not maintain an Army of a size larger than the amount of money appropriated will provide for. There is no necessity of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], because the language in the bill will carry out practically that same purpose. But the language that the gentleman proposes to put in the bill is dangerous, as the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell] has pointed out. Our provision in the bill authorizes the Secretary of War in his discretion to grant discharges. It is necessary that the Secretary of War shall have that discretion. If you do as is proposed in this amendment and direct the Secretary of War to discharge every man who makes a direct application, our Army will degenerate into a mob. You are liable to have men stationed at some of the most critical points in the service suddenly decide that they want to go home en masse, and under the language of the gentleman's amendment the Secretary of War would be compelled to grant them their discharges. gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] says he does not mean that the privilege shall be exercised in that arbitrary manner, but he means that the Secretary of War shall still have discretion. We provide that the Secretary is authorized to grant discharges in his discretion.

If there is to be no change in purpose what is the use of offering such an amendment as that offered by the gentleman from Iowa? That there is a purpose in the amendment you may gather by the language used by the gentleman on Saturday last. On page 856 of the RECORD, speaking to his amendment, the gentleman said:

This simply allows them to get out on their own request, but the Army is not forced to discharge the men unless the men ask to be discharged. You are going to bring the Army down to 150,000. Let the men select themselves—those who want to get out and let them go out;

That is the Russian soviet system, and we are not yet ready to adopt that sort of system in the American Army. [Ap-

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I rise simply to say that I can not understand the interpretation which gentlemen seek to put on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull]. It is impossible for me to understand any such interpretation as being a legitimate construction of the language of the amendment:

And the Secretary of War is directed under such reasonable regulations as he may prescribe to grant applications for discharge of eulisted men serving in the continental United States, without regard to the provisions of existing law respecting discharges until the number in the Army has been reduced to 150,000, not including the Philippine

The gentleman from Kansas has just said that if a body of men wanted to leave the Army they would force their discharges and make the Army a mob. Now, I do not understand that to be true at all. For this amendment provides that they are to be discharged under rules and regulations to be prescribed in advance by the Secretary of War. He will prescribe that so many applications from this place shall be considered, and so many from another place 500 miles away, and from another 1,000 miles away; there would not be a forced wholesale discharge en bloc because the Secretary of War himself would make the rules and regulations under which discharges are to be made. We have appropriated only a sufficient amount of money to pay for the support of an Army of 150,000 men, and we shall by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa bring the Army down to that number. And in my judgment it is time for the Republicans on this floor to show by their vote whether they mean or do not mean to carry out the wishes of the taxpayers of the United States and reduce to a reasonable number the Army of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will,

Mr. HUSTED. The gentleman will admit that under the reasonable rules and regulations, first, that the Secretary of War can not discharge at his discretion, and second, that the reasonableness of the rules might be made a question of law. Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No; there is a fallacy in the gentleman's statement. The Secretary of War would make reasonable rules and regulations, and then entirely in his discretion select the men to be discharged. Certainly he would not leave it to them to say that because they had filed applications they had an absolute right to be discharged. Not at all. But he would pick out so many here and so many there, and in this way select men so as to not cripple any branch of the Army, and do all this wholly in his discretion.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, Yes.
Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The Congressman who could reach the ear of the Secretary of War would get his man out, and the Congressman who did not reach the ear of the Secretary of War would not get his out.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, so long as human nature is constituted as it is, there might possibly be some favoritism, but I would not impute it in advance to the Secretary of War. I think he would make reasonable rules and regulations and then exercise his authority and discretion honorably. The fact is that some of you gentlemen propose that the Army shall not be reduced in size, and some of us propose that it shall be. [Applause.] So far as I am concerned I shall vote with great pleasure to help enact into law the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, with a view to a partial redemption of the promise of the Republican Party that wherever reasonably possible there shall be disarmament. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, there is no use mincing words about this matter and no use trying to deceive Those who are opposed to the reduction of the Army to 150,000 men are not going to vote for the Hull amendment. But the majority in this Committee of the Whole by a very decisive vote on Saturday last, when this bill was under consideration, evidenced its intention that the Army be reduced to 150,000 men. I regard the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa as a very proper, if not a wholly necessary, corollary to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] and adopted by the Committee of the Whole. What has occurred? Let me repeat for the benefit of gentlemen who came in since I spoke a few moments ago. Last May an amendment was offered to recommit the Army bill that was then up so as to provide that the Army should not consist, except in case of emergency, of more than 185,000 men. That was voted down, 222 to 115. The late Secretary of War, Mr. Baker, approved the action of the General Staff when it continued to enlist men beyond the 175,000, payment for which was appropriated for. He had the clear right to do it. He violated

Gentlemen on the Republican side of the House have criticized the late Secretary of War because he did that. They, have insisted that they fixed the Army at 175,000 because they merely appropriated for that number, and we have refrained from criticism of the Secretary of War, and it was natural that we should do so. But, gentlemen, you have the same General Staff now that you had then. You know that the present Secretary of War is opposed to the reduction of this Army to 150,000 men. Congress, representing the people, has voted its desire for its reduction to 150,000 by cutting the appropriation, and now you have it within your power to bring about that which you have said you desired by the adoption of this Hull amendment, and I submit that it ought to go in: [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If I have time.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not believe that even if our friend from Iowa [Mr. HULL] or our friend from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] were now Secretary of War that the General Staff would be able, through the power that they usually exert on Secretaries of War, to seduce him into being in favor of a large Army within a week?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I can not say, but I remember distinctly that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] said in substance in the last Congress when Secretary of War Baker was being assailed, "I do not know how long before the General Staff will get our Secretary of War, it may be three months or longer, but eventually they will get him." [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Humphreys to the amendment offered by Mr. Hum.: Page 16, line 11, strike out the words "grant applications for," and in line 12 strike out the word "of," so that the paragraph as amended will read: "of acceptance for enlistment; and the Secretary of War is authorized in his discretion to discharge enlisted men without regard to the provisions of existing law respecting discharges."

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, that would obviate the objection which has been urged that we would create a soviet in the Army by permitting any man who wished to get a discharge to violate any of the regulations that he chose to, knowing that he could not be punished, because he would be entitled to a discharge upon application; but it would direct that the Army be reduced to the figure fixed by Congress. I am in favor of a small Army, and have always been. I do not know whether it ought to be 150,000, 175,000; or 168,000, and I do not think that Congress has any very fixed opinion on the subject. At the last session we passed a resolution fixing it at 175,000; and then we passed the Army bill fixing it at 156,000. It is now reported out at 168,000, and by an amendment which we agreed to the other day we made it 150,000. I do not know just which one of those figures is correct, but our last guess is 150,000. Whatever the reduction is to be, it ought to be in an orderly way, not by the summary process which we are providing here. We have 232,000 men in the Army, and it is proposed to reduce that to an average of 150,000. It was said that the Secretary of War could, if he would, reduce it to 150,000 by the 1st of July. In my opinion, that would be utterly impossible, if he had any sort of regard to intelligent selection among the men to be discharged. That would mean from two to three thousand men a That can not be done with any regard to the efficiency of the Military Establishment. In my opinion, it will take at least six months to muster out the 82,000 men in the Army which would reduce it to the 150,000 provided for, properly to allocate those discharges in all the various branches of the service, as the units are distributed about the country.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. In a moment, when I finish this thought. If we are to have an average of 150,000 for the next fiscal year, that means that for the first six months we will have much more than 150,000 and for the last six months very much less than 150,000, so that at the end of the next fiscal year we will probably have 100,000 men, or possibly 110,000. As soon as that is done, if we are to have 150,000 men in the Army, the Secretary of War will immediately have to begin to recruit the Army back to the figure we have fixed on-150,000 men.

Of course, whenever a man is discharged he is entitled to travel pay, commutation, and so forth, and when he is enlisted, our experience shows that it costs $100 each to enlist new men. If we are to reduce the Army below 150,000 down to 100,000 or 110,000, we will then have to reenlist 40,000 or 50,000 men at a very considerable cost. I submit that is not the wise or the economical way to proceed. We ought to provide that the Secretary of War shall reduce the Army in an orderly way, intelligently, with discrimination, with a view to the efficiency of the force, until it gets to the figure where we think it belongs, 150,000, or 168,000, or 175,000, or whatever is finally fixed upon, and when it gets there to stop-not to proceed as we do in the various departments here in Washington, discharge men every day and hire others-discharge forty or fifty thousand men and then proceed at once to enlist that many more. It is said that we have to take that unwise course because it is the only way that we can control the Secretary of War. I do not believe that myself. I hold no brief for the Secretary of War: He is a Republican, and I am a Democrat. He served in this House many years, and all of us, or at least all the older Members, know him. I know nothing in his record that indicates that he is touched with the spirit of militarism, and I do not believe there is any warrant for the statement that he can or will be dominated by the General Staff. It is a confession of weakness, a confession of inefficiency on the Republican side of the House, to say that you can not write a sensible law to direct the Secretary of War to reduce the Army to the point to which you think it ought to be reduced. You have a majority of 170 here in the House, twenty-odd majority in the Senate, and the President in the White House, yet you say you can not pass a law that will intelligently reduce the Army down to the figure where you think it belongs unless you hamstring the Secretary of War. What kind of a political organization was it which came into power on March 4 if this be true?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I do not think I shall take the five min-It occurs to me, first, to avoid the danger suggested just now, that you could not enforce discipline in the Army if a man knows that he can get a discharge upon application, that we should adopt the amendment that I have suggested. will accomplish the result you have in mind by directing the Secretary of War to reduce the Army to that point to which you think it should be reduced, be that whatever you may finally conclude, 150,000, 156,000, or 168,000, or what not, and still permit him to proceed with some intelligence. Instead of going to the extraordinary expense, $100 each, of reenlisting 40,000 or 50,000 men, you will have an Army of 150,000, if that is the figure you fix on, and you will have done it in an orderly way, in an intelligent, and in a discriminating way.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HUMPHREYS. I yield first to the gentleman from Vir-

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the general proposition which the gentleman has advocated. I merely wanted to get his view as to why the action proposed to be taken by the Secretary of War should be confined to soldiers in the United States.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. As I was told the other day in response to exactly that same question, it would not do to require him to muster out men who are in the Philippines or in the Canal Zone or in Alaska for reasons that I think are patent.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I understand the effect of the gentle-man's amendment, it is that the Secretary of War is directed to discharge men without regard to whether they apply for a discharge?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would not that result in men being retained who would like to be out and other men being discharged who would like to be in?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Undoubtedly; but when a man in time of peace deliberately enlists in the Army he ought to do it seriously; and when the Government trains that man at great expense and he becomes learned in some technical branch of the service and so becomes efficient and is able to train other men and to do things necessary to have an efficient Military Establishment I can see no reason for discharging him simply because he says that he would like to get out.

Now, there may be some other men in the Army who are less efficient but who like the job, perhaps because they can do better in the Army as a private than anywhere else, yet the Secretary of War, if given the opportunity, if given time, if not forced to proceed in a summary manner, might be able to segregate those and pick out the men who ought not to be in and who could best be spared, even if they wanted to stay in, and turn them out.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS: I will:

Mr. OLIVER. Does the gentleman think the Congress has the right to authorize the Secretary of War to violate a solema contract made between the Congress and the enlisted man if he does not wish to leave the service and we direct that he shall leave the service?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I do not think there is any question about that.

Mr. OLIVER. What is the authority the gentleman refers to as granting that right?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I refer to the statement of the chairman of the committee here the other day who read the statute, and the reservation, as I understood him, is in every enlistment, that a man may be discharged at the discretion of the Government.

Mr. OLIVER. Unquestionably the legal authorities have advised us we have not the right, and the gentleman is assuming that the legal authorities who gave the opinion were in error?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. If we have not the right to do it, of course, we are wasting time here talking about reducing the Army. If these 232,000 men have been fixed upon us for all time to come or until their enlistment expires there is no use discussing the matter at all. I was proceeding upon the accuracy of the statement the chairman of the committee made the other day that there was no question that we had the lawful right to muster out men whenever, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, it was desirable to do that.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. We will not have any trouble about reducing because there will be enough men who will want to go out, who will make application for it, if the Hull amendment passes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I do not think it should be limited to

It will necessarily require time in which to reduce these forces intelligently, but if we instruct the Secretary of War to dismiss every man who applies wherever he may be, regardless of the expense we have been to in equipping him for the particular position he now holds in the Army, and of the particular and may be imperative need for his services at the time, no man can tell just what confusion will be created or what the disaster to the efficiency, to say nothing of the morale, of the Army will be.

Of course, there are many cases which will arise, as they have always arisen, which will justify an enlisted man in asking for his discharge ahead of time. Conditions may have arisen since his enlistment which would make it vitally necessary for him to return to civil life. These exceptional cases, of course, should all be dealt with upon their peculiar merits, and the man given his discharge in spite of the inconvenience or loss to the Army of his services, but I do not think we could justify a law which would direct the Secretary of War to discharge every man who makes application therefor and without showing any reason whatever except his own desire to leave the service.

It occurs to me that this summary process would be penny-wise and pound-foolish.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Reserving the right to object Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, regular order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.
Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, when the estimates for national defense for next year, which were made by the former adminis-tration, came before the Congress they were for $1,411,000,000. A Republican Congress reduced those Democratic estimates by bills we have put through to $735,000,000. I do not like to see my side of the House put in the position of being incapable of comprehending the game that is being played by our Democratic friends. Now, what have we done? We have put in this bill three things that will restrict the Secretary of War as to the size of the Army. One is the provision in relation to the size of the Army. The next is the provision that you are trying to amend, and the third is the Borah amendment, and I say to you if we pass this bill in my opinion we will do much to nullify the Borah amendment, which is one thing which we must look to for a reduction in the Army. If you will turn to page 22 of the bill you will find this language:

That the Army shall be reduced by the Secretary of War so that the sum herein appropriated shall defray the entire cost of the pay of the officers and enlisted men of the line and staff during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

How can you employ language more plain than that, and those of us who know John W. Weeks, the Secretary of War, by his service in this House know that he will do what the former Secretary of War failed to do, and that is to obey the law. The former Secretary of War, authorized by the appropriation law to employ in the service only 175,000 men, increased the size of the Army to 235,000 men, in violation of that law and the antideficiency act, and yet there was not a man on that side of the House who dared to arise and ask that be impeached for that unlawful act; not a man, and yet we all knew we could not put through any impeachment proceedings unless it came from that side of the House. Now, I will say to this side of the House, because that side of the House will vote almost to a man for this proposition, here is a bill that has been well considered, here is a proposition that has been well considered, and I want to tell you that whatever you do this afternoon, let us unite and maintain the integrity of the Secretary of War. Let us give him a provision so that by his execution of the law he can reduce the size of the Army to the size required by Congress in his own way so that he brings it within that of the appropriation. [Applause,] Lets give him a chance to bring about the reduction without injury to the Army. Lets give him a fair chance, and this amendment takes from him the opportunity to administer his office in a businesslike way. This amendment will please the Democratic side of the House if it is agreed to, but it will certainly not bring joy to this side of the House. When these matters first came before the Committee on Appropriations I asked the Committee on Military Affairs to reduce the size of the Army, if possible, to 150,000 men. I did not then know the former Secretary of War would increase the size of the Army as he did. Personally, I think that is enough, but I fear the present Secretary of War will have great difficulty to so undue the wrongful acts of his predecessor as to permit it, but you should not by this action or by this proposed amendment punish the present Secretary of War for all the sins of his predecessor.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GOOD. Yes; for a question. Mr. BLACK. We now have a law providing that the Army shall be reduced to 175,000 men, have we not? Can the gentleman tell me

Mr. GOOD. No; we have no such law. We have an appropriation act and we have a deficiency law which provides that the Secretary of War is confined to the expenditure contained in that act.

Mr. BLACK. But did not the gentleman say that Secretary

Baker violated the resolution— Mr. GOOD. No; I said he violated the law which was the appropriation act of last year and the antideficiency act. We only appropriated for 175,000 men and he enlisted 235,000 in violation of law.

Mr. BLACK. Working upon that same fiscal year, what has Secretary Weeks done toward reducing the Army?

Mr. GOOD. We are passing another law. He stopped enlistments, and Secretary Baker was going on and on every day enlisting men as far as he could do so, until prevented by the passage of a resolution, and was sending out advertisements that were as false as printer's ink could make them, trying to get these boys into the service. We should now give the present Secretary of War a chance to bring order out of chaos by permitting him to reduce the Army to the size required without doing a positive injury to the Army.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina, Mr. JONES of Texas, Mr. QUIN, Mr. CONNALLY of Texas, Mr. WINGO, Mr. HULL, Mr.

GREENE of Vermont, and Mr. FISH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes], a member of the committee, is recognized. Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I intend to say but a few words.

The genfleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] can always be depended upon to arouse considerable enthusiasm, and whenever those in charge of a bill are in trouble I think he is a good man to call to the rescue. But it does well to call attention to the facts as The facts are that by joint resolution this Conwe go along. gress provided-

That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed and instructed to cease enlisting men in the Regular Army of the United States until the number of enlisted men shall not exceed 175,000.

Now, the fact is, while we were debating that resolution the War Department went ahead enlisting men as fast as they could. Unlike the gentleman from Iowa, I am not claiming all the virtue in the world for the Secretary of War who happened to be of my own political persuasion. In direct violation of what he certainly must have understood to be the intent of the Congress, he continued to enlist men while it was being debated. But not after it became law, as the gentleman from Iowa says. After the resolution passed over the veto of the President, he did nothing of the kind. The gentleman is misinformed. He is called in as a pinch hitter and has not had such opportunity to familiarize himself with conditions as have gentlemen on the subcommittee. The truth is, the Secretary carried on enlistments until the day we passed the joint resolution over the veto of the President. Then he had to cease it, and he did cease it.

The gentleman says that no man rose to criticize the Secretary of War. That, of course, is said in order to arouse a little feeling on the Republican side in the consideration of the question. What is the fact? The resolution passed this House; it went to the Senate; it went to the President, our President, and he vetoed it.

It came back to this House, and if you will look at the RECORD you will see that about 90 per cent of the Democratic Members on this floor voted to override the veto of the Democratic President and voted for the adoption of this resolution calling for 175,000 men. It then went to the Senate, and, as I recall, practically every Democratic Senator voted to override the veto of the Democratic President. So my friend can not, in order to save what appears to be a sinking ship, come in here and arouse political and partisan feeling over the question that has been raised by the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull]. Now, what is the fact? Since March 4 my good friend, ex-Senator Weeks, now Secretary of War, has come under the influence of the General Staff. Let me show you the report of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony]. Look on page 3, and you will see a letter from the present Secretary of War, John W. Weeks, in which he says:

The scheme marked No. 1, alternative A, is the one which I recommend for adoption.

Let us see what it does. It provides for an average enlisted strength for the next fiscal year, not of 150,000 men, which this Congress has said should be the enlisted strength; not of 175,000 which the Congress by resolution directed should be the number for the fiscal year ending July 1, but of 185,009 men. He even wants 9 over the 185,000 as the average enlisted strength for the next year. He exceeds in his estimates, just as his predecessor did in his views, what the Congress says shall be the enlisted strength for the next fiscal year. And you therefore are called upon to say whether you are going to let this department dictate what the Congress under the Constitution should do, because it is our duty, and the power is vested in the Congress, to fix the enlisted strength. They do not come into court with clean hands when they ask for an increase on the ground that they are unable to reduce as required by Congress, because the facts show they have made no effort to reduce, and the estimate shows that they do not want to reduce. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Quin].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Division, Mr. Chairman, The committee divided; and there were—ayes 82, noes 75. Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. Anthony and Mr. Hull took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were-ayes 108,

So the amendment was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN: The Clerk will read. Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, after line 13, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"No portion of the appropriations contained in this act shall be used to pay, in accordance with the provisions of section 27 of the Army reorganization act, approved June 4, 1920, an enlistment allowance to any soldier who enlists or reenlists after the approval of this act."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. Does it change the provisions of section 27?

reenlist. Now, we are trying to find a way to reduce the Army and at the same time, unfortunately, we are paying $90 for reenlistment for men we do not want, and that to-morrow we may have to discharge. This is an amendment to strike out the payment of the bonus. I think it is clearly

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be read again. There was so much confusion we could not hear it. The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. All debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto has closed.

Mr. WINGO. But this is a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been held by numerous decisions in the House that a new paragraph offered to a pending paragraph after debate is closed can not be debated. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of enlisted men of National Guard, $100. For pay of enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps, $100.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Iowa advise me whether or not if a man is discharged under his amendment, say to-day, and he reenlists after the 1st day of July, under the gentleman's amendment that has just been adopted with reference to a bonus, will he be entitled to reenlistment bonus?

Mr. HULL. Certainly not.
Mr. WINGO. He would be without your amendment?
Mr. HULL. I think he would, unquestionably. I doubt, however, whether a man accepting his discharge could reenlist.

do not think he could reenlist.

Mr. WINGO. That is my understanding. My understanding has been that these reenlistment bonuses applied only to men who followed up their discharge by immediate reenlistment, but I was not sure. Does that apply to a man who comes back to the Army after being out for a time, or only at the expiration of his enlistment?

Mr. ANTHONY. This does away with the bonus, and in normal times it would save about $1,800,000.

Mr. WINGO. But the gentleman did not catch the point. Say a man's service expires to-day. If he reenlists to-day he would get the bonus. If he is out six months and comes back and reenlists could he get the bonus?

Mr. ANTHONY. No. He could get a furlough of 30 days and then reenlist at the end of that time.

Mr. WINGO. That is what I wanted to know.
Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed slightly out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. What does the gentleman propose to speak about?

Mr. RAKER. It is in regard to the Army, but it really is not germane to this particular amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I have received the following letter:

PLACERVILLE, CALIF., March 9, 1921.

Hon. John E. Raker, Member of Congress, Second Congressional District California, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: El Dorado Post, No. 119, of this county, is preparing a big celebration for the coming Fourth of July. Part of our program includes a Sunday memorial service, and we wish to dedicate upon that day a war trophy to our departed members.

We would prefer a German machine gun if it is possible to get one. Any trophy that you may get for us will be certainly appreciated.

Thanking you for any favors, I remain,
Yours, respectfully,

L. J. Anderson,
Chairman Committee

L. J. ANDERSON, Chairman Committee.

This is from the war veterans. I took the matter up with the Secretary of War, and received the following letter, and I want to call this to the attention of the House, because I find on file hundreds of bills relating to this matter, and no action Mr. HULL. It simply prohibits the payment of a bonus for has been taken, although the armistice occurred on the reenlistment. The Army is at present paying $90 for a man to of November, 1918. The Secretary's letter is as follows: has been taken, although the armistice occurred on the 11th

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 17, 1921.

Hon. John E. Raker,

House of Representatives, United States,

Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

Mr Dear Mr. Rakku: I desire to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 15, with reference to securing a trophy of the World War for the El Dorado Post, No. 119, of Placerville, Calif.

In reply, you are advised that the bill as presented in conference vests within Congress power for the distribution of all captured enemy material, and it is understood that the distribution will be made by either the governor of the State or by members of the State delegation made up of Senators and Representatives. The War Department, therefore, will be without authority to specify the cities or individuals to whom shipments are made. whom shipments are made.

Now the point:

As the major portion of this material is stored in the open and is rapidly deteriorating, any action that you may take toward expediting the passage of this bill will be appreciated by the War Department and will be the means of placing these articles in the hands of the States and municipalities while some intrinsic value still remains.

Cordially, yours,

JOHN W. WEEKS. Scentage of War

JOHN W. WEEKS, Secretary of War.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Not for just a minute. Mr. RAKER.

Two years and practically six months have passed since we have had these materials in our possession, and I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that these trophies which the World War veterans desire and which their friends desire are stored in the open and are rapidly deteriorating. There are dozens of bills-no, not dozens, but hundreds of them—on file providing that these trophies be distributed to these posts and others who want them. The Secretary of War is requesting that they be distributed while some intrinsic value still remains to them. I am in hopes that this legislation may be accomplished before all of the value of these trophies is destroyed.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes. Mr. WINGO. It has been two years and six months since the armistice?

Mr. RAKER. Two years and not quite six months, but pretty

Mr. WINGO. What about the Fordney bonus bill for the relief of the soldiers? They have been playing football with that bill for a long time. Does not the gentleman think they should bring that out?

Mr. RAKER. I want to discuss this one matter at this time.

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. FISH.

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. FISH. I understand the gentleman yields for a question?

Mr. RAKER. Yes. Let the gentleman state it.

Mr. FISH. I think I can give the gentleman information.

Mr. RAKER. No; you can not give the gentleman informa-on. These guns are stored in the open. They are rusting and deteriorating and being destroyed.

Mr. FISH. Is it not a fact that the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate has reported out a bill?

Mr. RAKER. My dear sir, what has been done? Two years and six months have passed. These cannon and this material are still out in the open and are being destroyed, and the country is getting no credit.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. I regret I can not. What we want is that these trophies shall be placed in the hands of the people who want them. We want these soldier boys to have them in their home towns and home cities and home villages.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California

has expired

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, from this time on I shall make a point of order on any extension of time in the considera-We have discussed every possible question tion of this bill. during this debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

For aviation increase, to enlisted men of the Air Service, $150,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for increased pay on flying status to more than 500 enlisted men.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask the privilege to insert as a part of my remarks one other letter, of half a page, on the same subject from the post at Susanville, Calif., which is desiring the same thing.

Mr. FISH. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last amiss after the exhibition which we have witnessed in the last few moments. The gentleman who apparently is in need of information is now sitting where he can get information at any time, and I refer to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], who has come over to the side of the House where information is always available. I desire to say in reference to this pitiful complaint that no action has been taken by Congress with reference to war trophies, that he can sleep the sleep of the just and cease to worry his impetuous soul if he will turn to the RECORD of May 2, in the proceedings of the coordinate branch, for there he will find that Senate bill 674, providing for the distribution of war trophies, passed that body, and is now presumably in the custody of the Military Affairs Committee of the House. Since that time there has been no opportunity to have the measure considered, because we have had other privileged measures up for consideration in the House, but the Suzanna Post-

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no; Placerville.

Mr. WALSH. Which is waiting for these trophies will, when action is had on this measure, undoubtedly have been taken care of.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WALSH. Yes. Mr. RAKER. I find that on April 14, 1921, a bill was introduced in the House covering this matter. Then I find that the Senate bill-

Mr. WALSH. I yielded for a question. Mr. RAKER. This is the question.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I recognize it, Mr. RAKER. A bill in the Sixty-sixth Congress passed, but when the Congress died the bill died. Is the bill to which the gentleman refers going to have the same course?

Mr. WALSH. The bill has passed the Senate and is now before the Committee on Military Affairs. The gentleman knows there has been no opportunity to take up that bill, even though it had been reported; but the gentleman knows that his distinguished colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. Kahn], announced here on the floor of the House the other day that there would be action upon such a measure, and that provision will be made for disposition of these trophies. This bill, unfortunately for the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], provides that the distribution shall be made by the governor of the State. Of course, that may somewhat affect the popularity of the gentleman with the Suzanna Post, or whatever its name is, but possibly he may be able to get it amended so that he will have something to say as to where these deteriorating trophies that are now outside in the open air can be transferred and located somewhere else outside in the open air to continue their deterioration.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to say in regard to the tables put into the RECORD the other day

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the discussion is not on the bill. I believe the time has come now when the discussion should be confined to the bill. I shall object to any further discussion out of order on this bill, for it ought to pass. The time has come when we ought to have an orderly consideration of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. *The gentleman from Virginia will proceed in order.

Mr. HARRISON. What I wish to say is bearing on the subject of aviation, and it is a matter that is passed on in this bill. It is a question that will come before the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washingon. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not proceeded far enough to have the Chair determine.

Mr. HARRISON. The subject of aviation is now under consideration. I do not desire to violate any of the rules of the House. I just want to simply explain to the gentleman exactly the subject matter about which he has made some criticism. The papers which I put into the RECORD were official reports made by the division of aviation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to his amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. By the liquidation committee. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend The gentleman will suspend. tleman from Washington makes the point of order that the gen-tleman is not debating his amendment. The paragraph under consideration is one beginning at line 17, on page 16, for aviatwo words. I think that some information might not come tion increase. It provides for enlistment in the Air Service, $150,000. Under the customary practice of the House any debate that applies to that particular paragraph is usually in order under the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves to strike out the paragraph. The Clerk will report the amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HARRISON: Page 16, line 17, strike out the paragraph.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, in regard to these tables, I simply desired the committee to have the benefit of the information which the official investigation showed. I am not in any sense

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yleld? The gentleman has taken an article from the Aviation Journal which was not the official report.

Mr. HARRISON. The Aviation Journal published an official report of the table, or at least professed to do so, of the liquida-tion division of the aircraft section of the War Department, and my only object was to enable the Members of this House to see what the facts were.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The gentleman is discussing a matter that has been discussed some time during the afternoon, but it is not a discussion of the paragraph now before the House.

Mr. HARRISON. I just desire to conclude by saying, if the gentleman can succeed in finding any information about this aircraft, nobody will welcome it more than I would.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing his amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that you can discuss any past expenditure of a department when an item for appropriation for that department is under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hold that any debate upon a subject involved in the particular paragraph—that is, the pay of aviation, increase to the enlisted men of the Air Service

Mr. WINGO. It has been held that when you are discussing an appropriation for any branch of a department the discussion of past expenditures of that department is in order, but I do not care anything about it

The CHAIRMAN. If there is any objection, it seems to the Chair the gentleman would have to confine his remarks to the particular matter contained in this paragraph.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from Virginia is discussing the subject of extravagance in the Aviation Service in the past. Now, we have before us an appropriation for aviation. is not in order, then what would be in order in the discussion of an item appropriating money for aviation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman— The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. To discuss the point of order. The gentleman from Virginia has been insisting on discussing the matter he inserted in the RECORD several days ago. nothing to do with his amendment-

The CHAIRMAN. So the Chair held. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional pay for length of service of enlisted men, $3,500,000. PAY OF PERSONS WITH RETIRED STATUS.

Mr. LINEBERGER, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LINEBERGER: Page 17, line 3, after the words "Pay of persons with retired status," insert: "That all persons who have served as officers of the United States Army during the World War and who have incurred physical disability in line of duty shall be eligible for retirement under the same conditions as now provided by law for officers of the Regular Army who have incurred physical disability in line of duty."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.
Mr. MONDELL. I make the point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman withhold his point

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, it is clearly-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Chief clerk, $2,500; clerks—1 $2,250, 6 at $2,000 each, 8 at $1,800 each, 13 at $1,600 each, 21 at $1,400 each, 24 at $1,200 each, 26 at $1,000 each; chief messenger, $1,000; messengers—3 at $840 each, 10 at $720 each; laborer, $720; in all, $147,590.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I move to strike out this paragraph for the purpose of emphasizing the point I raised the other day with reference to the employment of civilians in various bureaus of the Army. We all know that it grew to be a great evil in the bureau for the sale of surplus war material, but it is particularly reprehensible in the office of the General Staff of the Army, for there is no branch of the Army where greater safeguards for secrecy ought to prevail. It is a confidential office in the very highest degree, and if the Army can not procure among its trained officers and enlisted men officials who are capable of performing the duties of clerks, then our Army has been reduced to a very sorry condition. This section, as you will notice, provides for 100 clerks, 14 messengers, and 1 laborer. Now, I do not intend to insist upon the amendment at this time, because there was no opportunity to consider it in the committee, but I do hope that the suggestion will be taken to heart by the committee and that something will be done to discontinue the expensive and dangerous custom of employing civilians for military work in the Army.

This morning I received in my mail, as doubtless every other Member of the House did also, a circular, sent out by the Director of Sales, announcing that there is on hand for disposal 953,000 pounds of brass and bronze rod. This has probably just been declared as "surplus war material," and the Director of Sales proposes to sell it in large lots, distributed at points throughout the United States. Can this bronze and brass deteriorate? What overwhelming necessity is there requiring our Government to sell this metal at a sacrifice, as they will doubtless do, under the restraints with which they bind the bids? What is the sense of the United States Government selling this metal now, and then perhaps buying it again in two or three months in ingot form from the very contractors perhaps who purchased it?

We are laboring under a disadvantage in this House to some extent, as was made manifest on several occasions here to-day.

The practice in the English Parliament of interpellation I think might be very well imitated here. A member there may call attention to some infraction of duty on the part of a member of the cabinet or of the ministry as a matter of right, whereas here we are tied up and bound by parliamentary rules that prevent our calling to the attention of the House and of the country certain things which really clamor for rectification

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Or at least explanation.
The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For commutation of quarters and of heat and light for field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, $75,000: Provided, That said clerks, messengers, and laborers shall be employed and assigned by the Secretary of War to the offices and positions in which they are to serve: Provided further. That no clerk, messenger, or laborer at headquarters of tactical divisions, military departments, brigades, service schools, and office of the Chief of Staff shall be assigned to duty in any bureau of the War Department.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this simply for the purpose of calling atten-tion to an abuse that has grown up in the War Department, and which I think ought to be abolished in the interest of economy. Some years ago a law was passed providing for commutation of quarters for officers in the Army when stationed away from an Army post. During the war we extended that for the benefit of married men and those who had dependents to the field, so that all officers were entitled to commutation. Some years ago the field clerks insisted that they, too, should have this commutation when in the field, and it was given to them. It has come to my notice that that law has been applied in the city of Washington, where they have seen fit to employ many women as field clerks, giving them the salary, the bonus in addition, and $33 a month commutation for quarters here. I understand that most of these ladies have been discharged. However, there are a few still employed.

I simply make this short statement for the purpose of calling the matter to the attention of the Secretary of War and those under him, in the hope that they will see that it is cut out.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

All the money hereinbefore appropriated for pay of the Army and miscellaneous, except the appropriation for mileage to commissioned officers, warrant officers, members of the Officers' Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty, contract surgeons, expert accountant, Inspector General's Department, Army field clerks, and field clerks of the Quarter master Corps, when authorized by law, shall be disbursed and accounted for as pay of the Army, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund: Provided, That so much of the unexpended amount of the appropriation for pay, etc., of the Army for the fiscal year 1919 as may be necessary to permit payment for the adjustment and settlement of claims of officers, members of the Nurse Corps, and enlisted men for pay and allowances growing out of service in the World War from April 6, 1917, to June 30, 1919, inclusive, shall remain upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of that appropriation until June 30, 1922: Provided further, That the Army shall be reduced by the Secretary of War so that the sum herein appropriated shall defray the entire cost of the pay of the officers and enlisted men of the line and staff during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Hull: Page 22, line 1, after the word "That," strike out "the Army shall be reduced by the Secretary of War so that"; in line 3, after the word "appropriated," insert "for officers' pay"; in line 3, after the word "officers," strike out "and enlisted men."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that.

Mr. HULL. Does the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; I make it.

Mr. HULL. It certainly is not subject to a point of order. It simply changes the language so that you would limit the pay to enlisted men. You limit it to both officers and enlisted men now. My amendment simply permits the enlisted man to receive his pay. I limit the officers, because we know what the officers It is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman is really trying to destroy an amendment which the House has just adopted.

Mr. HULL. I am not. I will explain that. It certainly is not subject to a point of order. I will submit it to the Chair. He understands the rules of the House so far as a point of order

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kansas state what his point of order is?

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the Chair have the amendment again read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 13, noes 44.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, in connection with this, I believe there is an error in the phraseology of this bill. I ask unanimous consent to return to lines 8 to 14 on page 20. do not want to discuss it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I object to returning to that paragraph, but I have no objection to the gentleman stating what he thinks

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will do that. I suppose the gentleman wants his bill to be right. If anybody can explain to me just what that paragraph from line 8 to line 14 on page 20 means, I shall be glad. It provides:

For payment of exchange by officers serving in foreign countries and when specially authorized by the Secretary of War, by officers disbursing funds pertaining to the War Department when serving in Alaska, and all foreign money received shall be charged to and paid out by disbursing officers of the Army at the legal valuation fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, $5,000.

Mr. WINGO. I will say to my friend, if he will permit, that that is not the only error.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It does not mean anything as it is. It is rambling and disconnected. It ought to read, "For payment of exchange by officers serving in foreign countries and when specially authorized by the Secretary of War, by officers disbursing funds pertaining to the War Department when serving in Alaska, $5,000, and all foreign money received shall be charged to and paid out by disbursing officers of the Army at the legal valuation fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman that the amounts carried for the different items are uniformly carried at the end of the paragraphs.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I do not care; but you have proceeded with a different subject matter.

Mr. ANTHONY. It may be a little strained to have it read that way, but that has been the method.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Why is it that at all foreign points, instead of our having to lose on foreign exchange we do not gain, when our dollars are worth a great deal more?

Mr. ANTHONY. That is the case generally at the present time, but it has not been so heretofore.

Mr. WINGO. Has the gentleman had any experts before him on that subject?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; we have. Mr. WINGO. Can the gentleman say that there is any hope that any country on earth will come up in its currency to par with our dollar?

Mr. ANTHONY. There have been numerous instances in the last year where our disbursing officers have been compelled to pay rates of exchange to their disadvantage, and we have to allow for that.

I suggest that they ought to be in St. Eliza-Mr. WINGO.

beths if that be true.

Mr. ANTHONY. No. In China the rates of exchange have been very much to the disadvantage of this Government, and we have had to resort to shipping silver bars over there in order to pay our troops, and we had to pay our money for doing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SUBSISTENCE OF THE ARMY,

Purchase of subsistence supplies: For issue as rations to troops, including warrant officers of the Mine Planter Service, enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, civil employees when entitled thereto, hospital matrons, nurses, applicants for enlistment while held under observation, general prisoners of war (including Indians held by the Army as prisoners, but for whose subsistence appropriation is not otherwise made). Indians employed with the Army as guides and scouts, and general prisoners at posts; for the subsistence of the masters, officers, crews, and employees of the vessels of the Army Transport Service; hot coffee for troops traveling when supplied with cooked or travel rations; meals for recruiting parties and applicants for enlistment while under observation; for sales to officers including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps while on active duty, and enlisted men of the Army; Provided, That the sum of $12,000 is authorized to be expended for supplying meals or turnishing commutation of rations to enlisted men of the Regular Army and the National Guard who may be competitors in the national rifle match: Provided further, That no competitors in the national rifle match: Provided further, That no competitors in the national rifle match: Provided further, That no competitors shall be entitled to commutation of rations in excess of $1.50 per day, and when meals are furnished no greater expense than that sum per mapper day for the period the contest is in progress shall be incurred. Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Byrnes of South Carolina: Page 24, line 9, after the word "all," strike out the figures "$29,350,000" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$27,500,000."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Is the gentleman in favor of this amendment, in view of the action of the committee?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think it would be safe to cut the arbitrarily fixed the future cost of the ration at 37 cents, although the present-day cost is about 41 cents. The committee took a gamble on the price of the ration going down; and even with a reduction of the Army to the point indicated by the gentleman's amendment, I believe there will be barely enough money in the bill as it is, $29,500,000, to pay the subsistence of the Army

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Is it not a fact that when the bill was reported before, for an Army of 150,000, you appropriated only $27,500,000 under this item? I will say to the gentleman that the figures I have offered in this amendment are the exact figures that the gentleman had in his bill in the last Congress when he provided for 150,000 men. I am only relying on the accuracy of the gentleman's own figures in placing that figure in his bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I still think it would be unsafe to reduce it below this figure. As I say, the committee took a large chance.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Then, I desire to be heard on this. I am satisfied that the amendment ought to be adopted. This committee, after considering the question for a month, fixed the ration, and then on the basis of an Army of 150,000 men carried in the bill this amount of $27,500,000. Now, cermen carried in the bill this amount of $27,500,000. tainly nothing has happened since that time to cause us to increase the amount for subsistence. If anything, the tendency in the price of foodstuffs is downward. Then, why should we fail to provide the same amount that the committee only 60 days ago said was sufficient for an Army of 150,000 men? When we get back into the House, if it shall be decided that the Army shall not be reduced to 150,000 men, then this figure for subsistence ought to be changed, but where is the sense in providing for an Army of 150,000 men and failing to make the corresponding reduction for subsistence? Let me show you what this committee did. After this bill originally passed the House providing $27,500,000 for subsistence for 150,000 men, in conference we agreed to 156,000 men, and on that basis this amount for subsistence was correspondingly increased, and very properly so. In this session we have come in with a bill providing for an Army of 168,000 men, and the amount for subsistence is again increased to $29,000,000. That was proper. But the Committee of the Whole has voted to reduce the Army to 150,000 men. Why should we hesitate to reduce correspondingly the amount for subsistence? The gentleman from Kansas says they propose to spend the same amount for the ration, and that being so we can make this reduction, and it ought to be made. If you do not make the reduction you are simply increasing the ration, providing the gentleman's committee was right in the first instance. If the committee was right in putting $29,350,000 for 168,000 men, certainly that is more than is necessary for 150,000 men. If it is only enough for 150,000, then it would have been too little for 168,000 men.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON.' I will tell the gentleman what is in contemplation. If I understand correctly, there is an effort now on the part of the "big Army" men to whip certain people into line and try to get this provision changed, and if that should happen, of course certain gentlemen would expect a larger appropriation for rations for the Army.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do not know whether that is true or not, but I submit to the committee that if when we get back in the House, the House in its wisdom shall say that the Army should be 168,000 men, manifestly the amount carried for subsistence should be made to correspond. If the House, however, decides that the Army should be 150,000 men, we have no excuse whatever for refusing to make the change in the amount for subsistence correspond to the reduction in the number of enlisted men, and we ought to put it just where the committee had it in the last bill, which provided $27,500,000 for subsistence for 150,000 men. I think the chairman of this committee ought to agree to this.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, no matter how much or how little we appropriate in this item, the men will have to be fed at the market cost of the ration, whatever it may be. The law provides the character of the ration. Each man is entitled to a certain ration, so that the amount expended will be the market cost of the ration as provided for the number of men in the Army. If the Army should be 120,000 men, the expenditure would be for rations for 120,000 men. If the Army should be 150,000 men, the expenditure would be for rations as provided by law for 150,000 men, no more and no less. Certainly, we do not want to go on record as disposed to starve the Army of the United States or as trying to reduce unduly the appropriation for the subsistence of the Army. The ration is now costing 43 cents. It may possibly be reduced in price, but that is questionable. In making up this estimate the ration is estimated at 5 cents below the present cost per ration. In my opinion the sum carried is very low.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL Yes

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the limit of 168,000 men had remained in the bill, manifestly it would have resulted in starying the boys to have carried this amount.

Mr. MONDELL. I was inclined to think, and I said to members of the committee that I thought this item was low. I have the same view now.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman did not offer an amendment to increase it.

Mr. MONDELL. I am trying to keep these appropriations down, and I am trying to keep them down in good faith, and not for political purposes. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the gentleman has any reference to my action, I will say that time after time he has asked me to help him keep appropriations down. I am doing it, and yet oftentimes he does not stand by me in the effort I am trying to make.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. You have estimated the rations at 41 cents?

Mr. ANTHONY. Thirty-seven cents, and the cost to-day is 41 or 42 cents. We figured that the cost would go down.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, that presents a very unusual situation. In the Navy the commutation of rations to-day is figured at 68 cents. That is the sworn testimony before the committee of which I am a member. It is to the effect that the Navy ration is commuted at 68 cents. The Lighthouse Service, the Coast Guard, and other subordinate arms of the Navy Department are asking and all getting, except the Lighthouse Service, 68 cents a day for rations. I would like to ask further, is the Navy ration the same as the Army ration?

Mr. ANTHONY. That is a matter that was discussed before the full Committee on Appropriations, and it was brought out by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Kelley] that the Navy ration called for much larger portions of food than did the Army ration, and therefore it cost more. My information is that we feed the men of the Navy more liberally than we do the

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I am convinced from the testimony that 41 or 45 cents is not enough to feed the men in the Army. and that the appropriation which covers only that amount will lead to deficiencies.

Mr. ANTHONY. We thought that would be sufficient, and for that reason I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina. We did not want to take any chance.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. While discussing the question of rations, has the gentleman heard of the fact that there was a sale of $1,000,000 pounds of beef purchased during the war at a cost of 24 cents a pound and sold at the price of 61 cents a pound?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No; I have not had it called to my

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will say that that occurred. The gentleman will recall that there was quite a little criticism of the last administration about the sale of the surplus food in the War Department. This was sold to one firm in Philadelphia and it was one of the first acts of the new administration.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last I think the House ought to have some information in regard to the sale which the gentleman from Tennessee has just referred to. One of the first acts of this administration was to dispose of about 81,000,000 pounds of meat, as the gentleman says, which was found by the last administration to have been kept for two years until a lot of it had spoiled on its hands. We were compelled to sacrifice it at this price, when if it had been sold as it should have been, right after the armistice, by the former administration we would have realized 20 cents a pound.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, that illustrates the bunk that there was in the criticism of the last administration.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman is criticizing this adminis-

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; I do not propose to criticize this administration. I do not know anything about it. The fact that this was foodstuff that was found unmarketable for the general retail trade; that is my information about it. think, perchance, it is quite likely that the firm that bought it, even at that very low price, may make very little money by the transaction. I say that in fairness, but I did desire to bring out the amount of bunk that was indulged in during the last administration.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman must admit the fact that the War Department kept the meat for two years without disposing of it and that that is sufficient criticism.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The War Department could not dispose of it except at such a price as would bring it under the criticism that was constantly being made by the Members

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The reason they did not dispose of it was that they had a hard and fast agreement with the people of whom they purchased, and they would not do it. was not until we got into power that somebody saw the light, and they ordered that sale.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Accepting that as a basis, let me say that the War Department sold it at 61 cents when the price of meat in the hands of the packers to-day is 24 cents. am willing to give credit of good faith to the administration.

Mr. ANTHONY. The former administration kept it until it

Mr. CARTER. Does the gentleman say that the administration sold spoiled meat to the American public?

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Tilson, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 5010, the Army appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOTTRNMENT OVER

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next. I do this for two reasons: First, the business of the House is not so pressing but that we may properly give the committees an opportunity to consider the measures before them, and Members an opportunity to catch up with their official business. The second reason is that to-morrow is an important anniversary-the eighty-fifth birthday of Uncle Joe Cannon. [Loud and long applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn until Monday next. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now

SENATE.

SATURDAY, May 7, 1921.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following

Our father's God, and on the eve of what is nationally known as Mothers' Day, we bless Thee as our mothers' God. We thank Thee for these hallowed influences which have been following us through the years, for those sacred moments we recall when we learned our first lessons of truth and duty at our mother's knee and learned, too, our first evening prayer, and lisped Thy name as she taught us. We pray for the mothers of our land. We pray for our homes, that out of those homes new inspiration shall go forth and give to us a larger patriotism and a greater sense of devotion to Thee and to the interests which bind us to Thee and to Thy throne. We ask in Jesus Christ's name.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Wednesday, May 4, 1921, when, on request of Mr. Curtis and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I beg leave to present Senate joint resolution No. 26 of the Legislature of the State of California relative to immigration and particularly oriental immigration. I ask that it be printed in the Record and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Permission for temporary residence only for tourists, students, artists, commercial men, teachers, etc.

Second, Such exclusion to be enforced by United States officials, under United States laws and regulations, as done with immigration, admitted or excluded, from all other countries; and not, as at present, under an arrangement whereby control and regulation is surrendered by us to Japan.

Third, Compliance on the part of all departments of the Federal Government with the Constitution, and the abandonment of the threat or attempt to take advantage of certain phrasing of that document as to treaties, which it is claimed gives the treaty-making power authority to violate plain provisions of the Constitution in the following matters:

REMOVAL OF SOLDIER DEAD FROM FRANCE.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, several days ago the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] had printed in the RECORD a communication from Rev. Richard D. Harlan, and also what purported to be a news item indicating the views of Mr. Owen Wister on the subject of bringing home the soldier dead. I have a letter this morning from the Bring Home the Soldier-Dead League of the Pittsburgh area, in which they take exceptions to many of the statements of fact made by Rev. Mr. Harlan and by Mr. Owen Wister. I ask permission to have the communication printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as fellows:

BRING HOME THE SOLDIER-DEAD LEAGUE, Pittsburgh, Pa., May 4, 1921.

Hon. P. C. KNOX,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: My attention has been directed to a letter addressed to Senator Longs by the Rev. Richard D. Harlan, of New York City, dated April 15, which was printed in the Con-GRESSIONAL RECORD of April 26; incorporated with this letter was a purported news item by Owen Wister.

The subject had to do with the Government's work in returning those soldier dead from foreign burial places whose next of kin have advised the War Department they desired such return for interment in the home land. Mr. Harlan writes in part:

There seems to be good reason for suspecting that some people connected with the undertaking profession are, for their own financial advantage, making merchandise of the natural desires of many of our American soldiers whose bodies are now resting in the American ceme-

As chairman of the Pittsburgh area of the "Bring Home the Soldier-Dead League of the United States," composed exclusively of about 1,000 parents and near kin of those dead whose bodies are desired returned to America, I want to brand this statement as not only untrue but a slur on every member of this league which has insisted that the Nation redeem its promise to us and to our sacrificed dead that, in case our loved ones gave their lives to their country, their bodies would be returned to us.

I have had some experience with the actions of undertakers who have had charge of funerals of some of these returned dead; in no case has there been any disposition to be extortionate; to the contrary, some have assumed a large part of the expense, saying that the little they could contribute in honoring these dead could not measure up to the sacrifices made by our heroic sons and brothers and husbands. Men in the undertaking business more nearly approach the depths of sorrow we mourners have than such as the Rev. Harlan and others, who dare to intrude themselves into our personal desires with their unsolicited and presumptuous opinions. these self-appointed arbiters expect us to heed their officious meddling into our sacred determination to have our loved dead? It is the height of impudence to infer, as this Harlan does, that the parents of nearly 45,000 of these soldier dead are not "thinking straight on this sacred subject." We are not suppliants to the Government for our dead; they were promised to us and the Nation has returned probably 16,000 by this time, and we have no fear that the work will not be completed and our sons be entombed in the home cemeteries where we may pay tribute of love and respect to their memories. This league has no fear that the Congress will fail to return our boys by providing ample appropriation for the purpose.

The letter of Owen Wister, addressed to the American Legion, under a Paris date line, is insulting to every parent of all soldier dead; none but a ghoul would have the effrontery to write and have printed where the eyes of a loving mother would read them the declarations he made, affecting, as his letter does, those bodies to be left in France as well as those to be brought to the United States. None but a tainted mind would conjure up the vision he has dared to; his province is fiction at its worst.

Regardless of the views of these self-appointed and notorietyseeking intruders, we know the Government will redeem its promise to us parents; we know the sentiment of the Members of Congress too well by our pilgrimages to Washington, in behalf of our dead, to have any other thought but that all our dead will be returned to us during this year. We have no quarrel with those who want their loved ones to remain in France—these will be the hostages for help in the wars against that country in the years to come; let them remain there—but those of us who believe otherwise are determined that nothing this side of hell will prevent the fulfillment of America's sacred pledge to our dead and to us.

I am sure you will agree that our viewpoint has the same standing as that of Richard D. Harlan, and that space will be accorded us in the RECORD.

With best wishes, I remain, dear sir,

Very sincerely,

J. D. FOSTER, Chairman Pittsburgh Area Bring Home the Soldier-Dead League of the United States.

EXCHANGE OF ARMS AND EQUIPMENT.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1574) authorizing the Secretary of War to exchange, with foreign nations desiring the same, samples of arms and equipment in use by the Army of the United States, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 38) thereon.

RELIEF OF WATER USERS ON IRRIGATION PROJECTS.

Mr. McNARY. From the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 52) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to furnish water to applicants and entrymen in arrears for more than one calendar year of payment for maintenance or construction charges, notwithstanding the provisions of section 6 of the act of August 13, 1914. The joint resolution passed the House a few days ago, and I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the measure.

Mr. CURTIS. Let it be read before unanimous consent is granted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The reading clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in view of the financial stringency and the low price of agricultural products, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, after due investigation, to furnish irrigation water on the Federal irrigation projects during the irrigation season of 1921 to water-right applicants or entrymen who are in arrears for more than one calendar year for the payment of any charge for operation and maintenance, or any construction charges and penalties, notwithstanding the provisions of section 6 of the act of August 13, 1914 (38 Stat., p. 686): Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to relieve any beneficiary hereunder from payments due or penalties thereon required by said act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I shall not object to its immediate consideration, but I hope the Senator from Oregon will explain to us who are not from States containing arid or semiarid lands what change of law will result from it.

Mr. McNARY. I can explain it to the Senator, as I had intended to do, in a very few words.

The reclamation act which was passed in 1902, with the terms of which the Senator is no doubt familiar, was amended in 1916, requiring water users to pay annually the water rates for maintenance and construction. The time fixed for the payment of maintenance was the 1st day of March of each year. This year the farmers on some of the irrigation projects were unable to pay the charge on account of inability to dispose of their farm products

In the arid regions a great deal of land is used in the raising of alfalfa. On account of the low price of sheep and cattle hay has not moved and probably 3 per cent of the 40,000 water users are unable to meet these arrearages. It is not the purpose of the joint resolution to amend the act or any of the acts amendatory thereof, but to permit the Secretary of the Interior, after an investigation, to let the water users employ the water this year in order that they may raise a crop, and in the fall they will be able to meet their delinquencies which have accrued this spring.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand that it is wholly within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and is limited to this year. Is not that true?

Mr. McNARY. That is it exactly. It does not cancel any indebtedness to the United States, but simply gives the water users an opportunity to raise their crops this year. The water is available; it has been impounded-

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. McNARY. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. Certainly.
Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to any Senator who may feel inclined to question the wisdom of this measure that, in the first place, it does not forgive any debt. The farmers on the new irrigation districts, like all other farmers, have had to meet a great loss. A few of them, and it does not apply to very many compared to the whole number, have been unable to pay under the law for the use of water.

It does not cost the Government anything. The Government simply postpones the payment of the debt until they can move the crops they have or until they can raise another crop. The water is there just the same, and if we do not let them use it, it will go to waste. So there can be, it seems to me, no question whatever, under all the circumstances, that the authority ought to be given to the Secretary to extend the time of payment.

That is about all the joint resolution means.

Mr. McNARY. I tried to say as much as the distinguished Senator from Nebraska has said. In concluding I wish to state that this is the first time in the 18 years in which the irrigation has been practiced by the Federal Government in cooperation with the States where a similar request has been made These projects have shown their ability to take care of all their charges, but on account of the peculiar situation which obtains throughout the country by reason of the dislocation of business it is necessary to enact this piece of emergency legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole,

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the morning hour having expired, I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNary in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Legislative Clerk. A bill (H. R. 2435) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, and to provide revenue; to regulate commerce with foreign countries; to prevent dumping of foreign merchandise on the markets of the United States; to regulate the value of foreign money; and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the Senator from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I had intended this morning to take up and move the present consideration of the resolution heretofore submitted by me proposing to change the rules of the Senate by providing for open executive sessions of the Senate for the consideration of treaties and presidential nominations. The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], the leader of the majority, however, expressed a desire to be here when that resolution is taken up and to express himself in opposition to it. He is unable to be here this morning, and, consequently, I shall not press the resolution at this time. I am going to avail myself of this opportunity, however, to discuss the bill pending before the Senate, namely, the emergency tariff

Of course, all one need do is to look at the empty seats upon the other side of the aisle to be convinced of the total lack of interest upon the part of Republican Senators in considering the proposed so-called emergency tariff legislation.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—
Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.
Mr. CURTIS. I think the Senator ought to make his remark concerning empty seats applicable to both sides of the Senate Chamber this morning. The fact is, however, that the Committee on Finance is in session and members of that committee are in attendance upon it. Had there been a roll call I should have stated that fact. The Committee on Commerce is also in session, and members of that committee are in attendance

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; and Democratic Senators are on the Finance and Commerce Committees as well as Republican Senators

Mr. CURTIS. And they are in attendance upon the committees, too.

Mr. HARRISON. It is quite true that, since the new gag rule was adopted by the majority of taking so many more places on the committees than are accorded to the minority, the Republicans have many more Senators, of course, on the committees than we have; but, just scanning the Chamber, the number of Democratic Senators present is evidently from two to ten times greater than the number of Republican Senators.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I yield to the Senator. Mr. NORRIS. I join with the Senator in regretting the absence of so many Senators from the Chamber, but if he will count the Senators present in the Chamber at this moment he will find that there are several more Republicans here than there are Democrats.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator can not count; that is why he makes that statement.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, Mr. President, let me ask the Senator to count them himself. If he wants the RECORD to show the truth and if he wants the people to believe the statement he has made, let him count the Senators present. He is educated; he is a mathematician; he knows how to count. I suggest that he count aloud and let the RECORD show the number on either

Mr. ASHURST. There are more Democrats present than Republicans, by three or four times, I think.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, after the Senator from Kansas made his statement and word was sent out into the Republican cloakroom the number on the other side has been augmented. [Laughter.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, if the Senator will make another count, he will find the Republican Senators considerably in the majority.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from Mississippi will yield to me, I call attention to the fact that a large number of Republican Senators are rushing into the Chamber.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will count the Democratic Senators that came in out of the cloakroom, he will find that there are more Democrats who came in than there were Republicans.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas. Mr. ROBINSON. I note the statement of the Senator from Nebraska to my astonishment, for a larger number of Senators on the other side than on this side came rushing into the Chambe ..

Mr. NORRIS. I observe that the Senator from Arkansas came in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators will address the Chair. Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator. Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Nebraska might have observed me retiring from the Chamber to attend a meeting of Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from Mississippi now yield to me before the Senator from Arkansas goes out?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator. Mr. NORRIS. I will ask the Senator from Arkansas if he is not one of the Democratic Senators who just came in from the cloakroom?

Mr. ROBINSON. I was just attending an informal meeting of the subcommittee which the Senator from Nebraska appointed to make an investigation into the condition of the rice industry, and I started to return to an informal meeting of that subcommittee, if I may do so, with the permission of the Senator from Nebraska, while he continues his very illuminating and valuable remarks.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has not answered my question. Mr. President, if the Senator from Mississippi will yield

Mr. HARRISON. I yield for a question.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to say to the Senator that at the time the Senator first made his allusion to empty seats and between the time he made the allusion and now there were more Republican Senators in the Chamber than there were Democratic Senators, and the Senator who interrupted me and has gone out again was one of the Senators who came in from the Democratic cloakroom.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course there should be many more

Republicans here than Democrats.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, and that is the reason why they are here.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad to have seen so many rush in from the cloakroom when they heard sounded the clarion note, and I hope that more will come in from time to time as we lay bare the iniquities of the pending tariff proposal that is pro-jected upon the Senate. Especially do I hope that the new Senators who became Members of the Senate on the 4th of March will stay here so that we may discuss the subject to some extent.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.
Mr. BORAH. Do I understand the Senator is going to proceed with his discussion?

Mr. HARRISON. I am going to proceed with the discussion of the emergency tariff bill.

Mr. BORAH. Then the Senator is not going to discuss his resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. I made the statement immediately before the Senator came in that I intended to call up my resolution proposing to amend the rules, but the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] expressed a desire to be here and to oppose it, and word has come to me that the Senator from Massachusetts can not be present this morning, as he is not well. Therefore, I did not feel justified in pressing the motion in his absence. That is the only reason why I have not pressed it this morning. Is there something else the Senator desires to say?

Mr. BORAH. No. I was simply going to conduct myself according to which subject was before the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand.

Mr. President, it is a remarkable bill that is now before us and a most interesting debate is taking place in connection with its consideration. I do not know whether or not this measure has any champions among the majority members of the Senate. I read in this morning's paper a very illuminating statement issued by the chairman of the Finance Committee, who has made one of the two speeches that have been made by the majority on the pending bill.

As I remarked yesterday, I congratulate the majority side for their silence on this measure, because the more they discuss the bill and try to defend its provisions the more will the country condemn them for attempting to pass it. It should be silently ushered through, if possible. Your action reminds me of a funeral, anyway. It may be that this marks the death knell of the Republican Party. The statement of the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose], prepared by him and issued to the country on yesterday and appearing in the morning papers, I now read. This is from the New York World. The Senator from Pennsylvania says:

My own opinion is that the American people are just now more concerned in getting revenues revised and taxes reduced and the shcriff retired to the background than they are in academic discussions of disarmament. They want a restoration of prosperity.

That is a remarkable statement to be made by one of the leaders of the Republican Party, and especially by the chairman of the committee that reported out this proposed legislation and who is one of the two champions or advocates of the measure upon the floor of the Senate, for the measure contradicts in every word, in every line, and in every clause the statement issued and the wish therein expressed by the chairman of the Committee on Finance. He says that the people are interested in having taxes revised and the burden of taxation reduced to them. This bill proposes to increase the taxes upon the people. How do Senators on the other side expect the country to have any confidence in their action when the chairman of the Finance Committee speaks for this bill one day and the next day utters such a statement to the people as that to which I have referred?

But such expressions are not confined to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance. The pending emergency tariff bill was reported out of the Ways and Means Committee of the other House by Representative Young, of North Dakota. In the last session it was presented by Representative Fordner, of Michigan, a most charming and estimable gentleman, a man for whom I have the very highest respect, and association with whom is really most bewitching; but he has always advocated the highest kind of protection on everything. Indeed, it has been his proud boast that protection can not be put too high to suit him. So it was Mr. Fordner who introduced the bill at the last Congress and handled it upon the floor of the other House. However, by some strange legerdemain, at which the present Republican leadership are past masters, the policy was changed. That organization in the House took the bill away from Mr. Fordner and evidently said to Representative Young, who comes from a farming State, "Let this measure bear your name."

However, mind you, that was not done until March of this year. Mr. Young is on the Ways and Means Committee of the House. Here is a statement that he issued to the country on January 14 of this year, just a few weeks before he offered this bill. I do not know whether or not he was given authorship of the bill in order to soothe his apparently ruffled feelings and bring him back into line. I know what adepts the Republicans are, both in the other House and in the Senate, in smoothing out the differences within their party and bringing all kinds of elements together within the organization. They will stoop to unfathomable depths to accomplish that. However, here is what Representative Young, the author of the pending bill, said to the American people in January:

It is time somebody put on the brakes. Here and new I serve notice I shall oppose any such duties as these witnesses are asking.

The witnesses to whom he referred were asking for high duties.

They are pleading, with crocodile tears in their eyes, for import duties ranging from 100 per cent to 400 per cent above the Payne-Aldrich rates. I am going to fight with all the power I have against this penalization of the consumer. The war is over, and the consuming public is asking why those prices also are not gone.

So says the author of this bill. He continued:

If we grant the rates most of these interests are seeking we will simply be licensing a continuation of profiteering, filling the pockets of the manufacturer, who gets the protection, with the involuntary contributions of the consumer.

So there is the author of the bill in the other House saying that the consumer must be considered; that he will oppose with all the power that he possesses increased tariff rates of from 100 to 400 per cent; and then we see the strange acrobatic performance of Mr. Young introducing this bill at the instance of the Republican organization in the House and championing it, when every construction of it will impose additional burdens on the consuming millions of 100 to 1,000 per cent.

Strange ways you have of bringing your Republican brethren into line! You employ flattery or give a little supposed protection, so that deception might be practiced upon constituencies. And then the chairman of the committee of the Senate [Mr. Pernose], as I have just stated, gives a statement to the country last night saying that taxes upon the consumers must be reduced!

What must the American people believe? How have you the right to ask them to have any confidence in you, when the author in the House and the Senator in charge of the measure in the Senate talk about reducing taxation, when in every page of the bill you propose to increase the taxes upon the people?

Here is what Mr. FORDNEY, then in charge of the bill, said at the last session of the Congress. He was not going to offer this measure this session. In his speech, he said:

This bill is intended only as a relief measure, an immediate relief measure. I hope at the extra session of Congress, which will undoubtedly be called very shortly after the 4th of March, to see the Congress substitute for this bill a relief measure to remain in effect while we are preparing and passing a scientific revision of our tariff laws. As I say, it is my hope that very shortly after the beginning of the extra session of Congress the Congress will adopt as a relief measure, to prevent great importations of foreign goods coming into this country before we can prepare a tariff bill, either the Payne or the Dingley tariff law as such relief measure.

He advocated not this legislation being introduced again and burdening the American people by its provisions but, as high a protectionist as he was—having boasted, as I say, that you could not get a tariff wall too high for him—he said that he believed we should pass as an emergency measure the rates in the Payne law or in the Dingley law until a scientific revision of the tariff could be considered and placed upon the statute books.

And so it is, Mr. President. Strange changes have taken place; but it is in keeping with the majority party leadership—changing not only on tariff measures but changing in foreign affairs every day.

Why, that suggestion brings to my mind the fact that here the other day we saw the Senate of the United States pass a resolution providing for a separate peace with Germany, descriing the Allies, with whom our boys fought side by side so gloriously-offering practically an insult to them-and then about the next day we see the United States tendering its good offices as a mediator to settle differences between Germany and the Allies—aye, between our enemy and our friends—acting, so to speak, as the compromise "fellow"; and then we see extended to us by the allied nations an invitation to join them in their council and on the Reparations Commission. Why, Mr. President, in view of our inglorious action one can hardly believe they offered it to us as a compliment. It was a left-handed international jab, a soft insult. It was rubbing it in on us to extend that invitation after we had deserted them by passing a joint resolution providing for a separate peace; and yet the Republican leadership of the present administration did not accept it in that spirit. They thought we were being complimented. They accepted it, and the morning papers tell us that President Harding has sent as his personal representative the new ambassador to the Court of St. James, a man who has criticized and condemned practically every policy of the last administration for six years. But it is amusing after your torrents of criticism—amounting almost to abuse—of the foreign policies of President Wilson and the last administration to see you now hour by hour accepting them as wise and necessary. Oh, you are out looking for the footprints of your predecessors, so that the shoes that are worn by those who now control the affairs of the Government can be placed in them. I am afraid you will find in a little while difficulty in finding a shoc large enough to fill it. But I am glad to see you opening your eyes and appreciating the position and the conditions that are confronting this coun-It is, however, worse than an insult to them for the President to send there as its personal representative one whose views have conflicted so constantly with those of the Allies and who has so often criticized and, I might say, insulted the representatives of these nations. He is, of course, a most undesirable person to send and can not and will not represent the ideals of America.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NEW. If it will afford any relief to the distress of the Senator from Mississippi ever that proposition, I should like to call his attention to a London dispatch of this morning which appears in the papers carrying the Associated Press reports, in which it speaks of a banquet held in London yesterday, at which Mr. Colby, the Secretary of State under the Wilson administration, spoke in most complimentary terms of the gentleman to whom the Senator has just made reference and against whom he directed a very caustic speech the other day. He spoke of him in the highest terms. He referred to the new American ambassador as "an accomplished and cultivated gentleman."

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I read that.

Mr. NEW. I thought it might afford the Senator's ruffled feelings some relief.

Mr. HARRISON. I read that this morning—that Bainbridge Colby, in speaking to some Britishers, had said that this man was a very accomplished and—he did not say "most suited and well fitted," I think; what was the other expression?

Mr. NEW. I quoted it with accuracy-" an accomplished and cultivated gentleman.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; "accomplished and cultivated gentleman."

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippl yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HARRISON. One moment. That kind of a compliment reminds me, Mr. President, if the Senator from Indiana should be told of the beauty and charm and attractiveness of some estimable lady, and he should speak of her charms in response and say, "Yes; she is a nice girl," I fear she would accept it only as a mild compliment; and so the most that Bainbridge Colby could say about this gentleman who has been designated to represent us in the high Court of St. James is that he is "an accomplished and cultivated gentleman." No one has ever said he was not accomplished. None has ever remarked that he was not cultivated. His being a gentleman has not been questioned.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, if I may ask both Senators a question, could it not be said of Lord Chesterfield and Aaron Burr alike that they were cultivated and accomplished? And if you will excuse treason, perfidy, or ingratitude, you may apply to all three the term "gentleman."

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is right. So there have been enstant changes. Why, there was a change upon the part of constant changes. the administration touching the Colombian treaty. be soon a change about the League of Nations. Of course, we did not know exactly what you were going to do touching the League of Nations from utterances in the last campaign, but you will gradually come to it. I am glad to see that the new Secretary of State is leading the Republican Party back "to normalcy," so that we will arrive at a state of normalcy on the League of Nations proposition. Of course, when it is done, it is going to arouse the ire of the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] and the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] and those irreconcilables in this country who allowed themselves to be deceived in the last campaign, but all of that will adjust itself. They, as well as the country, in time will appreciate its necessity. The sentiment in the country is growing stronger day by day, and it will grow stronger, until finally the present administration will be forced to accept almost in detail what the past administration has done in the conduct of our foreign affairs.

It would have been impossible for you to have changed front on more propositions and to have realized the wisdom of the policies of President Wilson in so short a time more than you have. As suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Pomerene], the present President has notified the Senate to keep hands off, so you must. Of course, you know there must be no Executive encroachments. You can not break with him. You must just let him have his way, and then you will come back to what you did a year or so ago, when all of you over there, except about 12, were for the ratification of the treaty with some reservations and some amendments. You will come to that in just a little while.

Mr. President, the distinguished chairman of this committee, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose], in speaking the other day, said that the other side of the Chamber could not accept any amendments to this bill. He said, "We will not stand for it. If we do, it will degenerate into a general tariff bill." If the general tariff bill that is to be fostered by If the general tariff bill that is to be fostered by you and fastened upon the country is going to be worse than this, then the Lord knows what will be left of the people when you get through with them. "Degenerate into a general Republican tariff bill!" And so you know, Senators, you have the word of the chairman of the Finance Committee, that no amendments will be considered. You must take this bill just as it is prepared for you. Employing the same gag-rule tactics that has always blighted the history of the Republican Party. But here are the real views of the Senator from Pennsylvania on this measure. I read from the Protectionist, a Republican organ, of February, 1921. Here is what it says:

PENROSE CHANGES FRONT.

The bill had hardly reached the Senate when the announcement came over from Philadelphia that Senator Penrose, chairman of the Com-mittee on Finance, would run over to Washington for the purpose of opposing it.

You read it in the papers. It was flashed in big headlines everywhere that it was not satisfactory to Senator Penrose; and the article goes further, and says:

He came in a special car, with nurses accompanying him, and opened headquarters in Wardman Park Inn, the largest hotel in the city. On the day the hearings began, Senator Penrose set Congress by the ears with the declaration that he would give the measure his support. Politics unquestionably influenced this remarkable decision. The Senator desired first to keep peace in the Republican Party, as Fordner had wisely done in the House.

It may be that the way Mr. FORDNEY did it over there was to retire from the authorship of the bill and allow Mr. Young, who had denounced high tariffs and espoused a reduction in the high cost of living, to become the author of the bill. article continues:

Besides, he desired to hold in line for the next tariff bill the low tariff Republicans and the Democrats who are inclined to support this one. The Pennsylvania Senator knew, moreover, that the bill would stand little chance of enactment, and he was therefore the more willing to give it nominal support.

Yet one of the two speeches that has been made by the proponents of this legislation was made by the chairman of the committee, who at first opposed the bill, and came to Washington on a special train to exert his powerful influence against the measure.

Mr. President, the Washington Post is a splendid newspaper, a newspaper of powerful influence, considered now and has been since March 4, as the administration paper-the paper that represents the views of the administration on public questions that arise. Here is what that paper said about this bill in an editorial in January this year:

The truth is, the more this proposal is discussed, the weaker it becomes, for discussion emphasizes that it is an example of favoritism, that it is a movement tending to keep up the prices of necessaries of life in order that the producers may be saved from financial loss.

Yet that paper which condemned the bill in such terms in those days, has since the 4th of March, in its editorials, come to espouse the passage of the emergency tariff bill. It is now a wise, a great constructive piece of legislation. So it looks as if there has been a complete change all around over there. How do you expect the country to be able to keep up with you, and your newspapers in your vacillating policies and your constant legislative and administrative acrobatic performances?

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] has been faithful to the bill. He has remained by it from the begin-Of course, he had to discuss the provision relating to wheat, because that affected him and his constituents more than any other proposition in the bill. But he was ready at all times to defend the wheat schedule in this bill, and has sponsored the proposition. Yet about 3 o'clock yesterday, when no one was here to speak, and you were going to press it for passage, and we asked you if no one on that side would defend the provisions of it, you heard what he said, that "We are not going to discuss it over here," meaning that the word had been sent down the line to Republicans to keep qu'et, not to attempt to defend the provisions of this bill. He said in defense of that assertion that the agricultural rates of the bill had been sufficiently discussed at the last session, and alluded to the fact that I had discussed it pretty fully at that time. I am glad

But he overlooked the fact that certain States in this country have a right to be heard through their Representatives in the United States Senate, that the men who are sent here by those States can not be bound hand and foot and gagged, even though they belong to the majority party; that they are not expected to follow the instructions of Republican leadership at all times, and remain quiet when the interests of their respective States

He overlooked the fact that there are 17 new Members of the Senate here to-day, with as much right to express themselves touching legislation, to take care of their constituents by vote and voice, as those who have been here many years. Seventeen new Senators are in this body, and now part and parcel of it, who were not here when this bill was discussed at the last ses-Yet the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] said that these distinguished men are expected to take the hook as handed to them and swallow it, without even being told some of the defenses of the measure, which they might take back to their people in explanation of their action.

So, Mr. President, I am not talking to those hardened sinners-of course, I am speaking about political sinners-who were here at the last session, because I know that no amount of logic, no appeal, could be made strong enough to melt their stone hearts. But I want to make my appeal to the distinguished Senators who were not here at that time.

I appeal to the new Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Bursum]. He was not here then. Of course, he has not expressed himself touching this bill; neither have the Republican leadership told him or expressed anything which he might take back to his people as an excuse for voting for this infamous piece of legislation.

I appeal to the new Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON], who was not here last session.

The new Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Ernst] was not here. I believe the new Senator from Idaho [Mr. Gooding] came in just in time to vote upon the iniquitous proposition. was not permitted to hear the discussion of the bill, because at that time he had not arrived. He is entitled to hear some explanation upon the part of the Republican leadership of the provisions and of the character of this bill.

The new Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD] was not

The new Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] did not hear the discussion at that time.

The new Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKinley] was not here.
The new Senator from Colorado [Mr. Nicholson] was not here. Did the people in the great State of Colorado expect him to come here and, by bowing to gag rule, accept everything the Republican leadership handed to him? If he follows that policy, then, sir, mark the day, because it will not be far off, when the progressive electorate of Colorado will rise up and condemn that policy. They would not approve—indeed they had not heard the slogan of the Republican majority of the Senate, as expressed by the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Brande-GEET when he said:

The steam roller is prepared and ready, so get out of the way.

I do not see in the Senate Chamber now the new Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORDECK]. He was not here then. Perhaps, too, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] thinks that all he has to do is to tell his colleague from the sister State just to the south of his, "You vote this way. need no explanation from me, but you vote this way. The word has gone out from Penrose down, and has been accepted." Perhaps the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] knows exactly what the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Norbeck] will do under those circumstances. But I hope he will resent such reflections upon the independence of his action.

Then there is the new Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE]. It was not his pleasure to be here when all the injustices that are written in the pages of this bill, which place additional burdens on the consuming masses, were discussed. He is here now. He is entitled, and his people are entitled, to know the reasons why an attempt is made to force this measure upon them. If I were he, I would rise up and say to the Republican leadership, 'I want you to show me before you can gag me and vote me for this proposition."

Then there is the new Senator from California [Mr. Short-RIDGE]. He was not here at that time. What if he had told the people of California when he was a candidate before that progressive citizenship that he would allow a reactionary Republican leadership to compel him; without discussion, to accept this bill as prepared by them, without explanation or justification? Do you believe he could then have won the victory he did in that progressive Commonwealth?

Then there is the new Senator from Oregon [Mr. Stanfield]. He was not here at that time, and he is told by the distinguished Senator in charge of this legislation that he has to accept this proposition. He is told, more than that, "that no amendments will be considered."

Then there is the new Senator from Maryland [Mr. Weller] and the new Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS]. All of these distinguished new Senators are forced to accept this proposition and told that no amendment will be considered; that they must take it just as it is prepared for them. If I were a member of that party over there, I would not stand such gag-rule tactics. I would rise up in revolt and insurge, even if for only a few minutes, and break away from the bonds of parliamentary slavery with which this reactionary crowd are trying to bind the new organization of this body. But, sirs, the longer you stay here the wiser you will become, and you will eventually lose confidence in the crowd who prepared this bill and now propose to gag you by compelling you without explanation to support it.

Mr. President, let me bring back to the attention of the Senate the years from 1912 to 1919. It was a great period. It is good to think about it. It was a time when our country blossomed in prosperity like the rose. As the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. Cummins] knows, the railroads did not have enough freight cars to carry the wheat and the corn from the far western country to the market. The Representatives from his section were vying and competing with the Representatives from my section and from the East before the Interstate Commerce Commission to procure additional cars, so that the products of the farms and the output of the factories could find their way over the railroads to market.

Wages were higher, Farmers were receiving higher prices for their products, and business men greater profits than ever before in the history of the country. New farms were being cultivated; new fields were being opened up. Labor was theroughly contented and happy. The tired workmen could leave their places of employment and go home in the afternoon in perfect happiness and bask in the association of their wives and little ones. All of this was made possible by the wholesome legislation passed by the Democratic administration. was presperity and contentment in those days. There were no men out of employment. Employers were standing in line. It is good to think about it. It was a time when every avenue of approach to the markets of the world was cleared, when every channel through which our trade and commerce might flow was opened up. Hundreds of agents from the various departments of the Government were sent into every foreign field to study trade conditions and to advise the industrial, commercial, and agricultural interests of America of the opportunities offered.

Every policy upon the part of the Government was adopted with a view to building up our export trade. Commercial agents were provided for by law. Commercial attachés were stationed at all our consular stations, as well as elsewhere throughout the world. National banks were permitted by law and encouraged to locate branch banks in foreign countries. Our great corporations, under the sanction of the war, were permitted to coordinate and to cooperate in order to obtain trade in foreign countries. Our merchant marine was given the greatest encouragement and millions of increased tonnage was provided that the products from our farms and factories sold to foreign purchasers might not be dependent for delivery upon foreign carriers. American diplomacy was lifted to a high standard and instructions went out to all our foreign representatives to perform every act that might bring the nations of the world into closer trade relations with us.

Why, sirs, it was during this period that our exports increased from 1912 to 1920 approximately $6,000,000,000. It was a period when the farmers received higher prices for their products, working men and women higher wages for their labor, and business men greater profits on their investments than ever before in the history of America.

Why, sirs, during that period not only did the farmers increase their deposits in the banks, but they opened up new fields and added to their wealth through enormous increased valuation of their farms. Labor was never more employed, contented, and happy. Not only was he permitted during that period to receive such wages that he could in many instances lay some aside "for a rainy day," so to speak, but he was enabled under the wholesome and beneficent legislation passed by the party then controlling the Government, because of shorter hours of employment, to spend more time in his home with his wife and children.

Why, sirs, during that period the hum of prosperity from every mill and factory could be heard from one end of the country to the other and the red flare from our furnaces lighted every corner of the heavens. Bank resources increased by the billions and the wealth of the resources of America reached a figure of which the wildest optimist never dreamed.

Thousands of employers stood in line awaiting their turn at the offices of employment bureaus to procure labor.

The representatives in this Chamber and in the House from the West and East, the North and South, were daily competing with each other in making appeals to the Interstate Commerce Commission for additional cars that the products of their respective sections might be transported to market.

Why, sirs, during that period the country was basking in such a whirlpool of prosperity that a propaganda was set on foot to restrain such enormous profits from being made and so much wealth being accumulated.

But how different it is now. Beggars at almost every door. Tramps riding the blind baggage on every railroad train. million persons out of employment and unable to feed and clothe themselves and families. Wages in every calling have been cut and the cost of the necessaries of life still high. Hundreds of mills and factories closed, shopkeepers going into bankruptcy, banks failing, and thousands upon thousands of empty box cars lying idle on sidetracks throughout the country. trade is falling off, our ships are lying idle, the warehouses in every section are filled with the products of farm and factory. without value and no market in which to sell them. The present presents a dark and gloomy day to this once prosperous and contented people. And why is it? The answer is easy. In November, 1918, the prejudice of the majority of the American people was aroused because Republican leadership made them believe that President Wilson went too far in his appeal to the country for the election of a Democratic Congress. In that appeal he told the American people that in the great work of reconstruction following the war that he felt sure a Democratic House of Representatives and a Democratic Senate would cooperate with him, and that he would be able to carry out his policies to the best interests of the country. His appeal fell upon deaf ears and a Republican House of Representatives and a Republican Senate were inducted into office to criticize, hamper, and embarrass him from the first day they took control to the last minute he left the White House. Every appeal he made to the Republican Congress in 1919 to meet conditions as they arose was turned down, and from the time he and his party met defeat in the congressional campaign in 1918 a well-organized and adroitly conducted propaganda of misrepresentations and faultfinding was carried on from one part of the country to the other. In the next campaign—the one of 1920—in campaign literature, campaign speeches, and their campaign textbook they promised the people if they would give them complete control of the Government they would make the tax burden lighter and reduce the high cost of living.

The high cost of living argument and promises made more votes for your candidates and did more to defeat the Democratic Party in November than any other one proposition that you advocated. And yet, with these promises still fresh in your minds and ringing in the ears of the electorate, the very first bill that your party forces through Congress as a part of the legislative program, in December of last year, was to increase the high cost of living as carried in this legislation.

You say that you are trying to help the farmers by imposing these additional and increased tariff rates. Then, if your theory is correct, that these increased rates will result in benefit to the American farmer, whatever benefits are to come to him must be borne by the consumers of the country who will be compelled to purchase the products upon which the tariff is levied in this measure.

There can be no question where we do not produce a sufficient amount of a given product that is needed for consumption in the United States, and are forced to import from abroad the difference in the amount of production and consumption in the United States, that whatever tariff is imposed will result in a benefit to those who produce or hold the product. But it is likewise true, sirs, that where we produce in the United States a surplus of a given product and we sell that surplus in foreign markets the tariff, no matter how large, will have no effect upon the price. The United States has almost grown to be a "world a "world farm." There is hardly anything that is produced upon the American farm that we do not now produce more of than is needed for our home consumption and the sale of which surplus is dependent upon the markets of the world.

We export more wheat than we import. We export more corn than we import. And we export millions upon millions more bales of cotton than is imported.

But if the theories of the proponents of this legislation are true and the tariff rates are imposed as carried in the bill, then flour will be increased 20 per cent; rice, 2 cents a pound; meats will be increased 30 per cent; fresh or frozen beef, veal, mutton, lamb, and pork will be increased 2 cents and 21 cents a pound.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President—
Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.
Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator from Mississippi is almost as sanguine as the Senator from North Dakota, it seems to me. Mr. HARRISON. As sanguine? I am sanguine that it is going to increase the cost of living in this country.

Mr. McCORMICK. To the extent that the Senator has just indicated?

Mr. HARRISON. If what the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Pen-ROSE] and I take it the Senator from Illinois too, because he voted for it, believe is true, it will certainly increase the cost of living. If it does not add to the price of the product, there is no use imposing the tax, because what you say you are trying to do is to help the farmers of the country.

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator from Illinois is not a chronic optimist or a chronic pessimist. He does not believe that the increase in prices or in the cost of living will be as great as the Senator from Mississippi or the Senator from North Dakota

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from Illinoiscan get together on this proposition. He represents one of the great cities of the country.

Mr. McCORMICK. We could get together, possibly, if there were none to disturb us.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, for a while no one will disturb us. The Senator's State has a great city, the second in the United States, and there are over a million consumers there. Does the Senator believe that the tariff on wheat and on corn and on frozen meats and on wool and on hides will increase those things to the farmers or live-stock men of the country?

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator hopes that there may be some relief to the farmer, but, as he said a moment ago, he is not a chronic optimist. He is less sanguine than the Senator from North Dakota and less pessimistic than the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. To whatever extent it helps the farmers, is it not the opinion of the Senator that the consumers must

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator hopes the middlemen will bear the burden. To that extent he is an optimist.

Mr. HARRISON. Before the Senator takes his seat may I propound another question? Then the Senator does not believe that any part of the tariff will come out of the consumer, from which tariff the farmers are going to get the benefit?

Mr. McCORMICK. Let the Senator hope. He would not venture a positive opinion.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator think any part of it will be paid by the consumers?

Mr. McCORMICK. No. Mr. HARRISON. I will ask specifically about sugar. cent a pound tax on sugar certainly the consumers would have to pay. Does not the Senator think that? Does not the Senator think the 1 cent a pound on sugar will have to be paid by the consumers? It is pretty generally agreed by all Senators that that is true.

Mr. McCORMICK. It is agreed, perhaps, among the Senators from the sugar States.

Mr. HARRISON. Then the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] would agree to it.

Mr. McCORMICK. 'He is from a sugar State, like the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. No; the Senator from Mississippi is not from a sugar State. They are very sweet people down there, but there is no sugar there.

Mr. McCORMICK. I was mistaken on that point. Mr. HARRISON. So the Senator does not know whether or not this will increase the price of sugar to the people?

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator hopes not. Mr. HARRISON. What does he think about frozen meats?

Mr. McCORMICK. He is not an expert on frozen meats. Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I will proceed; and, as I stated before, if the contention of those who proposed this legislation is true, namely, that the amounts of the tariff on the products upon which the tariff is imposed will help to that extent the farmer, cotton goods will be increased by virtue of the provisions of this bill, as well as wool and woolen goods, in many instances over 500 per cent; sugar will be increased 1 cent a pound, butter 8 cents a pound, milk 2 cents a gallon and cream 5 cents a gallon, condensed milk 2 cents a pound. And just think of it, the tired workman and the poor old fellow who smokes to drive away his cares and bring back dreams of better days is forced to pay an additional tax that will increase the cost of his tobacco.

Hides that go into the shoes that are manufactured in this country are increased 15 per cent. I need not tell you that that will necessarily raise the already too high price of every pair of shoes that is purchased by the consumers of the

There are many other increases in the bill, every one of which is on the necessaries of life.

So the Senators who have the matter in charge owe it to the Senate to discuss the provisions of this bill, and they owe it to the American people to explain and defend the consequences that will flow from its outrageous and indefensible tax levies.

There have been some changes in the bill, it is true, but there are no changes, as stated by the Senator from North Dakota. respecting the tariff rates imposed on importations. And the antidumping clause, the valuation feature, and the licensing provisions are intended to increase the rates and add to the burden of the consumers rather than to lessen them.

Every amendment that has been added to this bill since it passed the House and the Senate at the last session has tended to increase still more the rates on the consuming masses. Nothing has been added that would tend to relieve them in the slightest degree. The antidumping feature has been fully discussed in the very able and elaborate address by the distinguished senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. It was likewise ably discussed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Gerry], and Senators on both sides of the aisle agree that so far as the antidumping feature of the bill is concerned it is intended under certain circumstances to increase the rates. The worst part about the antidumping proposition is that it is not confined to agricultural products, the subject proposed to be considered in the pending legislation, but it applies to every article included in the general tariff law. It leaves nothing out. It takes them all in, and in some instances, as was stated by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Mc-CUMBER] in charge of the bill, the valuation feature and the antidumping feature might increase the tariff upon certain articles from 300 to 400 per cent.

So the bill is worse than it was before, and those few Democrats who supported it in the last Congress should remember that, whatever excuse for their action then, there is none now, in view of the antidumping provision and the valuation provision and the licensing provisions added to it.

The action of the majority party is very different from that of the minority party. Here you are burdening the consumers of the country by deceiving the farmer and trying to make him believe that you are giving him some great benefits through the provisions of this legislation. I will tell you what the farmer is interested in. He is interested in obtaining some loans from the farm loan banks. He is interested in having his land appraised on which he has made application for loan, and the application hastened for approval. During the last Congress helpful amendments to the farm loan act were offered from this side of the aisle. You will remember that when the case was pending in the Supreme Court wherein the farm loan system was attacked and its constitutionality assailed and no bonds could be sold, and all the agents and appraisers were laid off, and the offices closed, that it was from this side of the aisle that the suggestion was made that the Treasurer of the United States purchase $100,000,000 of the bonds so that the system might be revived and the farmers obtain some of the benefits. You saw and I saw the other side of the aisle oppose it and cut it down to take care of only those applications which had been made and which had been approved. Then we saw later in the closing days of the last Congress the introduction of an amendment to one of the general appropriation bills authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to take over $100,000,000 of the farm loan bank bonds. It passed the Senate, but it was stricken out either in the House or in conference and did not become a law. If that legislation had passed, there would not be as much trouble to-day among the farmers as there is. The responsibility for the failure to pass that amendment is upon you. Your leaders directed that it be eliminated.

Those applications for loans could have been taken care of, and that system would to-day be functioning if that amendment had prevailed. So those are some of the ways in which you could have helped the farmers, but you failed to do it. I saw, too. Senators on the other side of the aisle opposing an amendment to one of the general appropriation bills to appropriate $100,000,000 to carry on the work of building good roads in cooperation with the States, and that legislation was defeated.

Mr. President, if the antidumping clause in this bill prevails, it will undo the work which this side of the Chamber did in The Senator from Wisconsin remembers that, because he voted for the legislation and championed it over on the other side of the aisle. Under the leadership of the distinguished Senator from Alabama, who was then the leader of the ma-jority in the House of Representatives, we saw the condition of the farmers of the country; we knew that the great burdens upon them were caused in part by the fact that they had to pay too high prices for the things which they needed in order to work and produce their crops. While everything they produced was sold in the open competition of the world, practically speaking, on everything they bought-fertilizers, farming implements, and so forth-they had to pay a high protective tariff. So we wanted to relieve that situation, and we passed what was known as the farmers' free list bill. The articles that we placed upon the free list at that time in order to help the farmers of the country are still on the free list due to that legislation, removed from any tax and any tribute to certain overgrown protected interests. If the antidumping clause of the pending bill prevails, it may, if the circumstances arise—and the probabilities are they will arise—take from the free list every one of those articles and impose a tariff or a tax upon them, thereby increasing the costs of these necessary farming articles to the farmers of America.

Sirs, let me just cite to you some of the things that are embraced in that free-list schedule which really helped the farmers of the country. I see first in order antitoxins to cure the children from attacks of diphtheria. If the antidumping provision of the bill prevails, the time may come when there would be imposed a protective tariff against the mothers of the land buying at a reasonable price antitoxin and other medicines to relieve the suffering and cure the sickness of their children. Next, Bibles are on the free list, but if this provision in the pending bill should prevail it might be, if the circumstances should arise, that even those who desire to purchase a Bible made abroad and imported into the United States would have to pay a higher price for it. You want to prevent the sick from being cured and the godless from being Christianized.

Fertilizers of every kind, including Chilean nitrates, are now on the free list, but under the pending bill the time may come and circumstances may arise that a tax be imposed making the farmer's fertilizers cost him more. That brings to my mind the fact that, with the exception of about eight real friends of the farmers on the other side of the aisle, Republican Senators in the last Congress defeated legislation that proposed to give to the farmers cheaper fertilizers, to be manufactured at the Muscle Shoals plant. So it is a peculiar and strange thing to me that the men should now pose as friends of the American farmer who have fought him throughout in every contest. While they pretend to help him in the pending bill, they are really taking away from him some of the advantages that are given to him in the free-list schedule of the Underwood-Simmons tariff law.

Under the farmers' free list we provided that cotton bagging, that barbed-wire fencing, that plows, that disk harrows, that harvesters, that reapers, that agricultural drills, that mowers, that horserakes, that cultivators, that thrashing machines, that cotton gins, that machinery used in the manufacture of sugar, that wagons, that carts, that sewing machines and needles should come in free. I notice that the distinguished Senator from Norw Hemphire. from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses] proposed an amendment in the last Congress to put a tariff on needles. They are carried in this free-list schedule because, if we could, we wanted to help the housewife, the farmer's wife, the consumers of the country, to purchase such articles at reasonable prices.

Mr. MOSES. May I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the needles which I wished to protect were needles that were used in machinery in hosiery factories and not needles that are used by the housewife?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; needles that are made up in New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. They are, indeed. Mr. HARRISON. Yes. We did not stop in this enumeration by naming the commodities that the farmer needed upon his farm in order to produce his crops, but we made the language so broad that it provided that agricultural products of every kind should be admitted into the country free of any import duty; yet if the pending bill passes in its present form, with the antidumping clause inserted, the result would be to increase prices to the farmers of the country. While proposing to help them, in one instance by imposing a high tariff on farm products, through the antidumping clause there would be levied high taxes upon the things that are now on the free list, and which are necessary to the farmer to produce his crops.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from New Hamp-

Mr. MOSES. Does the Senator from Mississippi mean that the imposition of a tariff upon farm products is going to be any detriment to the farmers themselves?

Mr. HARRISON. I am not surprised at the Senator from New Hampshire asking me that question. The Senator from New Hampshire can not understand how if the farmer had to pay a tax at the customhouse

Mr. MOSES. Upon the products which he himself raises? Mr. HARRISON. On agricultural implements, it would hurt

Mr. MOSES. "Agricultural products" is what the Senator from Mississippi said.

Mr. HARRISON. On agricultural implements of every kind. Mr. MOSES. No; "agricultural products" is what the Senator said.

Mr. HARRISON. If I said "products," I was mistaken, because I have talked for the last half hour on agricultural implements that are now on the free list, and which under the antidumping provision of the pending bill may be greatly

Mr. MOSES. I thought, if I may quote the words of Beaconsfield speaking to Gladstone, that the Senator was "intoxicated with the exuberance of his own vocabulary.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad I have detained the Senator in the Chamber long enough for him to hear at least a part of my vocabulary, because the Senator from New Hampshire made one of the most eloquent speeches during the last Congress that I have ever listened to respecting the provisions of this bill. It was a speech which was published in all the papers of the country, and while it did not have much effect upon the ma-jority side of the aisle, it was certainly filled with eloquence and great logic. It showed that the Senator is a real statesman, and that he is not willing because needles are manufactured in his State to swallow all other indefensible propositions that might be handed to him in order to get protection on them. I should like to read that speech.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, before the Senator reads it, will he allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HARRISON. I can not yield now; I will yield in a few

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi

declines to yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to read from the great speech that was made in the last Congress by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses], which is found on page 3252 of the Con-GRESSIONAL RECORD of February 16, 1921. In speaking of the emergency tariff bill then pending before Congress, which was similar to the pending bill, the Senator from New Hampshire

Mr. President, this bill having been described to meet an emergency, the emergency is presented to the Senate in a most one-sided manner. I insist, as an all-around protectionist along the lines stated by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Edge], that if an emergency exists with reference to American industry and trade, it exists in all branches as well as in the few which have been singled out for special favor, and that we, as national legislators, should consider all of them. The proposal which I make in the amendment now pending is to apply, during the 10 months in which the pending bill purposes to operate, all of the duties contained in the last Republican tariff measure which was adopted, a tariff which was amply protective for every industry which it touched, a tariff which was proclaimed to the country as the best tariff measure ever drawn, a tariff measure which was framed, in part at least, and voted for and upheld by 14 Senators still remaining on this side of the aisle, who can not have forgotten the panegyrics with which they covered that measure, and to whom I now appeal to give us, in the 10 months through which the pending bill purposes to operate, a complete wall of tariff protection for all industries, behind which the Congress may proceed leisurely and scientifically to draw a tariff bill fitted to all emergencies and which may be permanent law during many years to come.

I am trying to make an appeal to my protectionist brethren on this side of the aisle to support it, because it can not be that the measure now before us in the form in which it now stands, and to which I can never give my vote, can be adequately defended by anybody. It is regarded very generally as a measure which is indefensible. Private conversation among Senators shows that to be the fact. It has been admitted almost in terms by Senators who have speken in its favor upon the floor. It is a bill—

That is this bill-

That is this bill—that grows out of an unwise yielding to pressure which was applied at the other end of the Capitel. It is the offspring of a union between the cotton field, the sugar-cane brake, the rice paddy of one section of the country, and the sheep run, the cattle range, and the wheat field of another section. It is a misshapen brat at best. It is lopsided, it is blind, it is deaf, it is bandy-legged, and it suffers from congenital economic rickets. It is misconceived, hagborn, and, to complete the characterization, ditch delivered. Republican Senators can not go to the country upon such a proposition.

That is the best speech the Senator ever made.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MOSES. I am glad that my periods have fallen so pleasingly on the ear of the Senator from Mississippi, and I can only wish that upon the original delivery of the speech I could have delivered it with the force which he has now given to my restrained words in dealing with this measure.

I assume, Mr. President, that the Senator is endeavoring to wring from me some sort of recantation; that he wishes me to state that I have changed my opinion about the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I do not think the Senator ever changes his opinion.

Mr. MOSES. I have no intention of changing my opinion on this measure; I have no intention of voting for it; and I hope before the debate upon it closes that I may have the opportunity to offer once more a few well-chosen and wholly restrained comments upon what I believe to be its main features, particularly the last sections of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I am very sure the Senator will make a most eloquent speech.

The pending bill is supposed to be a general bill to take care of every industry in the country, so far as the agricultural interests are concerned. Word has gone out that it can not be

This bill provides that cotton with a staple of 13 inches shall carry a tariff of 7 cents a pound. That is the provision of the bill. Now, let me read from the report of the committee, to see whether or not the committee that drafted this proposition really intends and desires to be fair with every section and every interest in the country.

I am reading from the report prepared by Mr. Young, from the Committee on Ways and Means, and submitted to the House of Representatives. He says:

The Young emergency tariff bill proposes a duty of 7 cents per pound on cotton the staple of which was 11 inches and longer. We are of the opinion—

Says this report-that the minimum length of staple on which the tariff is to be levied should be 1½ inches.

I am reading this to the Senator from Utah. I just want to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to this matter a mement. This bill carries a tariff of 7 cents a pound on cotton the staple of which is 1% inches in length. Is that right?

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct.

Mr. HARRISON. The report of the Ways and Means Committee of the House says:

1. The Young emergency tariff bill proposes a duty of 7 cents per pound on cotton the staple of which was 13 inches and longer. We are of the opinion that the minimum length of staple on which the tariff is to be levied should be 13 inches, and that the duty should be increased from 7 cents to not less than 10 cents per pound.

2. Long-staple cotton is produced in the United States in certain favored areas, the most important of which are Arizona and California, in the Delta of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, in Texas and Okiahoma, in South Carolina, and to a limited extent in other cotton-producing States. The long-staple cotton produced in these areas has to compete with imported cottons, especially with those produced in Egypt and Peru.

3. Long-staple cotton is required for certain specific purposes, such to compete with imported cottons, especially with those produced in Egypt and Peru.

3. Long-staple cotton is required for certain specific purposes, such as the manufacture of automobile tire fabries, for mercerized hosiery and underwear, for sewing thread, for lawns and ladies' dress goods, and for the finer numbers of yarns. It is highly desirable to develop our production of extra staple cotton to meet the requirements of American manufacturers of such products.

4. Large areas of land in this country are available for the production of extra staple cotton, but because of the costs of reclamation, irrigation, and the higher standards of living and cost of labor, the cost of production of such cotton in the United States is high and our producers need a protective tariff to equalize the cost of production abroad with that in the United States.

5. While no official data are available, it is estimated that the cost of producing long-staple cotton in Arizona and California is 52.6 cents per pound and the cost of producing long-staple cotton in the Mississippi Delta and elsewhere in the cotton belt is about 35 cents per pound.

6. In the table following are presented quotations on the selling price of Sakellaridis Egyptian and American Egyptian cottons. It will be observed that on March 15 the price of fully good Sakellaridis price of Sakellaridis and No. 3 grade at 25½ cents, landed Boston. Such prices are far below the estimated cost of production of cotton in Arizona and California. It should be pointed out further from the table that the prices of good fair Sakellaridis and No. 2 Arizona Egyptian have been practically indentical since November 13 last. In other words, the price of good fair Sakellaridis seems to fix the price of American Bgyptian cotton, but it is known to be a fact that "upper Egyptian" cottons compete directly with American cottons are available for upper Egyptian cotton, but it is known to be a fact that "upper Egyptian" cottons compete directly with American cottons are registed for upp per hundred pounds, and from Mempins, Tenn., to Boston is 65½ cents per hundred pounds.

8. Enactment of a tariff which would give protection to cotton of 1½ inches staple and longer would serve to encourage the production of superior varieties of cotton in the United States and would tend to improve the character of the American cotton crop.

9. Producers of long-staple cotton have faced adverse market conditions in the sale of last year's crop and are said to have on hand a large part of last year's production. Accordingly it is believed that the producer would receive the benefit of whatever protection that might be conferred by the proposed tariff measure.

10. In the second table figures are presented which show the estimated production of long-staple cotton in the United States and in the world, and also the imports into the United States of Egyptian and Peruvian cotton, which constitute practically all of the imports into this country of cotton of 1½ inches or longer in staple. In passing it may be stated that small quantities of staple cotton are imported into the United States from Mexico and the West Indies, but exact statistics are not available from these countries.

The proposition that I want to ask the Separator about in this.

The proposition that I want to ask the Senator about is this: When the report of the Ways and Means Committee, if they can justify a tariff on any length of cotton, says that it should be 13 inches, and the bill carries a duty on cotton with a staple of 13 inches, why is it that they did not make it 13 inches?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HARRISON. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. The only cotton to speak of that is imported into the United States—and that is the Egyptian long-staple cotton—has a staple running from 13 to 15 inches. The Finance Committee and also the House committee in this report decided that the only protection that was needed to cotton at all was against cotton that was imported into this country; and I will say to the Senator that 13 inches is rather a short staple for what is called long-staple cotton. The Egyptian cotton that is raised in Arizona has a staple running from 18 to 18 inches. Nearly all of the Egyptian cotton that is imported into the United States has a staple of 15 inches, and there is no necessity of applying the duty to 15. There is a little 15 cotton necessity of applying the duty to 15. There is a little 15 cotton raised in America outside of Arizona, in Alabama and certain parts of Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. As the Senator understands, I am not taking issue with the Senator on the propriety of not putting a tariff on 11-inch cotton. The Senator understands that I am against protection of every kind, but what I am asking the Senator is why in a report of the Ways and Means Committee of the House they say that the tariff should be 10 cents a pound on cotton 12 inches in length to 12 inches in length, and you write a bill making it 18 inches?

Mr. SMOOT. Because cotton with a staple of 18 inches is the only cotton that is imported into this country that comes into competition at all with cotton grown in the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Committee on Ways and Means says that the 11-inch cotton comes into competition.

Mr. SMOOT. The Finance Committee of the Senate did not think it did. Mr. HARRISON. Then the Senator from Utah states that the facts as stated in the report of the Ways and Means Committee of the House are not true so far as cotton is concerned? Mr. SMOOT. I would not say that.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, that they are incorrect?

Mr. SMOOT. I would not say that they are not true. think perhaps you could find a negligible quantity of cotton that comes in that is not 13 inches in length; but I want to say to the Senator that if it does come here it is because of a mistake in shipping that class of cotton, and it would be a very lowgrade Egyptian cotton with a staple of 11 inches. There may be a few bales; I do not know; but there is no necessity of protecting it.

Mr. HARRISON. The strange thing to me is that here the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate in their report state that a tariff should be placed on cotton with a staple between 11 inches and 12 inches in length, that it competes with certain cottons from other countries, and yet the House did not place it at 11 inches in length; it put it at 18 inches. Why did they write a report and state one thing, while in their bill they do not take care of the situation with respect to cotton with a staple less than 18 inches in length?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether the Senator is reading from the report on the original bill or not.

Mr. HARRISON. I am reading from the Young report, that was filed with this bill recently.

That is the later report.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that report was made upon the basis of the report that was first made in the House. If the Senator will remember, when the bill came from the House it did carry a tariff on cotton 11 inches in length, and the report was made up on that, but it was changed in the Senate to 13 inches.

Mr. HARRISON. No; this report says:

The Young emergency tariff bill proposes a duty of 7 cents per pound on cotton the staple of which was 13 inches and longer.

Then it goes on and says that the tariff ought to be on cotton 13 inches in length. Now, what I am trying to get at is this: In drafting the bill, if they say it is going to be general in character and take care of all agricultural products, and they make a statement like that, why did they not put a tariff on cotton the staple of which is 11 inches in length? All of their argument is to support the proposition that there should be a tariff on cotton the staple of which is 11 inches in length. can not imagine any sectional feeling entered into it.

Mr. SMOOT. I think perhaps the reason why it was the same as it was in the last session is that the bill was to be reported and pass the House and pass the Senate without changing it from the rates as agreed to in conference, and the 12 inches was agreed to in conference.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator offer that as a justification for this action-that this was done simply because they wanted to stand by a rate carried in a previous bill?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I am not trying to justify it at all. The Senator asked for the reason, and that is one reason.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the Senator think that is a pretty bad reason?

Mr. SMOOT. No: I do not, because I think cotton with a staple of 1% inches is the proper length of staple of cotton to protect. I think the Senator is wrong in the position he takes,

Mr. HARRISON. I can understand how the Senator, then. could be in favor of its being 18 inches; he believes that; but here is the Ways and Means Committee of the House stating that it ought to be put on 13 cotton; and they put it on 18 cotton.

Mr. SMOOT. The only thing I can say is that the Senator from Utah disagrees with the conclusions of the members of the House Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, that is the way this bill is drafted. That is the kind of reports that are thrown in here and on which we are asked to vote.

You will see, therefore, that the new Members and all of us are asked to vote on a measure based on a report that contradicts the bill it supports.

Mr. President, I am not going to occupy much more of the time of the Senate. I want to argue one or two more propositions and then I am through.

When this bill was before the House and the Senate in December, it was offered as an emergency measure. It was said: "We want to pass it immediately, in order to take care of the present situation. There are conditions confronting this country that must be met. There are great importations of wool that are coming into the United States. There are great importations of wheat and of rice and of live stock and of all these things, and as an emergency measure we must put up a wall here quickly in order to protect the American farmer. That was the argument.

Mr. SMOOT rose.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator want to ask me something?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I was simply going to say to the Senator that that condition exists to-day, but in an exaggerated form.

Mr. HARRISON. I am going to show the Senator that it does not exist. That is just what I am going to argue.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator, no doubt, has received letters from importers of wool begging that an amendment be made to this bill, so that it will not apply to wools contracted before the 1st day of April; and yet in the last three months more than 137,000,000 pounds of wool have come into the United States, and if it goes another two months there will be enough wool in the United States to last the United States for over two years and a half. If that is not an emergency, I do not know what is.

I will not take the time of the Senator now to go into the other items mentioned.

Mr. HARRISON. I am very glad to have gotten that statement, because I expect to show just the contrary before I finish. Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can not show the contrary.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, wait and you will see. That bears exactly on the point I am going to argue now. I am glad the Senator is in here. He has not been in very much. He has been busy on committee work, I know.

Mr. SMOOT. I have been here all the time, with the exception of this morning

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has been engaged on committee work.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to change the figures of 137,000,000 pounds, as I have the report up to March 1, 1921that is, January, February, and March-to 162,158,546 pounds.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, in December the statement was made, and it is reiterated now, that there was an emergency existing and that they were afraid there would be such a flood of importations into this country of wool, wheat, sugar, and various other agricultural products, that they needed a tariff to protect them, so the cloture rule was attempted to be forced on us in order to pass the bill quickly. That bill was defeated purely because the President vetoed it. If that bill had been signed and had become a law the Democratic minority might have been in a very peculiar position right now in the eyes of the country.

Importations have fallen off instead of increasing, as was prophesied by the Senator from Utah and other Senators in support of this proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but not in the case of the items that this bill covers

Mr. HARRISON. Here are the items in regard to wool imports:

In October, 1920, 1,415,000 pounds came into this country. In November, 497,000 pounds came in. In December, quite a large amount came in-3,082,000 pounds. In January, 1921, 1,140,000 pounds came in. In February, 487,000 pounds came in. In March, 369,000 pounds of wool came in. There was a falling off.

Mr. SMOOT.

Mr. SMOOT. No; Mr. President. Mr. HARRISON. Well, these are the figures of the Tariff Commission up here, the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. If the Senator has something different, I do not know.

Mr. SMOOT. I quote figures from the Department of Commerce.

Mr. HARRISON. That is where these came from. be, since you have got your new crowd up there, that I can not get correct figures. I do not know about that. Mr. SMOOT. This is for the eight months of last year, 1920.

It was printed before ever the new crowd was there.

Mr. HARRISON. I know, but you have not the figures for the last few months, have you? Mr. SMOOT. Yesterday I asked for the importations for January, February, and March of 1921.

Mr. HARRISON. That is what I did yesterday.

Mr. SMOOT. And they show 162,158,546 pounds.

Mr. HARRISON. They gave me for the month of January, 1921, as I stated, 1,140,000 pounds; for February, 487,000 pounds; and for March, 369,000 pounds, showing a falling off of nearly 300 per cent.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HARRISON. I do. Mr. WALSH of Montana. This reminds me of a very interesting incident occurring here in the Senate quite a number of years ago, when Senator Carter, of our State, was a Member of this body. As in this instance, upon identically the same question, essentially different figures were furnished by the two Departments of the Government, which gave rise to considerable discussion here as to which were the correct figures. Senator Carter had a reputation of being something of a compromiser, and he proposed that the two sets of figures be averaged and the result accepted by the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. The former Senator from Montana, Mr. Carter, may have accepted that during his lifetime, but the Senator from Utah does not compromise when he knows that the figures are correct, and I can tell the Senator from Montana now and the Senator from Mississippi the amount I named is correct, namely, 162,158,546 pounds. Mr. President, that is the amount of wool that came into this country in January, February, and March, 1921.

Mr. HARRISON. What is the figure given by the Senator? Mr. SMOOT. One hundred and sixty-two million one hundred and fifty-eight thousand five hundred and forty-six pounds.

Mr. HARRISON. In January, February, and March?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. Mr. HARRISON. That was wool?

Mr. SMOOT. That was wool.

Mr. HARRISON. According to the figures they furnished me, in January, 1921, as I stated before, there were 1,140,000 pounds, and in February a falling off down to 487,000 pounds, and in March down to 369,000 pounds imported. The Senator may have just taken them all together, or these figures may apply to only one grade of wool. Has the Senator stated them by

Mr. SMOOT. I have them here by classes, Mr. President, for the three months, and I got them direct from the depart-

Mr. HARRISON. What I am trying to get at is this: Was there a falling off in the Senator's figures in the month of February from the month of January, and was there a falling off in March from February? The point I am pressing is constant decrease in the importations of wool.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should think there would be a falling off in February and March, because of the fact that when it was thought in the United States that there was going to be a tariff upon wool the orders ceased, and, of course, that left the months of February and March, the time when those wools would have arrived here if they had been ordered during those months, with few arrivals.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That inference might seem justifiable, but I have upon my desk this morning two letters from manufacturers of woolen goods in the State of New York.

Mr. SMOOT. I think I have copies of the letters. Mr. WALSH of Montana. Who tell that they made purchases in the month of March.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but they did not arrive here. We are talking about the wool that has arrived here.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. They made purchases in the month of March of wool, not yet having arrived, so that I think it is not quite true that purchases ceased when the other bill had passed.

Mr. SMOOT. There is not any doubt but what purchases ceased, Mr. President, and that began even in November. You can not buy wool from Australia and have it fly here the next day. It takes months to get it, and the purchases ceased in November and December, so the importations of wool in February and March fell off, because if the wool had been purchased in November and December it would have arrived here in February and March, and I called the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to the letters to which the Senator from Montana has just referred. I suppose every Senator received them. After the President vetoed the bill they began to pur-chase wool again, and now they are asking that amendment be made to this bill, so that all wools purchased anywhere in the world under contract up to April 1 shall come in free.

Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator Mr. HARRISON. from Utah has admitted that the importations of wool into the United States in the month of February fell off from the month of January and that the importations in March fell off from the month of February.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I admitted it, and I gave the reasons why. Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I understand the Senator's reasons, and I am going to give the reasons to the contrary. I offer these reasons merely to show that the importations of wool had been on the decline since December, and this bill was proposed in December in order to keep out the great flood of importations that they said then were coming here. The picture the Senator from Utah at that time drew was most impressive; he waxed eloquently, describing how shiploads of wools were coming in and how it would drive down the prices. Let us see what the price of wool was in the last three months. It may be that again the Senator's figures are different from mine. If I can not get correct figures at the departments since the new régime has come in, I shall be running over to the Senator's office and have him get the figures for me.

The price of fine unwashed delaine wool in December, 1920, was 47 cents. On April 30, 1921, the price was 41 cents, a falling off in price of 6 cents a pound. The general range of prices of all grades of wool in December was 48 cents, and on April 30, 1921, it was around 41 cents. If the bill had become a law in January and the importations had fallen off, as they have fallen off, then Republican Senators would have claimed much relief from the measure. The object of their bill was to increase the price of wool for the woolgrowers and to keep out importations. An examination of the facts shows that the price has not increased, although importations of that product have fallen off immeasurably. The contrary is proven from the facts of what was predicted by proponents of the legislation.

The Senator from Utah smiles. I am glad to see him smile. He is in a good humor when he smiles. The Senator evidently does not agree with me about that.

Mr. SMOOT. I really smiled at the statement the Senator made.

Mr. HARRISON. Maybe the Senator would not have made that kind of an argument, but most Republicans would. Of course, the Senator travels on a higher plane and he would not use that kind of an argument, but most Republicans would have used that kind of an argument.

You said you were going to keep out increased importations by the passage of the bill, and even though the bill failed the importations of wool have fallen off, according to the statement of the Senator himself. And when the importations fell off you predicted the price of wool would go up, and what happened was that importations fell off and the price did not increase, but went down. The results have been just the contrary of what the Senator from Utah and others predicted.

Now, I pass to wheat. We heard the Senator from North Dakota in December talking about the great importations of wheat that were threatening to come into this country. in December 11,185,000 bushels came in, and in January, 1921, it had fallen down to 4,504,000 bushels, and in March down to 2,671,000 bushels. So it did not take any tariff on wheat to bring it down, but the importations decreased from December, when there were 11,000,000 bushels, down to March, when there were 2,000,000, even though the emergency bill failed. Yet if the emergency tariff bill had become a law and the importations had decreased that way, the Republicans would have claimed all the credit for the fact.

But that is not all; you contended that the price of wheat was going up when the importations fell off. Now, let us see whether or not the price did go up when the importations went off. December 15, 1920, the cash sale price of No. 1 hard winter wheat was $1.755 per bushel. April 29, 1921, the price was $1.46 a bushel, a falling off, in other words, of approximately 30 cents a bushel. So the very reverse results have followed; that while the importations fell off in those two months from practically 11,000,000 bushels down to 2,000,000 bushels, the price of wheat declined also.

If the bill had become law and importations ceased and the price had gone up, you would have claimed the credit; but, sirs, you can not claim it now, because the importations have fallen off and the price has decreased at the same time. If your contention had been true, that to prevent importation into this country of wheat and of wool would have increased the price of those products to the farmers of the country, then that would have been revealed when importations fell off. But the contrary is proven, because the prices of those products have decreased.

Mr. President, if you Republican Senators were so anxious to do something for the American farmer, why did you not do something in 1919 when you took control of the legislative branch of the Government?

Mr. SMOOT. That is easily answered, if the Senator wants

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I would like to have the Senator answer it.

Mr. SMOOT. What would have been the use of passing legislation through this body when we knew there was a President at the other end of the Avenue who would veto it?

Mr. HARRISON. Why did you propose it in December, then, three months before the time he was going out? Was it a piece of hypocrisy you were trying to practice on the people? Were you trying to deceive them by any such thing as that?

Mr. SMOOT. No; Mr. President. If we had passed a tariff bill in 1919 it would have been a general tariff bill, and we knew that there was a large majority of Democratic Senators who were in favor of an emergency tariff bill, as demonstrated by the vote in the House and in this body.

Mr. HARRISON. Why were they not in favor of it in 1919?
Mr. SMOOT. The President of the United States in the meantime had given notice that there were certain industries here which ought to be taken care of, and we had every reason to believe he would sign the bill, and we put it up to him, and he vetoed it.

Mr. HARRISON. The argument of the Senator is this, that when the Republicans controlled the House and the Senate, in 1919, when the importations were much greater than they were in 1920, very much greater, as I shall show from the figures here, the reason why they did not pass a tariff bill was that they were afraid the President might veto it. If that was true then it was true in December last, because Wilson was President in 1919 as he was President in 1920. The Senator shakes his head. President Wilson was President in 1919, when the Republicans took charge of the House and Senate, and he was President in December, 1920.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question about that, but they were two entirely different propositions. One of them would have been a regular tariff bill. The other was an emergency tariff bill. One was right after the armistice was signed, when conditions had not changed materially from what they were during the war period. But later they had changed, and it developed that we had to have some protection for our industries through an emergency tariff bill, and that is the reason the action was taken.

Mr. HARRISON. Now, let me show some further unwarranted deductions from this bill, and the unreasonable arguments of its proponents in support of it as a revenue producer. Let us take peanuts, for instance. The rate on peanuts under the present law is three-quarters of a cent a pound. The rate under the proposed Fordney-Young bill is increased to 3 cents a pound. In the year 1920 there were imported of shelled peanuts, with a duty of three-fourths of a cent a pound, 110,-000,000 pounds. But the committee's report of the last session, and used in connection with the report this session, states that under this bill, with the rate four times the present rate, there will be imported 146,847,000 pounds.

I do not understand the logic of that proposition. If 110,-000,000 pounds came in in 1920, and the rate was just three-fourths of a cent a pound, how do you expect to get 146.000,000 pounds when the rate is to be 3 cents? If you expect the legislation to keep out these increased importations, why do you figure that so much greater a quantity of peanuts will come in?

Let us go down the list to something else, Take peanut oil, for instance. In 1920 the rate was 6 cents a gallon on peanut oil. There were imported into the United States 12.683,000 gallons. According to this proposition, the rate will be 26 cents a gallon, four times as high, and you say there will be imported 16,667,000 gallons. In other words, there will be 4,000,000 more gallons, with the rate four times as high, coming in under this bill as came in in 1920. If the object is to keep some of these goods from coming into this country, then by your own statement you prove it will not work that way, but we will import more into this country.

Take cottonseed oil: In 1920, with cottonseed oil on the free list, we imported practically 9,000,000 pounds. In this report, with 20 cents a gallon, or 2½ cents a pound, on cottonseed oil you estimate that there will be 96,000,000 pounds imported into this country.

Take rice: The existing rate on rice is 1 cent a pound. One hundred and eleven million six hundred and ninety-four thousand pounds came in in 1920. You raise the rate to 2 cents and you figure that 145,000,000 pounds of rice will come in under this bill. Is the object to keep some out or is it to encourage more to come in?

Take corn: In 1920 corn was on the free list, and we imported into this country 7,744,000 bushels. You estimate that under this bill, with a 15 cents a bushel tariff on it, 9,175,000 bushels will come in.

In 1920, with wool on the free list, there were imported, of washed wool, less than 8,000,000 pounds. In this report you estimate that with a 30 cents a pound tariff on it 95,000,000 pounds of wool will come in. You increase the rates, increase the protection, and it encourages a larger importation into this country, according to your estimates. I wonder what you are getting at anyhow. Some of your champions of this measure state that the rates proposed are so high importations will be prevented and practically an embargo will be erected; others contend, as shown by this report on estimated revenues, that the high rates will encourage importations and they will greatly increase. In view of these contradictions, some of us do not know what you believe and doubt that you know yourselves.

Of course, we would naturally surmise that these higher rates are intended to lessen importations. If they did not, then your whole theory fails. You have cited these estimates merely to fool some Democrats to believe that they can defend their position of espousing it as a revenue producer. You know that the rates in this bill are high and made purposely so that importations be decreased. You know, too, that not only will importations be decreased but in most instances the rates are so high that they will operate as a complete prohibition. The assertions in this report touching revenue are incorrect, misleading, and deceptive.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have been out of the Chamber at lunch a few moments and I wish to inquire if the Senator from Mississippi has touched the item of cotton in the

Mr. HARRISON. No; I have not discussed at length the item of cotton. I have discussed none of its specific provisions. Mr. McKELLAR. It provides that cotton having a staple of 1% or more inches in length shall pay 7 cents a pound. If it is 1§ or more inches in length shall pay 7 cents a pound. If it is the purpose to keep out Egyptian cotton that will not do it, so I am reliably informed by experts in the cotton business.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

Mr. McKELLAR. What purpose can that possibly have unless it is to fool the unwary?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Gooding in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. I simply rose to state that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. Ashurst] has given notice that he will discuss that question on Monday.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am told by an expert in the cotton business that a tariff on a staple of 1\(^3\) inches will not keep out Egyptian cotton at all, and that short-staple cotton does not come in, so this provision is mere surplusage in the bill if he is correct about it. It does not do any cotton farmer any good. The Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] shakes his head to indicate that this assertion is not correct, and I shall be very glad to have a statement from him as to what is really proposed in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I think we had better discuss it when the Senator from Arizona brings it up on Monday, although the Senator from Mississippi and I have discussed it somewhat, and I dislike to repeat that discussion.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well; I will look in the Record and see what was said by the Senators on this subject while I was out of the Chamber.

While I am on my feet, if the Senator from Mississippi does not object, I should like to read just a few lines from a statement by Mr. Joseph Newburger, who is a friend of both the Senator from Mississippi and myself, and who is one of the bestposted men in the South on cotton. He says in a letter to me:

By putting a tariff on cotton with a staple of 1% inches the Republican Party has done us no good, because this will not keep out what we are trying to keep out. If the bill would read 1% cotton we would keep out all Egyptian cotton, as there is from 200,000 to 300,000 bales that come to this country annually, and the tariff on 1%-inch cotton would help us materially in the Delta.

He evidently knows what he is talking about. He has been in the cotton business all his life. He has raised cotton, bought cotton, and sold cotton. He is a man of fine intelligence and has studied this question thoroughly. He knows just what kind of cotton is raised in the Delta. He understands thoroughly what this provision of the bill means, and he says it will be of no value to the cotton farmer. He knows the length of all Mississippi staples, Arizona staples, Florida staples, Egyptian staples, and all other staples, and when he says this provision of the bill will not keep out Egyptian cotton we can be assured that he is correct about it.

Mr. SMOOT. He is mistaken when he says the Egyptian cotton with a staple of only 1½ inches coming in would amount to 300,000 bales. I will say to the Senator that almost the whole of it is 1\secaption to 1\secaption inch staple. Another thing, if the Senator will permit me, he should take into consideration section 17 of the bill, reading as follows:

Manufactures of which cotton of the kind provided for in paragraph 16 is the component material of chief value, 7 cents per pound, in addition to the rates of duty imposed thereon by existing law.

That would mean that there would be 7 cents a pound on about all cotton goods imported in the United States, whether it be from Egyptian cotton or not, if we should allow the staple to be reduced to 11 inches,

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, the Senator would not say that this tax in favor of the manufacturers of cotton would help the growers of cotton. I understand the bill is intended to be in the interest of the farmers primarily, but in this instance it will not help the cotton farmers at all and will only help the manufacturers of cotton. There is a joker in these two provisions. The duty on one and three-eighths cotton will not mean anything because it will not keep Egyptian cotton out. Section 17 puts a duty of 7 cents on the manufactured cotton goods, and therefore the manufacturer of goods made out of Egyptian cotton less than one and three-eighths in staple and coming in free will be given this bounty of 7 cents a pound. This bill is certainly not framed in the interest of the cotton

Mr. SMOOT. The 7 cents a pound will apply to 18-inch cotton, and that cotton is raised in Arizona. amount raised in Alabama and some in a portion of Mississippi, but those are about the only States that raise cotton with a 1&-inch staple.

Mr. HEFLIN. There is some raised in South Carolina. Mr. SMOOT. There is a little in South Carolina, but it is so small an amount I do not know whether it is really worth

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator from Mississippi will permit me to reply to the Senator from Utah just a word further, if it was the purpose to help cotton generally, the one and threeeighths provision should be reduced to 11 inches in length of staple, of course, because we all know that substantially no other cotton except the Egyptian cotton comes in. Egyptian cotton is all, or substantially all, less than 18 inches, according to Mr. Newburger. Mr. Newburger is one of the most accomplished cotton men in this country. I will back his assertion on this subject. When he says much of Egyptian cotton is less than 13 inches in length, we can be sure he is right.

Mr. SMOOT. Less than 1§ inches? Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. There is very little Egyptian cotton, so he says, that is more than 13 inches in length in staple. The most of it is less.

Mr. SMOOT. The gentleman is wrong if he says the great bulk of Egyptian cotton is one and one-eighth staple.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; he does not say that. He says it is less than one and three-eighths, and if that is true the bill will keep out only a very small portion of cotton, which will not affect the American long-staple cotton at all. There is a marvelous and tremendous difference between 14-inch cotton and 13-inch cotton.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to assure the Senator that the gentleman is mistaken if he made that statement. There may be some Egyptian cotton that is a little less than 1§ inches that is imported into this country and used in clothing in a mixture of wool in low-grade clothes, but it is so small in amount that it is practically insignificant. The Egyptian cotton is between  $1\frac{\pi}{3}$  and  $1\frac{\pi}{3}$  inch staple, and I think that every man in the South who knows anything about the staple of cotton will admit that to be the fact.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator from Mississippi will permit me to ask the Senator from Utah another question, I think we can settle the matter. The Senator from Utah is a member of the committee. As I understand the Senator from Utah, it is the purpose to keep out the Egyptian cotton, is it not?

Mr. SMOOT. It is not the purpose to keep out Egyptian cotton. It is the purpose to protect the long-staple cotton in-dustry in the United States. That industry has not grown to any particular extent until the last few years. That is the purpose of the provision. The 13-inch staple provision will protect our American long-staple cotton.

Mr. McKELLAR. If it is the purpose to protect the longstaple cotton, why not change the provision to one and oneeighth, the provision named in the bill, so that it will protect that long-staple cotton? Of course, I differ entirely with the Senator in his views on protection. I do not believe in the protective theory, but if he is so desirous to do the long-staple cotton grower some good, why does he not arrange that provision of the bill so it will protect him? Why put it in the bill when it will protect him in practically no degree at all? The cotton men down South probably know more about this subject than the Senator from Utah, though my good friend is an expert on most subjects. The fact is there is an immense amount of long staple cotton grown along the Mississippi River in what is known as the Delta; a very great deal of it is grown there, and under the provisions of the bill that cotton grown in the Mississippi Valley and practically no other American cotton is protected at all. The provision is merely a matter of surplusage in the bill. It may catch some staples, but I do not see how it is possible under the information furnished by Mr. Newburger.

Mr. SMOOT. It will protect the long-staple cotton of Mississippi. It will protect the long-staple cotton of Arizona. It will protect the long-staple cotton of Alabama. It is not proposed to protect the short-staple cotton.

Mr. McKELLAR. It could not catch any other kind of staple, because no other kind of staple comes into this country. If you made the provision 1 inch in length or three-quarters of an inch in length, you would not keep any cotton out except the long-staple Egyptian cotton, because that is the only cotton which comes in. No short-staple cotton comes into this country, or substantially none,

Mr. HARRISON. Before the Senator from Tennessee came into the Chamber I had discussed the report of the House Ways and Means Committee on this proposition, and in their report, if the Senator will read it, he will find that the committee said there should be protection on cotton 11 inches in length and up, but as it has been brought into the Senate the bill provides 18 inches. They stated in the report what the Senator from Tennessee now states, but the Senator from Utah takes issue on that proposition. Of course, the bill carrying a duty on cotton of 13 inches in length gives a complete answer to the insincerity of the proponents of this legislation as expressed in their report that they desired to deal fairly with the agricultural interests of every section and that cotton of 11 inches in length needed protection. This is in keeping with the record of Republican leadership.

Mr. SMOOT. There is another thing I wish to say to the Senators that the House Members I think did not take into consideration when first establishing the 11-inch staple. The administration of imposing a tax on cotton goods imported into this country under section 17, if the staple was 1½ inches, would be impossible. No one could tell in 90 per cent of the goods that would be shipped into this country whether the staple was  $1\frac{1}{8}$  inches or 1 inch, but where the long-staple cotton of  $1\frac{3}{8}$  inches and above is used anyone familiar with the manufacture of goods made from Egyptian cotton can tell it at once. When you get down to a staple of 13 inches there would not be a yard of cotton goods imported into the country but what would have to be examined to decide whether it contained 11 inches, as provided in section 17 of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. What the bill does under sections 16 and 17 is this: It does not protect long-staple cotton at all, or practically not at all. I doubt if it will keep out 10,000 bales of Egyptian cotton. Under section 17 it would protect all the manufacturers who make Egyptian cotton or American cotton into cloth. It is very cunningly devised, so that the farmer raising long-staple cotton, whether he lives in the Imperial Valley or anywhere else, is not protected at all, or practically not at all, but the manufacturer who puts the long-staple American cotton into the cloth or the manufacturer who puts Egyptian cotton into the cloth will receive the benefit, because section 17 provides that-

Manufactures of which cotton of the kind provided for in para-

And that means Egyptian cotton.

Mr. SMOOT. If it is not of that kind, they do not get any protection. I am quite sure the Senator has not given thought to the question or he would not have uttered that statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have given thought to it, and that is why I make the statement. Section 16 is the joke and section 17 is the joker in this bill. It is only one of many.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, 13 inches in length could not apply to some of the cotton raised in Arizona. apply to any cotton raised in the Delta of the Mississippi, because that cotton is around 11 inches in length, and the facts show that 48 per cent of the cotton of that length that is raised in the United States is raised in the Delta of the Mississippi. For my part I am in favor of no protection of any kind, and I wish the Senate to understand that. I have so voted, and would so vote again.

However, the curious thing to me is that if the purpose of those who drafted the legislation is to apply its provisions generally to the agricultural interests of the country on the principle of protection, when their report says cotton 11 inches should be protected the same as 13 inches, why it is that they write into the bill 13 inches in length? Of course, I have understood the Senator's explanation of it. It is different from the explanation of the House Ways and Means Committee on that proposition.

I stated before I was interrupted that in 1919 there was more reason, if there every could be any reason, for asking the Congress to pass emergency legislation, but certainly no reason now exists because the importation of practically every article and of every product that is carried in the emergency tariff bill of 1920 has fallen off since that time. The facts The facts as stated by the Senator from Utah touching wool show the importations of that item have fallen off; wheat has fallen off; rice has fallen off; live stock has fallen off. Article by article the importations into this country since December last, when they said the emergency existed, have fallen off so that the emergency does not exist to-day, and there is no flood of those products threatening to come into the United States at this time. It was a bugaboo that was held up to the Senate and to the House that those great importations were coming. The facts now show that they did not come. On the contrary, month by month and day by day those importations have fallen

In 1919 the importations of wool into this country amounted to 440,290,279 pounds, while in 1920 the importations of wool amounted to 259,617,000 pounds; in other words, there was a falling off in the year 1920 in the importations of wool of 180,000,000 pounds; yet, during the time that this great flood of importation of wool to the amount of 440,000,000 pounds was coming into this country, the Senators from wool-growing States who are now pleading for this emergency legislation sat quietly by, did not raise their voices, did not appeal for legislation to stop its importation into this country. At that time the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] and other Senators, perhaps, could have rendered some real service to the wool growers of the country; and I suspect they will have much difficulty in explaining to the wool farmers of Utah and other wool-growing States why, when the great importations of wool were coming, they sat serenely by and did not murmur, but now without the slightest cloud of threatened danger upon the horizon they cry loud and constant.

That condition did not apply only to wool, but it applied to some other products. Let us take cattle, for instance. In 1919 the importation of cattle amounted to 263,000 head more than in 1920; that is, we imported 70 per cent more in 1919 than we imported in the year 1920. For the months of September, October, and November, in 1919, we imported 128,000 head more than during the same months in 1920. Why did not some one interested in live stock who thought that a tariff bill offered a panacea, in order to help the producers of stock, try to do something at that time to stop the tide of importations into this country?

Let us take sheep. In 1919, 224,000 head of sheep were imported into this country, while in 1920 only 172,000 head came in, so that 52,000 head of sheep less were imported in 1920 than were imported in 1919; yet, while Senators on the other side of the aisle controlled the Senate, and the Republicans were in control of the House in 1919, they did not attempt to draft any measure in order to try to stop the importation of sheep into this country at that time. So it was down the line. I will not proceed to read the entire list, but Senators may take every article and they will find that 1919 was the time when the great influx of importations was coming, and that there has been a falling off constantly ever since.

Mr. President, when this legislation was first conceived and brought out of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House it was not nearly so bad as it was when it came to the Senate and was referred to the Finance Committee of the Senate. It was not so bad when it was referred to the Finance Committee of the Senate as it was when it passed the Senate. It was not so bad when the President vetoed the measure last Congress as it now is. Every day of its progress it has had a tendency either to increase the rates or include other propositions.

When the bill was first reported out of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives it did not carry any protection to the great Sugar Trust.

That tax on sugar means $125,000,000 additional burden of taxation on the consumers of the country. It is proposed to give that much to the great Sugar Trust of the land and increase to that extent the price of sugar.

When the bill first came out of the Ways and Means Committee of the House there was no provision in it for a tariff or a tax on frozen meat, but it got over here in the Senate-that was shortly after the packer legislation had been consideredand some one who was interested in that legislation wanted to give the packers more protection because they controlled the frozen-meat situation in this country; so they said, "Let us protect them in order that the frozen meats from South America may not come in here and compete with the frozen meats of the five big packers." When that was done, a tariff burden was put upon the consumers of the country, who need ment in order to live, of practically $500,000,000 annually. So going down the line to hides and the Woolen Trust, they are the ones who get the benefit out of this legislation.

Every line in the bill is a challenge to the welfare of the consumers of the country and an imposition on the farmers of a greater burden. Within its folds it invites retaliatory measures from every country to which we sell our goods. Instead of helping it is going to hurt, because what the farmers of this country need, what they want, is a market throughout the world in which to sell their surplus products. That applies to wheat; it applies to cotton; it applies to practically everything except sugar and wool and rice. So what the farmers need is a market for their surplus cotton, their surplus wheat, and their other surplus agricultural products. When some understanding among the nations of the world is brought about and when the wisdom of this administration shall extend some credit to those countries which have always opened up their markets to us, then they will buy of us and the farmers will get better prices for their products.

If you have a real desire to help the farmers, then you should pass some legislation that will take care of additional loans on farm lands. You should pass some legislation touching the railroads, so that the present high and unreasonable freight rates may be reduced. God knows that the farmer now can hardly ship anything, so high are the transportation rates. I received a letter only the other day from the little town in Mississippi in which I was raised, which is located in a great agricultural section and which ordinarily ships more vegetables than does any other center in the whole United States, and from that letter it appears that on many of the products which they are raising the farmer in all probability will lose money because of the high transportation rates. If you really want to relieve the economic situation in this country and to remove the disadvantages under which the people are now laboring, then change the railroad law; reduce freight rates; and go about it in some other way than to pass a piece of legislation such as that embodied in the pending bill. This legislation is a species of deception, fraud, and hypocrisy; it is a betrayal of promises that will rise to plague the Republican Party; it is a repudiation of every pledge made by you in the late campaign; and it will mark the beginning of your end.

EXCESSIVE FREIGHT RATES.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, there is a very general demand throughout the West for the passage of the emergency tariff bill. It is a measure which should have been passed long ago, and I hope that it will be speedily enacted into law.

There is another phase of the agricultural situation which I desire to discuss briefly at this time. Mr. President, I rise to present appeals from a large number of Middle West States for relief from the intolerable railway rates that have brought on business stagnation throughout the country. These appeals come from governors, mayors, State railway commissions, agricultural and live-stock associations, and, in addition, I have several hundred communications from merchants, bankers, farmers, stockmen, and representatives of all lines of industry and trade. All these petitioners for relief warn us that we shall soon have a nation-wide paralysis of business if help does not come quickly. I have never known a more alarming situation, so far as the business of the West is concerned, and that is why I wish to lay stress on the urgency of quick action. High railway rates are not entirely responsible, but they have had a great deal to do with it.

The State board of agriculture of Kansas has asked me to present this appeal to the President and Congress:

Present this appeal to the President and Congress:

Present freight rates are in many instances confiscatory and in practically all cases work a severe hardship on agricultural and livestock producers and shippers, as well as the consuming public.

Producers of grain and live stock are threatened with ruin if present conditions should continue longer. We believe the present deplorable condition of agriculture is due to discrimination against this basic industry in the matter of transportation, credit, tariff, and marketing. Notwithstanding the low price for food products received by the producers of the country, the consumer is forced to pay an increase of several hundred per cent over such prices.

We strongly urge readjustment of railroad rates on a lower basis at the earliest possible moment.

I have been asked to lay before the Senate the following resolutions adopted at a conference of 500 shippers, held recently in Chicago, which included over 500 representatives of the leading agricultural, live-stock, and commercial organizations of the entire country:

Whereas the increased rates of freight are in many instances prohibitory, and in other instances restricted, and in all cases burdensome upon the commerce of the country, thereby preventing, curtailing, and limiting production, and depriving farmers, stock raisers, producers, and manufacturers generally of an opportunity to do business, destroying their profits and paralyzing the industries of the country because the traffic can not fully move; and whereas there can be no revival of business, so that production, trade, and commerce can be restored to a normal condition and a return of prosperity brought about without a material reduction in these rates; and whereas the operating expenses of the railronds are enormously in-creased by the wages, the working conditions, and rules under which they are operating, reflecting a direct burden upon the industries of the country and creating a paralysis of its business in every direc-

the country and creating a paralysis of its business in every direction; and
Whereas we believe that it is imperative that the Government exercise its reasonable constituting powers, to the end of so changing these conditions that the railroad companies shall exercise their right as owners of the property to pay such wages as are just and reasonable, and that will permit them to transport the commerce of the country upon rates which will freely move traffic and yet pay a reasonable wage according to the conditions: Now, therefore, be it *Resolved**, That the transportation act establishing the Labor Board be so amended that the power of the Government may be administered by that tribunal that the wages shall be just and reasonable according to the circumstances and the railroads not compelled to pay more than will permit them under economical management to move the traffic of the country under rates which are just and reasonable, and which will permit farmers, stockholders, and producers from the soil, the sources of primary wealth, to make a competency and earn a living and continue production to supply the vital needs of the people.

That we favor the repeal of section 15a of the act to regulate commerce, known as the rate-making rule, as added in the transportation act of 1920.

That we favor such amendment to the act to regulate commerce that we favor such amendment to the act to regulate commerce of the sources of the sources of the sources of the act to regulate commerce that we favor the repeal of section 15a of the act to regulate commerce of the sources of the merce, known as the rate-making rule, as added in the transportation act of 1920.

That we favor such amendment to the act to regulate commerce as shall specifically define the right, power, and jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission with respect to the making and rendering of any decision or prescribing any rate which shall have the effect of destroying the right, power, or jurisdiction of a State with respect to intrastate rates and transportation. And that where the Interstate Commerce Commission, by reason of the fact that a rate of any State on intrastate traffic constitutes a discrimination or preference as against interstate rates or commerce, that it is the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to make an order against any carrier to cease or desist from collecting such intrastate rates. The Interstate Commerce Commission must, as a condition precedent to such order, specifically define such rate and make a finding of facts with respect thereto, and that no such order shall be made except as to correct an actual, material, and plain discrimination or preference, and further that such State rate is unjust and unreasonable for the service performed. Which decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be subject to be set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the State when such decision is beyond its power or contrary to law and during the pendency of which such court may suspend such order.

I also desire to call attention to a resolution adopted recently by the executive committee of the American National Live Stock Association, urging the repeal of the guaranty provision of the transportation act, and also asking that the powers of the States be unaffected by the arbitrary rule established by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The resolution is as follows:

Commerce Commission. The resolution is as follows:
Whereas the prevailing transportation charges on live stock are unjust, unreasonable, exorbitant, and even prohibitory;
Whereas under the transportation act surrendering the railroads under Federal control, as the Interstate Commerce Commission construes the act, the provision thereof contained in section 15a, as part of the act to regulate commerce, establishing a rule on which to base rates, on the theory of producing a 6 per cent return on the aggregate value of railroad property, in rate-making groups, fixes a standard arbitrarily requiring that States conform their rates thereto, and binds the Interstate Commerce Commission so to adjust the rates as to produce that return for two years; and
Whereas this destroys all the rights and remedies to secure reasonable rates, and the rights of States to make intrastate rates, by subjecting the rate-making power to the limitations of this arbitrary rule: Therefore be it

*Resolved**. That we urge the repeal of said section of the act, so as to

Resolved, That we urge the repeal of said section of the act, so as to leave the powers of the States unaffected by such arbitrary rule, as well as all the rights and remedies to secure just and reasonable rates to the shippers on the railroads which they use, under the other provisions of the act to regulate commerce, and the powers of the commission to make reasonable rates.

Then I have telegrams from the governors of several Western States. For instance, Gov. Shoup, of Colorado, says:

DENVER, COLO., May 4, 1921.

ARTHUR CAPPER, Washington, D. C.:

Washington, D. C.:

Existing freight rates in many instances render it impossible for business to continue at a profit and also prevent development. Immediate and substantial reduction of rates of farm and orchard products, live stock, and building material is a vital necessity to this State. Prewar basis of rates to, from, and between Colorado points were excessive and discriminatory. Continued increases have proportionately increased such burdens to where the sacred right of our industries to protection against exaction of actual prohibited rates is involved. The last general assembly authorized me to appoint a transportation committee, which has been appointed and is beginning a survey of entire situation. Their first petition, covering most vital needs, will be hurried to Interstate Commerce Commission as soon as compiled, as we must have immediate relief for movement of this season's crop. General reduction of class and commodity rates, both intrastate and interstate, will also be asked for. I trust the petitions of this committee will receive prompt consideration and action.

O. H. Shoup, Governor.

I have similar telegrams from Gov. Hyde, of Missouri; from Gov. Allen, of Kansas; from Gov. McKelvie, of Nebraska; from

Gov. Mecham, of New Mexico; and from Gov. Frazier, of North Dakota. I ask unanimous consent to have the telegrams printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the telegrams will be printed in the RECORD.

The telegrams referred to are as follows:

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., May 5, 1921,

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER, Washington, D. C .:

Present freight rates are restricting movement of farm products in this State, particularly so in the matter of corn, cats, and hay, these being per unit the lower-priced products. The freight rates on live stock do not seem to have materially affected the sale thereof. A decrease in commodity freight rates on low-grade, heavy-weight articles, such as coal, lumber, brick, etc., and upon farm products would materially stimulate railroad traffic on these products and aid these industries and the farmer. It would also have the psychological effect of encouraging the farmer.

ARTHUR M. Hyde. Governor.

ARTHUR M. HYDE, Governor,

TOPEKA, KANS., May 4, 1921.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER, Washington, D. C.:

Washington, B. C.:

Beyond all question present level of transportation rates are so high as to seriously embarrass movement of heavy commodities, including grain and live stock. In the general economic structure producing, selling, and transportation costs must have their proper relation. Through this period these costs are seeking some normal relation. Prices of live stock and agricultural products have returned to practically prewar prices, while transportation charges are from 60 to 100 per cent of that basis. I regard it as highly essential that present heavy burden of transportation charges shall be lessened at the carliest possible time.

HENRY J. ALLEN. Governor.

LINCOLN, NEBR.,

There can be no doubt that the existing schedule of freight rates is having a very unfavorable influence upon business generally in this State and particularly upon agriculture. I think this fact will be admitted by the railroads themselves, and I believe it is quite a general impression that there must be some readjustment of railroad rates before there can be a very rapid return to normal conditions in business.

S. R. McKelvie, Governor.

SANTA FE., N. MEX., May 4.

Existing freight rates interfering seriously with business generally in New Mexico, principally affecting agriculture, live stock, and mining industries.

STATE CORPORATION COMMISSION, For Gov. MECHAM.

BISMARCK, N. DAK., April 29, 1921.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER, Washington, D. C.:

Present schedule of freight rates decidedly detrimental to business, including agriculture and live-stock industries. Intrastate rates have not been raised on account of action brought by State, which is now pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission. North Dakota freight rates have always been discriminatory, favoring the Twin Cities. Bulk of our product is shipped out of State, and mile-ton rates on our lignite coal and other products of neighboring States should not be more than rate on similar products in other States.

LYNN J. FRAZIER, Governor.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the most pressing question in the United States at this moment, and the greatest obstacle in the way of a return to normal conditions and the restoration of business, is the high cost of transportation.

The semimystery of the recent arrival at our seaports of shiploads of foreign products, products of which this country has an exportable surplus of its own, becomes clearer when we learn that a bushel of grain can be shipped to New York from South America for 12 cents, but that it costs 38 cents to ship a bushel of wheat to that city from Minneapolis by rail.

When cottonseed cake, used in feeding cattle, can be shipped cheaper from Texas to Holland than from Texas to Kansas, something is wrong with the transportation charges.

A farmer in one of the great hay-producing regions of Kansas writes me:

We have hundreds and hundreds of tons of hay here ready to ship, but because of the low price and high freight rates we can not get expenses out of it and are compelled to let it rot on the ground.

A car of grain shipped from Texas Panhandle to market at an expense of $525 brought the producer $475. Out of that he had to pay more than $100 for thrashing the grain and, of course, sold his produce at a loss

Texas and Florida truck farmers have shipped produce to the New York market and received nothing in return but a bill for the balance due on freight and commission charges, so reports the New York market commissioner.

The freight and commission charges on a car of lettuce for which a truck farmer received $339 cost him $491.

It costs as much to ship California oranges as it does to grow

Western live-stock men tell the Interstate Commerce Commission the existing rates will ruin them if continued. Cattle freights from Des Moines to Chicago have increased from 22 cents a hundred in 1914 to 37 cents in 1921. Of this increase of 15 cents, labor has secured approximately 11 cents.

The rate on wheat from Chicago to New York was 7.80 cents in 1918; to-day it is 19.8 cents. The rate on corn from Kansas City to Chicago has doubled in the last four years. Similar increases are found all over the country.

Michigan's iron mines report to the commission that they can no longer afford to pay the new rates on ore, and must close the mines if they do not get relief.

Mr. President, the Interstate Commerce Commission is buried under petitions for lower freight rates from big business concerns. But the man who is hit harder than anybody is the farmer. He is the Nation's greatest freight payer. He pays freight both ways. He gets it coming and going. There is altogether too big a gap between what the farmer gets for his crops and what he has to pay for things.

With corn selling around 25 to 30 cents a bushel in farm communities, farmers are obliged to pay from 5 to 10 cents a bushel for shucking, 5 cents for shelling, and the increased freight rates to market. What they have left will not buy a sack of table salt.

A Nimore, Minn., potato raiser writes me that to ship 100 pounds of potatoes to Chicago costs him 60 cents. What he has over to pay for his labor and investment in raising and digging and hauling 100 pounds of potatoes is just 35 cents.

Texas rice growers can ship rice across the ocean to Liverpool and from Liverpool back to New York cheaper than they can ship it by rail direct from Beaumont, Tex., to New York.

Cotton can be shipped from Galveston to Bremen, a distance of 3,000 miles, for 35 cents a hundred pounds. But to ship by rail a bale of cotton from the interior of Texas a distance of 300 miles cost 95 cents a hundred—about three times as much.

Spinach, cabbage, and onions rot in the fields of Texas; hay and corn are wasting in Kansas; fruits are stacked in California; and hides are going to waste in all parts of the country because these products can not be shipped over American railroads at profit.

Freight rates are blamed by both producer and consumer. But in most cases there is also a toll taker somewhere along the line who is not getting the blame that is coming to him, although taking more than his share of the benefits.

although taking more than his share of the benefits.

E. W. Cole, Texas director of markets, writes me that 3.000 cars of early vegetables have been lost up to this time because it did not pay to ship them.

To ship shelled corn from Hydro, Okla., to Wichita Falls, Tex., about 125 miles, costs 27 cents a bushel, or almost as much as the corn will bring at destination.

Raisers of oats in Kansas, Colorado, and New Mexico can not get enough money by shipping the crop to cover the cost of handling from farm to railway station.

"Virtually all our perishable products will rot in the fields," writes J. A. Whitehurts, president of the Oklahoma State Board of Agriculture.

Because of extortionate freight charges the stock-raising industry in North Dakota is slowly being choked to death, reports V. E. Smart, traffic expert of North Dakota's board of railroad commissioners.

T. W. Tomlinson, secretary of the American National Live Stock Association, writes:

Idaho, which ordinarily ships thousands of cars, has scarcely been able to ship a car of alfalfa this season.

Cattlemen of New Mexico and Texas, accustomed at this time of year to ship their herds to Kansas to fatten on grass, this year have no money to pay the freight bill and can not borrow it from their banks.

Live-stock men east of the Missouri River usually buy much alfalfa hay in Colorado and Kansas to feed their stock. This year there was no such market. Good alfalfa hay at $6 to $8 a ton on board cars in Colorado costs from $15 to $18 a ton to ship to Illinois, making the hay cost delivered $21 to $26 a ton. For similar reasons all alfalfa-meal mills in the West have closed down.

Illinois farmers who used more than 40,000 tons of raw rock phosphate last year for fertilizer this year virtually are doing without because of prohibitive freight charges. The same situation exists in Ohio where ground limestone is used for fertilizer.

Mr. President, when the present rail rates were adopted our farmers were receiving $2 a bushel or better for wheat and $1.60 a bushel for corn. With corn now selling at country shipping stations at 30 cents, the 25-cent shipping rate to the central market takes more than half of the corn crop's below-cost value.

It costs more to ship fruit from the Pacific coast to the Middle West, or produce from the Middle West to the East, than it does to bring these products here from foreign countries, and the high value of the American dollar and the excessive exchange rate do the rest.

While Italy sells her lemon crop here, our lemons rot because they do not bring enough to pay freight rates. We are getting wheat from Canada and Argentina, butter from Denmark, eggs and poultry from starving China, potatoes from Norway, mutton from New Zealand, corn and beef from South America, and wool from everywhere.

At the same time sheep from our ranges, fruit from Florida and California, vegetables from Texas and the South, hay and oats and other products from the West, have been sold in the big market for less than enough to pay the freight, consequently enormous quantities of these home-grown products are now being allowed to rot because it does not pay to ship them. Barely 25 per cent of the Texas cabbage crop will be marketed. Freight charges on a car of cabbage from Harlingen, Tex., to a commission merchant at Hastings, Nebr., were $425. The growers received less than $75 for their labor.

Mr. President, not only do we lave this situation in regard

Mr. President, not only do we lave this situation in regard to agriculture, we have a Nation-wide stagnation of general business, for commerce between the States is hit almost as hard by high rates of transit as is agriculture. We have, in fact, an embargo on ourselves and must find a speedy means of removing it if we are going to get business off its dead center and save the railroads from receiverships and bankruptcy.

When railroads get more for hauling farm products than the producers are paid for producing them it is evident that freight rates are relatively too high. And that is chiefly what is the matter with the railway situation at the present time.

Rates higher than the traffic will bear have made a difference of a million freight cars in the amount of shipping this country is doing. Six months ago there was a deficiency of half a million freight cars. At the close of April this year there was a half million surplus of cars. This means that a half million freight cars now stand idle on the sidetracks of American railroads. Need there be a more convincing argument that lower rates must precede a business recovery?

Mr. President, it is true of the railroad business, as it is of any other business, that it is entitled to a fair return. The roads can not be expected to give good service and maintain equipment unless they can earn a fair return. No business can be operated successfully or efficiently without such a return.

I favored returning the railroads to private management and competition, because under Government operation the roads were milking the Treasury of millions of dollars to pay dividends, under an agreement which put no premium on efficiency and service and no penalty on waste and extravagance.

We all know the result.

The roads now have their fate in their own hands. Unless they can put traffic charges on a live-and-let-live basis, and that very soon, a return to Government operation or ownership will be inevitable. And neither the people nor the shippers wish this to happen any more than do the railroad managers. Certainly neither the country nor the Government should take up any new burdens at this time, nor embark on any epochal experiments, except under compulsion.

The people have paid the railroads nearly $1,000,000,000 within the last few years by way of a Government guaranty. On top of that they have paid higher rail rates, amounting to from 50 to 83 per cent. These rates almost absorb the farmers' grain, also a large percentage of his live stock; they have absorbed the decrease in the price of lumber; they have helped in many ways to demoralize the business of the country and to prevent its recuperation. And with all this the roads now are stalled on the upgrade; they are not making expenses, not getting any new business.

The chief reason is that, with other values coming down and with farm prices at bedrock, the roads are charging more than the traffic will bear. This means that as long as present rates are maintained the roads will not be able to do enough business to maintain themselves.

. How is this policy going to get them or anybody else anywhere?

A few weeks ago the greatest railroad system in the United States, the Pennsylvania, was losing one-fourth million dollars a day in reduced traffic. This is the kind of business that high rail rates are creating for the railroads. It is expensive business for everybody.

Mr. President, nothing is going to be gained by maintaining rall rates at a point which makes the railways too expensive for the people to use.

The country now is suffering from what is merely another form of car shortage, for although the roads still are inadequately supplied with rolling stock for normal times, rates are so prohibitive that we can not use the cars we have. Therefore while railroads and the people suffer, commerce and business stagnate and the roads face bankruptcy, all because of this crushing embargo placed on the Nation by its transporting system.

The way out is to encourage the people to use the railroads by making it possible for them to ship goods and travel; to give business a chance to create more business. There is no profit in rusting rails for anybody.

Meanwhile the situation appears to be growing worse instead of better, as might be expected when rates are in many cases so high as to be prohibitive. The big slump is due in part no doubt to the general and inevitable afterwar depression. But a time when business men find ligh freight rates barring the way to a return of normal conditions is no time for the roads to insist on prohibitive rates.

Our attitude toward the railronds should probably be more sympathetic than condemnatory. Most of those misguided men who in the past exploited the railronds and used them to exploit the people have gone to their final reckoning. The present situation demands helpful teamwork. The roads are too much a vital part of our daily life to make it pay to belabor, injure, or cripple them in any way. Nor can the present rates be defended or be allowed to stand. They are suicidal, as injurious to the roads as to the people.

The railroads will find it profitable to do their share to help bring about a revival of business instead of being the greatest obstacle in the way of such a revival. They may for a time have to take losses, along with farmers, other industries, and business interests, but I am confident it will be nothing like what is certainly ahead of them if the better policy of lower rates is not soon adopted. There can be no defense for the highest rail rates in history at a time when every rail-carried commodity is seeking the prewar price level. Freight charges which exceed the value of the product carried can not be defended nor endured.

This being the most vital and pressing of the questions before the country, it must have the best and first thought of Congress and the administration. If Congress finds the country's transporting system is not being handled on an efficient basis, as is charged, and that certain economies or methods are necessary, the Interstate Commerce Commission must be directed to put such a policy into operation. In the meantime I believe the Interstate Commerce Commission should immediately use its powers to initiate and modify rates and make such readjustments as will restore the movement of traffic.

Mr. President, I have introduced a bill calling for the repeal of the section of the transportation act directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to make rates which will assure a return of 6 per cent to the carriers. I have also included in this bill a provision setting aside the authority of the commission to regulate intrustate rates. I am undertaking to repeal the guarantee clause because the commission bases its claim of power to increase State rates largely upon the command which is contained in this section that it so adjust rates as to yield the percentage specified, and it is upon this section that the decision of the lower Federal courts sustaining the orders of the commission appear to be principally based. This bill has the hearty support of the State railway commission of every State that has come to my attention, and 12 legislatures have appealed to Congress for this legislation.

Mr. President, I repeat that the railroad situation is so acute that immediate action is imperative to restore normal conditions to agriculture.

We are now under compulsion to go to the bottom of the railroad problem. We must get the facts, work out a constructive program at once that will restore the country and the roads to their normal relationship and put an end to the recurrence of the railroad problem. There is no other way.

MOTHERS' DAY.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, in the spring of 1914, while a Member of the House, I introduced a joint resolution designating the second Sunday in May as Mothers' Day. The House passed that resolution, and I requested my good friend the able and distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. Sheppano] to take charge of the measure in the Senate. He did so, and the Senate passed it. President Wilson issued a proclamation, under the authority given by the resolution, requesting all the officials of the Government to display the flag on all public buildings on the second Sunday in May. He sent a message to our foreign possessions to have the flag displayed there in honor of the mothers of America.

The first Mothers' Day officially observed I stood in front of the White House at the noon hour. The fountain in front, in perpetual play, looked like a sunburst of diamonds. Back of it, in solemn grandeur, stood the White House. Above it, in all the pride of civic glory, waved the flag of the Republic. I said, "That dear old flag has been unfurled many a time above the brave armies of America, but never have its sacred folds floated above a braver army than that of the heroic mothers of America."

The poet spoke truly when he said:

The greatest buttle that ever was fought—Shall I tell you where and when?
On the map of the world you will find it not;
It was fought by the mothers of men.

On this day President Harding has issued a proclamation for the observance of Mothers' Day, which is to-morrow. He will call upon Government officials and men and women everywhere to display the flag in honor of the mothers of America.

In honoring the mothers of America we honor ourselves. We honor our Government.

Man inherits the nobler, gentler qualities of being from his mother. They come from the treasure house of feminine charm and sweetness. They are filtered through the finer sensibilities of the female soul. The hearthstone, as Henry Grady said, is the true altar of liberty, and the strength of the Republic is lodged in the homes of the people. Mr. President, another peet beautifully describes the feeling of us all, when he said:

The world at times has beat me back In battles I have fought; Not always has the god Success Touched tasks in which I wrought;

Full oft has fortune dealt a blow Instead of bent to bless, And heartache followed close upon The heels of happiness;

And often when a solemn wee Of grief my heart intoned, And often when my spirit writhed And all my nature groated,

There stole refrain that softened pain, Not phrased by mortal storgue, But born of memories old and sweet— The songs my mother sung

When she took me in her arms And gently stroked my hair, And bere me with her down to sleep In that old bye-bye chair.

One of the most fascinating scenes in all the world is a mother in the home circle with a baby in her arms. Mr. President, the most beaufiful thing this side of Heaven is the mother's love for her child. It is the only love amongst mortals which will suffer all things and endure all things. Through poverty and good fortune, through sickness and health, through life to death, it is the same beautiful, unselfish, unchangeable mother love; and—

He who harking back to youth
Goes forth and nobly dies
To color life to match the light
That shines from mother's eyes.
He wil. not pride his faltering feet
Upon the race they've made,
But will search his heart, and bless the part
That mother love has played.

He'll walk adown the ways of life, And in his daily prayer Thank God that all his best was born In that old bye'bye chair.

All honor to the mothers of America. On to-morrow let those of us whose mothers have preceded us to the better land wear the white flower, and let those whose mothers still linger to bless with their benedictions and love the households of America wear the red flower, and let the flag of our country fly from every Government building and rooftree in the country in honor of the mothers of America.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following

Our Father, we thank Thee for the sunlight of the morning. Grant that our hearts may be filled with light and life and joy. and enter upon the duties awaiting us with the consciousness of Thy smile upon us, and that we want to walk along the pathway of duty with Thy direction and under Thy guidance. TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY, a Senator from the State of Michigan, appeared in his seat to-day.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on request of Mr. Curtis and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NEW. I desire to present and have printed in the RECORD a copy of a concurrent resolution adopted by the Indiana Legislature, on behalf of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Tidewater Association, in approval of a plan to make the St. Lawrence River navigable for ocean-going vessels.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce,

as follows:

concurrent resolution approving the action of the governor in advancing the undertaking for a deep waterway from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic Ocean.

Whereas it is proposed to make such improvements in the St. Lawrence River as to make the Great Lakes accessible to ocean-going commerce, and as this improvement will in effect bring the State of Indiana hundreds of miles nearer the world's markets, and as there are within the State great resources that lie wholly undeveloped while the production of all things is diminished or retarded by distance from markets, and because our producers and the consuming public have alike suffered enormous losses in the last three years by transportation shortage and failure; and because by reason of these conditions the transportation situation constitutes an emergency need, and as a number of States have joined in the Great Lakes-St. Lewrence Tidewater Association, having as its object the early undertaking and completion of this improvement: Therefore be it completion of this improvement: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring).

That the State of Indiana is properly associated in the above-named organization with its neighboring Commonwealths in pressing to advance this undertaking, and that the action of the governor in so declaring is hereby approved and confirmed by the participation of this State, by the governor and those who represent him in the council of these States, is approved.

SEC. 2. That the representatives of this State in Congress of the United States be requested to facilitate and expedite in every way possible the prosecution of this undertaking for the economic freedom of a land-locked continent.

NOTE.—The above resolution was passed in Indiana Senate and House March 1, 1921.

The Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Tidewater Association desire it entered on the Senate's record in Washington.

Yours, truly,

C. H. Comstock, Secretary.

C. H. COMSTOCK, Secretary.

MARIVELES QUARRY, PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 23) authorizing the Secretary of War to investigate the claims of private parties to the Mariveles quarry within the limits of a United States military reservation in the Philippine Islands, and to permit the working thereof by the persons entitled thereto, provided military necessities permit, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to make or cause to be made such inquiry and investigation into any equitable claims of such private parties in and to the stone quarries at Mariveles, Province of Bataan, in the Philippine Islands, within the limits of the United States military reservation as set aside by the President of the United States in Executive order of June 7, 1904, as may have filed claims with the War Department, or in other offices under its jurisdiction, and to permit the resumption of private operations therein by license or otherwise and to the extent that he may consider such claims of such parties entitle them to, with due regard to military necessities: Provided, however, That nothing herein authorized shall be deemed to remove the site of said quarry from the jurisdiction and control of the military authorities of the United States under and by virtue of the reservation made by the President as aforesaid.

Mr. HONES of Washington, Mr. President I scaled activative.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I could not catch from the reading of the joint resolution what authority is proposed to be given to the Secretary of War to render a judgment or a decision. If any member of the Military Affairs Committee can give me any information in reference to that matter, I should like to have it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it appears that when the United States Government took possession of the Philippine Islands it also took possession of the lands upon which certain quarries were being operated. Those quarries have been regarded by the military authorities as necessary for military

They were prior to American occupation of the islands used as the principal source of building material for the city of Manila. It now, however, appears that similar material has been discovered in abundant quantities, and that there is no reason why the quarries should not be operated for commercial purposes and the output used in the construction of buildings in the city of Manila. For that reason the Secretary of War is authorized by the joint resolution to permit the former owners of the quarries to resume their operation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The title of the joint resolution authorizes the Secretary of War to investigate the claims of private parties. What I wanted to learn was whether it authorized him to reach a conclusion, to pass on those claims, to determine the rights of the owners, and so forth; and if so, how far his action would bind the Government.

Mr. ROBINSON. The joint resolution is brief, and, as suggested by the Senator from Washington, its title is not very clear as to the authority which is proposed to be conferred on the Secretary of War. Under the joint resolution the Secretary of War is-empowered to make or cause to be made such inquiry and investigation into any equitable claims of such private parties in and to the stone quarries at Mariveles, Province of Bataan, in the Philippine Islands, within the limits of the United States military reservation as set aside by the President of the United States military reservation as set aside by the President of the United States in Executive order of June 7, 1904, as may have filed claims with the War Department, or in other offices under its jurisdiction, and to permit the resumption of private operations therein by license or otherwise and to the extent that he may consider such claims of such parties entitle them to, with due regard to military necessities: Provided, however, That nothing herein authorized shall be deemed to remove the site of said quarry from the jurisdiction and control of the military authorities of the United States under and by virtue of the reservation made by the President as aforesaid.

The sole purpose and effect of the joint resolution are to permit the parties who privately owned and operated the quarries prior to the military occupation of the islands by the United States to resume the possession of their property and their operation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I understand, the Secretary of War is to examine the equitable claims of these private parties?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then, what can be do after he makes the examination? What report is he to make?

Mr. ROBINSON. The joint resolution gives him the power to permit the owners, if he finds their claims are sustained, to resume the operation of their quarries. That is the purpose of the joint resolution.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is that the sole purpose of the joint resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. I think the joint resolution once before passed the Senate. It was then presented to the committee by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who was chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs at the time the United States Government took possession of the islands, and the statement made by the Senator from Wyoming to the Committee on Military Affairs made a very clear case that the joint resolution ought to pass.

In 1898, or about that time, owners were operating their narries. They then passed into the control of the United quarries. States, and since that time the former owners have not been permitted to operate the quarries, the Government taking the position that the product of those quarries would be necessary for military purposes. Since that time, however, and compara-tively recently, as I stated a moment ago, an abundance of building material has been found, and there is now no reason known to the Committee on Military Affairs, and no reason that suggests itself to me at this time, why the passage of this joint resolution would not be an act of justice to the parties who formerly claimed the property and operated it.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUITS IN FORMA PAUPERIS.

The bill (S. 426) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 1, chapter 209, of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 27, entitled 'An act providing when plaintiff may sue as a poor person and when counsel shall be assigned by the court,' and to provide for the prosecution of writs of error and appeals in forma pauperis, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stats., p. 866) was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to amend section 1, chapter 200, of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 27, entitled 'An act providing when plaintiff may sue as a poor person and when counsel shall be assigned by the court,' and to provide for the prosecution of writs of error and appeals in forma pauperis, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stats., p. 866), be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That any citizen of the United States entitled to commence any suit or action, civil or criminal, in any court of the United States may, upon the order of the court, commence and prosecute or defend to conclusion any suit or action, or a writ of error or an appeal to the circuit court of appeals, or to the Supreme Court in such suit or action, including all appellate proceedings, unless the trial court shall certify in writing that in the opinion of the court such appeal or writ of error is not taken in good faith, without being required to prepay fees or costs or for the printing of the record in the appellate court or give security therefor, before or after bringing suit or action, or upon suing out a writ of error or appealing, upon filing in said court a statement under oath in writing that because of his poverty he is unable to pay the costs of said suit or action or of such writ of error or appeal, or to give security for the same, and that he believes that he is entitled to the redress he seeks in such suit or action or writ of error or appeal, and setting forth briefly the nature of his alleged cause of action or appeal: Provided, That in any criminal case the court may, upon the filing in said court of the affidavit hereinbefore mentioned, direct that the expense of printing the record on appeal or writ of error be paid by the United States, and the same shall be paid when authorized by the Attorney General."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to ask

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] what particular change the bill makes in the present statute. There is nothing in the reading of the bill to indicate the change which has been made.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, under the existing statute where a man has a meritorious case but is poor and without means the court may authorize him to sue in forma pauperis, as it is called in the old law Latin; that is, he may sue and the court will bear the expense. The rule of the court requires that when a case is appealed to the Supreme Court the record shall be printed, and the only change in existing law is the proviso at the end of the bill which authorizes the court to pay the expense of printing the record. That is the only change.

Mr. KENYON. The bill applies only to criminal cases?

Mr. NELSON. It only applies to criminal cases. I may add that the bill is recommended by the Department of Justice, and I think a similar bill was passed at the last session of

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLOSING OF UPPER WATER STREET, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 813) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close upper Water Street between Twentyfirst and Twenty-second Streets NW., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close upper Water Street between Twenty-first and Twenty-second Streets NW., lying between Potomac Park and square 88, provided that the consent in writing of the owners of all private property in square 88 is first had and obtained; and upon the closing of the street between tween the limits named the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to transfer the land contained in the bed of the street to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, as a part of the park system of the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 384) to require judges appointed under authority of the United States to devote their entire time to the duties of a judge was announced as next in order.

Mr. KENYON. Let that bill go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. Under objection, it will go over.

STEVENS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY.

The bill (S. 52) for the relief of the Stevens Institute of Technology, of Hoboken, N. J., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the trustees of the Stevens Institute of Technology, of Hoboken, N. J., $45,750, being the sum paid to the United States January 28, 1870, as a collateral inheritance tax upon the bequest which provided for the establishment and endowment of the institute.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time,

REIMBURSEMENT OF MASSACHUSETTS FOR CIVIL-WAR EXPENDITURES.

The bill (S. 546) making an appropriation to pay the State of Massachusetts for expenses incurred and paid, at the request of the President, in protecting the harbors and fortifying the coast during the Civil War, in accordance with the findings of the Court of Claims and Senate Report No. 764, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the governor of the State of Massachusetts, or his duly authorized agent, $233,885.82, being the costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred by such State for interest and premium paid for coin in payment of such interest on bonds issued for money borrowed and expended at the request of the President of the United States during the Civil War in protecting the harbors and fortifying the coast, the accounting officers of the Treasury having found that the expenditures were so incurred and paid by the State; and which the Court of Claims in its report to Congress under the act approved July 16, 1916, as set forth in Document No. 369, House of Representatives, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, also found had been so incurred and paid.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM R. LANCASTER.

The bill (S. 472) for the relief of William B. Lancaster was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William B. Lancaster, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, in full compensation for injuries received while employed by the Reclamation Service at the west portal, Strawberry Tunnel, Strawberry Valley project, Utah.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] give us an explanation of this bill? I think it is one that he introduced.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall be glad to do so, although the chairman of the committee is here.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I reported that bill, and I shall be glad to make a statement about it.

Lancaster was working as a teamster at a rock quarry operated by the Government during the war. Through no fault of Lancaster, a large amount of refuse from the plant, including earth, became deposited on the roof of the building. Lancaster was working under the roof as a teamster the roof was crushed in and Lancaster was very seriously injured. His injuries are pitiable. His suffering has been almost unlimited. He will never recover. A photograph of Lancaster as he appeared some years ago, when in the Army of the United States, was presented to the committee, with photographs of him as he appears now. A statement by Lancaster is also printed in the record.

There has never come under my observation a more pathetic case than that now under consideration. Lancaster was comcase than that now under consideration. Lancaster was compelled to remain in the hospital for a very long period. The Government paid him what was the equivalent of a year's salary, but that was entirely consumed in the payment of his hospital expenses, so that as the result of the general compensation law now in force he has had a part of his expenses paid while he was suffering in the hospital, but has had absolutely nothing for compensation. The committee was unanimously of the opinion that this bill ought to pass.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say also to the Senator from Iowa that after the year's salary was paid for Mr. Lancaster's care in the hospital he then had to find friends to give him money to continue his hospital treatment. I never in my life saw a human being alive and moving about in such condition as Mr. Lancaster is to-day. He is in a horrible condition. He is suffering to-day and will suffer all his life; and this $5,000 is merely to try to pay the expenses he has incurred up to the present time, with perhaps a little to help him on, because he can not live very much longer.

Mr. KENYON. I was not objecting to the bill; I merely wanted to know about it. It is evidently a meritorious measure

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGNES INGELS, DECEASED.

The bill (S. 1300) for the relief of the heirs of Agnes Ingels, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$5,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs of Agnes Ingels, deceased, late of Lexington, Ky., the sum of $5,000 for injuries occasioned to the said Agnes Ingels while a visitor at Hot Springs, Ark., by the negligent operation of United States Government motor truck No. 25967 while said truck was in the care and custody of and being driven by an enlisted man of the United States Army under the orders of his superior officer, and while the use of such truck was dangerous because of its defective condition, such condition being known to the officer responsible for the maintenance of said truck in operation, the injuries occasioned as aforesaid resulting in the death of said Agnes Ingels,

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF THE JUDICIAL CODE.

The bill (S. 214) to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

The reading clerk read the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, perhaps I should explain this bill. It passed the Senate at the last session. Most of what has been read is the law now. It changes it only in this respect:

As the law is now, if a man has a claim of over $10,000 against the Government, if he lives in Iowa, or no matter where he lives, he has to come to Washington and employ a Washington lawyer. He has to go before a court that has no jury. This bill extends the jurisdiction so that the courts may have jurisdiction of claims amounting to as much as $50,000. The bill says $100,000, but the committee has prepared an amendment making it $50,000, so that if a man outside of Washington has a claim against the Government he has a right to sue in his own bailiwick and have a jury of his own peers.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, let that bill go over. There is no report filed on it, and I should like to run through it and examine it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an objection, and the bill will be passed over.

JAMES DUFFY.

The bill (8, 723) for the relief of James Duffy was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows and dependent relatives, James Duffy, late of Company A, Twenty-fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of the above organization on the 6th day of October, 1862: Provided, That no pay, pension, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

HENRY J. DAVIS.

The bill (S. 724) for the relief of Henry J. Davis was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ORION MATHEWS.

The bill (S. 725) for the relief of Orion Mathews was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PAYMENTS FROM LUMP-SUM APPROPRIATIONS.

The bill (S. 581) to repeal the act prohibiting increased pay under lump-sum appropriations to employees transferred within one year was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I want to ask my friend from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to let that bill and the next one go over until he can get further along in the framing of his classification bill. They are matters that we will consider and act upon, but I do not think we should make the repeal at this time; so I object to the consideration of the bills.

Mr. STERLING. That is agreeable to me.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Senate bill 581 and Senate bill 582 will be passed over.

The bill (S. 158) for the relief of certain estates was announced as next in order.

The reading clerk read the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not see the chairman of the committee in the Chamber. I therefore ask that this bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

REUBEN R. HUNTER.

The bill (S. 906) for the relief of Reuben R. Hunter was announced as next in order.

The reading clerk read the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have a direct appropriation made for this purpose rather than have the bill likely when the next unit is opened the returned soldiers will pass as reported. It seems to me that in a case of this kind we ought to make a direct appropriation, and then we will know what amount will be paid.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Ir. President, the bill which was introduced in the last Congress did provide for a lump appropriation; but the Committee on Claims considered the whole subject, and at the suggestion of that committee it was changed to a monthly allowance instead of a lump sum. should have been quite willing to have a lump sum provided for in the bill, but the Committee on Claims was apparently unanimous in the belief that this man ought to be put in the same position as an injured Federal employed

The Senator from Utah doubtless will recall that in this case Mr. Hunter as a private citizen, not in the employ of the Government, participated in putting out a forest fire, and while so doing lost both his eyes.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I remember the case very well, and we have just passed a bill for a man named Lancaster whom we gave $5,000. He certainly is in a horrible condition. like to prepare an amendment to this bill giving Mr. Hunter a direct appropriation; and for that reason, and that only, I shall ask that the bill go over for the day. I have not the amendment prepared or I would offer it at this time.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The chairman of the Committee on Claims is present, and I am sure the committee has fully considered that question. I am only fearful that if we let the matter be changed and make a lump-sum appropriation for this man's benefit a delay will result, and we may not be able to get the bill through the other House.

Mr. SMOOT. I assure the Senator that I shall have the amendment in next Monday, when the calendar comes up again.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. At any rate, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Claims a question as to the general policy of that committee regarding such relief measures

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think any definite plan has been agreed upon, for we have just passed two bills of a similar character here and they were lump-sum bills.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I observed that that had been done, and I was just wondering whether there had been any change in the policy of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may go over to-day, and I assure the Senator that I will have the amendment ready by next Monday.

PREFERENCE RIGHTS TO EX-SERVICE MEN.

The bill (S. 594) for the relief of certain ex-service men whose rights to make entries on the North Platte irrigation project, Nebraska-Wyoming, were defeated by intervening claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, cie., That the ex-service men qualified to make entry under the homestead laws, who were successful at the drawing held March 5, 1920, for farm units on the North Platte irrigation project, Fort Laramie unit, Nebraska-Wyoming, and to whom approved water-rental applications were duly issued, but who were prevented from making homestead entries for the lands covered by such applications because of the reinstatement of certain conflicting homestead entries, shall each have a preferred right of entry under the homestead laws at the next opening of lands under said project, for not less than 30 days before the date set for the opening of such lands to other entries: Provided, That this act shall not be considered as entiting any person to make another homestead entry who shall have received the benefits of the homestead laws since being prevented, as aforesaid, from exercising the right acquired at the said drawing on March 5, 1920.

Mr. PITTIMAN. Mr. President I would like to ask the Sen-

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator having the bill in charge how many men this applies to?
Mr. WARREN. To two men.

Mr. PITTMAN. If I recollect correctly, I opposed the bill in the committee

Mr. WARREN. I think there were originally 13 or 14 men asking for relief, and the department was able to arrange exchange and settlement with all but two. Those men were of the World War service and were entitled to preference, with others, and exercised their rights. They got their certificates and paid their money. In the meantime the Douglas, Wyo., land office raked up some later report showing that they had allowed this same property to go to other parties. So they are without the use of their homestead rights, and their money is gone. This bill simply provides that they can go to the next reclamation unit which is opened and get what they lost in this one in way of their homestead rights.

Mr. PITTMAN. I understand that the bill not only provides that they can go to the next unit but it provides that they shall have a preference right in the next unit.

Mr. WARREN. They had 60 days in which to file in the drawing on this unit we are speaking of—the Nebraska-Wyoming unit. This proposed bill cuts them down to 30 days. Quite do as they did before—that is, exercise their preference rights in order that they may get desirable homesteads. Of course, they could not exercise their homestead rights while they were abroad.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill merely places the two men in the same position they were in before. They had a preference right in the drawing in this unit.

Mr. WARREN. They are out $500 apiece. The Government has their money and they have nothing to show for it.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is perfectly fair that these men should have something. The question is as to whether it is fair as against another group of men who will draw on an entirely

Mr. WARREN. But these two men did have their rights, and they pursued the course indicated for them. The fault is entirely with the Government. The Government has taken their money and their settlement rights. The bill gives them 30 days in which to file in a new drawing.

Mr. PITTMAN. How many applications were made at that drawing?

Mr. WARREN. I do not remember, but some thousands

Mr. SMOOT. There were some 12 soldiers who had the preference right. Ten were taken care of, and the report of the Secretary of the Interior gives exactly the reasons why these two men were not. It was through no fault of their own.

two men were not. It was through no fault of their own.

Mr. PITTMAN. I understand it was because the land they drew was not open to withdrawal.

Mr. WARREN. The department itself is asking for this relief. The bill was drawn in the Department of the Interior.

Mr. PITTMAN. As I understand it, there were over a thousand men seeking locations on those three units. It happened that of those who could get in on this project two drew blanks; in other words, they drew land which was not open to drawing. But they are in exactly the same position as about a thousand others.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is entirely mistaken. Those who could not draw neither relinquished their homestead rights nor gave up their money. These two men relinquished their rights, and they paid their money for the water. We are simply giving back to them what makes them as nearly whole as possible because their loss was on account of a mistake of the Government itself through its agents.

Mr. PITTMAN. As I remember, in the committee all I insisted on, in which I was overruled, was that these men should be put in exactly the same position they were in before the drawing, and in exactly the same position a thousand other ex-soldiers were in who did not get in on that project, and that we should not give them a preference right over that thousand.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator certainly would not expect the Government to keep their money and give them no further right to a homestead.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I want them to have their homestead rights restored, or I want their money given back to them; but I want them to have equal rights in the drawing with the next thousand who were excluded from this drawing. But I do not intend to object to the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

PREFERENCE TO DISCHARGED SERVICE MEN.

The bill (S. 809) to give preference right of employment on construction work on United States reclamation projects, and preference right of entry on the public lands, to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That men and women who served in the Army or Navy of the United States in the war with Germany and have been honorably separated or discharged therefrom or placed in the Regular Army or Naval Reserve shall have preference in employment upon projects constructed by the United States Reclamation Service: Provided, That they are found to possess the capacity necessary for the proper discharge of such duties: Provided further. That the rights and benefits conferred by this act shall not extend to any person who having been drafted for service under the provisions of the selective service act shall have refused to render such service or to wear the uniform of such service of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask if the Senater from Utah is in charge of this bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I am not in charge of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I see the bill proposes to give preference to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines. The Senator from Utah is on the Finance Committee, which has had before it for eight or nine months a bill which passed the House of Representatives two sessions of Congress ago proposing to compensate soldiers, known as the adjusted compensation bill, or bonus bill. What is the status of that bill?

Mr. SMOOT. The bonus bill is now before the Finance Committee, and so far there have been no hearings held upon it at this session. I do not think there will be a necessity for any further hearings. I think the committee will report that bill to the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. When, may I ask? Mr. SMOOT. I can not tell exactly.

Mr. HARRISON. What is the Senator's best judgment

Mr. SMOOT. It depends on how soon we get through with the hearings on the revenue bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Nothing will be done, then, on this soldiers' bill, even though the Senator's opinion is that it will not be necessary to have any more hearings, until after the hearings are closed on the general tariff bill and after it has passed the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not say that, and I do not want the Senator to take my answer as a positive statement. I was only expressing what I thought would follow. It may be reported to the Senate before those hearings are finished. The Finance Committee will meet every morning at 10.30, I suppose, for some weeks to come.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want to pry into the secrets of the Finance Committee—

Mr. SMOOT. There are none.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I understand there are no secrets in any committee work; but has there been any motion made by anyone to bring that bill out during this session of Congress?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that committee have not as yet taken up their calendar for the consideration of any bills befor it at this session.

Mr. HARRISON. Then there has been no motion made to bring that bill out of committee?

Mr. SMOOT. There has not.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator will recall that about 10 days before the last Congress closed both the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose], the chairman of the Committee on Finance, and his right bower, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber], told a delegation of soldiers representing the American Legion, who came here, that in all probability that bill would be reported out immediately, and would be passed before the session closed. The Senator recalls that?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not know what they told the representatives of the American Legion.

Mr. HARRISON. I am only quoting what I saw in the papers.

Mr. SMOOT. What the Senator sees in the papers is not always just the fact.

Mr. HARRISON. So the committee is not going to make good the suggestion of those distinguished members of the committee made to this delegation representing the American Legion?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not think the representatives of the American Legion are in any way, shape, or form alarmed over what the Senate Finance Committee is going to do. I think they have confidence in the committee. I say to the Senator that I am positive the bill will be reported to the Senate, and I have not the least doubt but that it will pass the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope they have confidence that the committee will bring out that legislation. I think they are about the only ones who have.

Mr. SMOOT. I am sorry for the Senator from Mississippi if he has not any confidence in that committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate and open to further amendment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to give preference right of employment on construction work on United States reclamation projects to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines."

EXCHANGE OF ARMS AND EQUIPMENT.

The bill (S. 1574) authorizing the Secretary of War to exchange, with foreign nations desiring same, samples of arms and equipment in use by the Army of the United States was considered as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let that go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over. The consideration of the calendar is completed.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS IN HAWAII.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I would like to know what became of Senate bill 1021, to provide for the exchange of Government lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It went over on objection.

Mr. WARREN. Does the RECORD show who objected?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. Ken-YON] objected.

Mr. WARREN. That Senator is not in the Chamber at this

PERSONAL EXPLANATION-LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, an incident occurred in the last campaign with which I was personally concerned and which has a certain public interest. I very much desire that at least my colleagues in the Senate should know the facts in chronological order as they actually occurred.

During this presidential campaign of 1920, while discussing before the people of Missouri the League of Nations and the relation of our country to its provisions, I said many times in effect that the undertaking of article 10 of the covenant, "to preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity of all States members of the league," meant just what it said, and that a concrete illustration of the effect of this obligation upon the United States was to be found in the statement which I alleged President Wilson had made at the eighth plenary session of the peace conference on May 31, 1919, when he declared that the peace of the world depended upon armed strength and led the delegates then present, and particularly the Rumanian delegates, to believe that if at any time in the future, their fortiforial boundary lines as established by the future their territorial boundary lines as established by the treaty of peace should become endangered an American Army and an American Navy would be sent to preserve the integrity of their territory, and I said in substance that this promise to send an American Army and an American Navy overseas was precisely the thing which the obligation of article 10 imposed and which the nations of Europe expected.

Mr. Joseph P. Tumulty, the then Secretary to the President, upon hearing of the statement which I was making, telegraphed to the St. Louis Post Dispatch as follows:

The attention of the President has been called to a speech delivered in your State by Senator Spencer, in which he quoted the President as saying in a speech delivered to a delegation made up of Rumanians and Serbs in Paris that if any nation ever invaded their territory he would send the American Army across the seas to defend their boundary

The excerpt from the speech of Senator Spencer has been called directly to the President's attention, and he authorized me to say that Senator Spencer's statement is absolutely and unqualifiedly false.

I had then, as I confess I still have, a serious doubt as to whether at that time the attention of the President himself had ever been called to the statements which I was repeatedly making, but that the origin of the telegram which I have just quoted was entirely with Mr. Tumulty, and I made public, after reading Mr. Tumulty's telegram, the following statement:

reading Mr. Tumulty's telegram, the following statement:

No one familiar with conditions at Washington place any credence in the statement of Mr. J. P. Tumulty that the President himself has considered and denied what I have often said and what I expect to repeat again and again, and that is that the President, in his agreement, which he demands the American people shall, by "a solemn referendum," approve, has attempted to obligate this Nation to send its Army and Navy anywhere in the world where a boundary line is invaded, and that American soldiers shall "preserve against external aggression the territorial integrity of every member of the league" and in every part of the globe.

The President illustrated this pledge to the Rumanian delegates by assuring them that if the world was ever troubled again he would send an American Army and an American fleet.

It is significant that the first denial comes at this late date and from the President's private secretary, Mr. J. P. Tumulty, who dares, as he has again and again done in far more important matters, to speak in the voice of the President.

PROMISE MATTER OF RECORD.

PROMISE MATTER OF RECORD.

The promise of the President is a matter of record. It has been printed over and over again in the public press and never denied. In the issue of the Century Magazine for May it was expressly set out and severely criticized by that distinguished author, Mr. Herbert Adams Gibbons. It was declared in the Senate months before that and was never denied. There can be no doubt about the promise or the intention of the President to bind the United States without any qualification or exception to send its Army and Navy into every world trouble wherever an invasion of a boundary line occurred.

It is now for the first time denied by Mr. J. P. Tumulty in the vain hope of stemming the rising tide of universal opposition to any such un-American obligation.

The American people never will agree to it. The American soldiers who fought in the Great War repudiate it. The conscience of the country protests against it. It is far more important than any political affiliation, and the record of the President's agreement in article 10 of the treaty and his promise to the Rumanians in the official stenographic notes of the eighth plenary session, as I have stated it, are facts the whole world knows.

Doubtless the newspapers which were publishing the matter promptly notified Mr. Tumulty of this statement which I made, for I soon received the following telegram from Mr. Tumulty, which I did not answer:

which I did not answer:

The newspaper representatives have called my attention to a statement given by you to the St. Louis papers, containing the following quotation:

"I do not for a moment believe that the President ever made any such denial, or that the matter was ever called to his attention, as J. P. Tumulty indicates in his letter. Anyone who knows the situation at Washington knows that Mr. Tumulty is himself conducting the administration of government far more than the President of the United States, and has become accustomed to issue orders and make statements originating entirely in his own mind, but falsely announced as having back of them the knowledge and sanction of the President."

I shall not attempt to characterize the reflection upon the President himself which is found in this statement. I shall leave to your conscience to say whether you consider this statement as worthy of a Senator of the United States. The statement you make charging that I have falsely issued a denial at the White House that the President had promised military aid to the Rumanians and Serbs is one that I can not allow to pass without comment.

It is a fact that the President, in his own handwriting, authorized me to say that the alleged quotation from you contained in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch was false. If you doubt the authenticity of the President's authority, his written direction to me is on file at the White House, where either you or any representative you may appoint may examine it.

(Signed) J. P. Tumulty.

examine it.

(Signed) J. P. TUMULTY, Secretary to the President.

Very soon thereafter I received a telegram direct from President Wilson himself reading as follows: Senator SELDEN PALMER SPENCER,

St. Louis:

I have just been shown your statement that my secretary's denial of the previous statement by you that I had promised American military aid to Rumanians and Serbs was issued by him without my knowledge and sanction, and that you did not believe that I had made any such denial or that the matter was ever called to my attention by Mr. Tumulty, and that I requested him to issue the denial to which you refer.

I reiterate the denial.
The statement you made was false.

WOODROW WILSON.

To this telegram I at once, on October 5, 1920, replied as follows:

ST. Louis, October 5.

White House, Washington, D. C .:

White House, Washington, D. C.:

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your telegram of October 5, in which you deny that you promised American military aid to Rumanians and Serbs and that previous denial which Mr. J. P. Tumulty had made was at your request. The statement of yours to which I have often referred in my address was the statement in the stenographic notes of the eighth plenary session of the peace conference, in which you are reported to have said to Premier Bratiano of Rumania as follows:

"You must not forget that it is force that is the final guaranty of the public peace. If the world is again troubled, the United States will send to this side of the ocean their Army and their fleet."

This statement appeared in the issue of the Century Magazine for May, 1920, in an article by that distinguished writer, Mr. Herbert Adams Gibbons, who, I am informed, was attached to your own publicity department in Paris. It was made upon the floor of the Senate on February 2, 1920, by Senator Reed and, so far as I have learned, has never been denied until now. It has been widely circulated over the United States. If you did not make that statement to Premier Bratiano, I should be much indebted if you will be good enough to inform me. Bratiano, inform me.

I have, under date of April 11, 1921, received from the State Department in answer to my request a note in which the Secretary of State writes:

I send you herewith a copy of the statement by President Wilson on May 31, 1919, at the pienary session of the peace conference as set forth in the official report in English of the proceedings on that day.

The full and accurate text of what the President of the United States did say when speaking in English at the eighth plenary conference on May 31, 1919, I ask leave of the Senate to print in full as an appendix to my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. SPENCER. The quotations from this official address which the President of the United States made, and which I desire to read, are as follows:

We must not close our eyes to the fact that in the last analysis the military and naval strength of the great powers will be the final guaranty of the peace of the world. * * * There underlies all these transactions the expectation on the part, for-example, of Rumania, Czechoslovakia, and of Serbia, that if any covenants of this settlement are not observed, the United States will send her armies and her navies to see that they are observed.

The version of what the President said as written in French is reported as follows. Both the original in French and a literal translation thereof reads:

If the world finds itself troubled anew, if the conditions which we all regard as fundamental are again drawn into question, the guaranty which is given to you will mean that the United States will send to this side of the ocean their Army and their Navy.

I ask leave to have the original in French, as it will support it, also inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Si le monde se trouve de nouveau troublé, si les conditions que nous regardons tous comme fondamentales, sont remises en question, la garantie qui vous est donnée a veut dire que les États-Unis feront passer de ce côté de l'océan leur armée et leur flotte.

Mr. SPENCER. After this controversy arose as to what President Wilson said it was reported to the American press by Premier Bratiano himself, who was present at the time President Wilson spoke, that the statement of the President was:

dent Wilson spoke, that the statement of the President was:

The allied and associated powers will guarantee to maintain as much as possible the just conditions to which they will have agreed. They take upon themselves this engagement and naturally upon them falls the principal responsibility.

It must not be forgotten that their force is the guaranty. The same argument applies to their authority. It is on the same basis that the minority States mentioned should understand that the principal powers will guarantee the very existence of these States.

Is it unjust that they agreed to this demand since conditions which we regard as fundamentally just are in question? The guaranty given to you amounts to this—that the United States will send from the other side of the ocean their Army and their fleet.

Mr. REED. Mr. President-

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. REED. Was the statement just read made to the representatives of Rumania and Czechoslovakia? What is the Senator now quoting from?

Mr. SPENCER. The quotation which I have just made is a statement of Premier Bratiano himself as to what his notes show was said by the President of the United States at the eighth plenary conference.

On October 6, 1920, in evident reply to my telegram of October 5, the President wired me as follows:

Hon. SELDEN P. SPENCER, St. Louis:

I am perfectly content to leave it to the voters of Missouri to determine which of us is telling the truth. WOODROW WILSON.

To this telegram I replied as follows:

OCTOBER 6, 1920.

Your telegram of date has been repeated to me while campaigning in the State. There must be no misunderstanding about a matter of such great national importance as to whether you stated to Premier Bratiano, of Rumania, that an American Army and Navy would be sent across the sea in case the world is again troubled. It has been for months publicly asserted that such agreement on your part is incorporated in the stenographic reports of the eighth plenary session of the peace conference. I again beg of you to let me know whether such is the fact.

SELDEN P. SPENCER.

To this telegram I received no answer.

The last statement from the White House was on the following day, October 7, 1920, and I beg the Senate to bear in mind that date, and in my judgment its bearing upon the whole controversy is perhaps the most important of all the statements. It was printed generally throughout the country and reads as follows:

The contribution to-day from the White House in the controversy between President Wilson and Senator Spencer, of Missouri, who charged the President with having definitely promised the aid of the American Army and Navy to Rumania and Serbia at the peace conference, was a statement by Secretary Tumulty that the President has no stenographic report of the eighth plenary session, at which the promise is alleged to have been made, and that so far as the President knows there is no such record in this country.

The statement which the Missouri Senator has charged to President Wilson, and which is being used as part of the Republican campaign against the League of Nations, is said, according to various published reports, to have been made by the President at a session of the council of four on May 31, 1919. Mr. Spencer, however, referred to it as having been made at the eighth plenary session of the peace conference.

"President Wilson tells me there is no stenographic record of the proceedings of the conference in his possession," Mr. Tumulty said, "and so far as the President knows there is none in this country."

I did not at the time place any credence in the statement that

I did not at the time place any credence in the statement that there was no official copy in the hands of the President or accessible to him in the State Department containing a full account of what actually happened on May 31, 1919, and I recently requested of the State Department information in regard to this fact. Under date of April 15, 1921, I received a reply from the Secretary of State reading as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF STATE, Washington, April 15, 1921.

Hon. Selden P. Spencer, United States Senate.

Mr Dear Senator Spencer: In answer to your letter of April 13, 1 beg to say that the records of the Department of State show that 500 copies of protocol No. S. in English, from which the extract sent to you with my letter of April 11 was taken, were sent by the peace commission to the Department of State on July 9, 1919, and were received by the department on July 22, 1919. Three hundred additional copies, also in English, were sent by the embassy at Paris on February 12, 1920, and received in the Department of State on March 16, 1920.

I have the honor to remain,

Very sincerely, yours,

Charles E. Hughes.

I make no comment upon what this record shows. It speaks for itself with convincing force. I may perhaps be pardoned for making the statement in conclusion, with reference to the last telegram sent to me from President Wilson, in which he expressed his entire contentment to leave the matter in issue between us to the voters of Missouri, that out of 114 counties in Missouri I carried 83 of them at the election of November 3, 1920, and that my majority over my distinguished opponent, who was the warm personal supporter of President Wilson's side of the controversy, and who was himself the Third Assistant Secretary of State when the facts in the dispute were happening, was 121,663.

APPENDIX.

FULL TEXT OF PRESIDENT WILSON'S ADDRESS ON MAY 31, 1919, TO THE PLENARY SESSION OF THE PEACE CONFERENCE,

"The President of the United States, speaking in English.

makes the following speech:
"'Mr. President, I should be very sorry to see this meeting adjourn with permanent impressions such as it is possible may have been created by some of the remarks that our friends have made. I should be very sorry to have the impression lodged in your minds that the great powers desire to assume or play any arbitrary rôle in these great matters, or presume, because of any pride of authority, to exercise an undue influence in these matters, and therefore I want to call your attention to one aspect of these questions which has not been dwelt upon,

"'We are trying to make a peaceful settlement; that is to say, to eliminate those elements of disturbance, so far as possible, which may interfere with the peace of the world, and we are trying to make an equitable distribution of territories according to the race, the ethnographical character of the people inhabiting them.

"'And back of that lies this fundamentally important fact that, when the decisions are made, the Allied and Associated Powers guarantee to maintain them. It is perfectly evident, upon a moment's reflection, that the chief burden of their maintenance will fall upon the great powers. The chief burden of the war fell upon the greater powers, and if it had not been for their action, their military action, we would not be here to settle these questions. Therefore, we must not close our eyes to the fact that in the last analysis the military and naval strength of the great powers will be the final guaranty of the peace of the

"'In those circumstances, is it unreasonable and unjust that, not as dictators but as friends, the great powers should say to their associates, "We can not afford to guarantee territorial settlements which we do not believe to be right, and we can not agree to leave elements of disturbance unremoved, which we believe will disturb the peace of the world?"

"'Take the rights of minorities. Nothing, I venture to say, is more likely to disturb the peace of the world than the treatment which might in certain circumstances be meted out to minorities. And therefore if the great powers are to guarantee the peace of the world in any sense, is it unjust that they should be satisfied that the proper and necessary guaranties have been given?

"'I beg our friends from Rumania and from Serbia to re-member that while Rumania and Serbia are ancient sovereignties the settlements of this conference are greatly adding to their territories. You can not in one part of our transactions treat Serbia alone and in all of the other parts treat the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes as a different entity, for they are seeking the recognition of this conference as a single entity, and if this conference is going to recognize these various powers as new sovereignties within definite territories, the chief guarantors are entitled to be satisfied that the territorial settlements are of a character to be permanent, and that the guaranties given are of a character to ensure the peace of the world.

"'It is not, therefore, the intervention of those who would interfere, but the action of those who would help. I beg that our friends will take that view of it, because I see no escape from that view of it.

"'How can a power like the United States, for examplefor I can speak for no other-after signing this treaty, if it contains elements which they do not believe will be permanent, go 3,000 miles away across the sea and report to its people that it has made a settlement of the peace of the world? It can not do so. And yet there underlies all of these transactions the expectation on the part, for example, of Rumania and of Czechoslovakia and of Serbia that if any covenants of this settlement are not observed the United States will send her armies and her navies to see that they are observed.

"'In those circumstances is it unreasonable that the United States should insist upon being satisfied that the settlements are correct? Mr. Bratiano-and I speak of his suggestions with the utmost respect-suggested that we could not, so to say, invade the sovereignty of Rumania, an ancient sovereignty, and make certain prescriptions with regard to the rights of minorities. But I beg him to observe that he is overlooking the fact that he is asking the sanction of the allied and associated powers for great additions of territory which come to Rumania by the common victory of arms, and that, therefore, we are entitled to say: "If we agree to these additions of territory, we have the right to insist upon certain guaranties of peace."

"'I beg mry friend Mr. Kramar and my friend Mr. Trumbitch and my friend Mr. Bratiano to believe that if we should feel that it is best to leave the words which they have wished to omit in the treaty it is not because we want to insist upon unreasonable conditions, but that we want the treaty to accord to us the right of judgment as to whether these are things which we can afford to guarantee.

Therefore the impressions with which we should disperse ought to be these, that we are all friends-of course, that goes without saying-but that we must all be associates in a common effort, and there can be no frank and earnest association in the common effort unless there is a common agreement as to what the rights and settlements are.

"'Now, if the agreement is a separate agreement among groups of us, that does not meet the object. If you should adopt the language suggested by the Czechoslovakian delegation and the Serbian delegation—the Jugo-Slav delegation—that it should be left to negotiation between the principal allied and associated powers and their several delegates, that would mean that after this whole conference is adjourned groups of them would determine what is to be the basis of the peace of the world. It seems to me that that would be a most dangerous idea to entertain, and therefore I beg that we may part with a sense, not of interference with each other but of hearty and friendly cooperation upon the only possible basis of guaranty. Where the great force lies there must be the sanction of peace. sometimes wish in hearing an argument like this that I were the representative of a small power, so that what might be robbed of any mistaken significance, but I think you will agree with me that the United States has never shown any temper of aggression anywhere, and it lies in the heart of the people of the United States, as I am sure it lies in the hearts of the peoples of the other great powers, to form a common partnership of right and to do service to our associates and no kind of disservice."

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES-OPEN EXECUTIVE SESSIONS.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President-

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. As the Senator from Arizona is about to address the Senate on his amendment increasing the duty on cotton, I ask that the unfinished business may be laid before the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Arizona yield merely for a brief announcement?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield. Mr. HARRISON. This morning before the regular order was demanded I had moved the consideration of a resolution, under a notice that had been filed some days before, to change the rules of the Senate. It is now only 40 minutes until the hour arrives to take up the unfinished business. I imagine that the resolution to which I refer will precipitate some debate, so I shall not press it during the morning hour this morning, but hope, with the acquiescence of Senators in charge of the pending legislation, to get it up to-morrow immediately following the speech of the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

EMERGENCY TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2435) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, and to provide revenue; to regulate commerce with foreign countries; to prevent the dumping of foreign merchandise on the markets of the United States; to regulate the value of foreign money; and for other purposes.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, some misapprehension exists as to the meaning of lines 14 and 15 on page 3 of the emergency tariff bill, and I shall ask the Senate to indulge me while I try to make an explanation as to what those words and figures mean:

It will be remembered that when the emergency tariff bill was pending before the Senate in the third session of the Sixty-sixth Congress I offered an amendment practically the same as the amendment I am now going to discuss. The amendment was to strike out the numeral "7" and to insert the numeral "20" The lines to which I now address myself are found on page 3 of the bill, lines 14 and 15 thereof, reading as follows:

16. Cotton having a staple of 1% inches or more in length, 7 cents per

My amendment proposes to strike out the numeral "7" and to insert in lieu thereof the numeral "20," so that the rate of duty would be 20 cents on cotton having a staple or fiber 1s inches or more. The remarks I am about to make may be tedious to Senators, as they are statistical in character, but I believe it is my duty to make some explanation in detail as to the expansion of this industry. I now read from a pamphlet entitled "Cotton Production in the Irrigated Southwest in 1920," by Mr. C. S. Scofield, of the United States Department of Agriculture:

"COTTON PRODUCTION IN THE IRRIGATED SOUTHWEST IN 1920. "THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE INDUSTRY.

"[By C. S. Scofield, United States Department of Agriculture.]

"Prior to 1905 cotton was practically an unknown crop on the irrigated lands of the southwestern United States. attempt was made to produce the crop in the San Joaquin Valley in California in 1873 and 1874, but high labor costs and the low prices for the product caused the experiment to be abandoned.

From 1905 to 1912 numerous experiments with cotton were made in the irrigated valleys of Arizona and southern California, and by 1912 the crop was fairly well established in several places. In that year the first commercial quantity of cotton of the Egyptian type was grown. Varieties of the American upland type were produced in commercial quantities as early as 1909. "From 1912 to 1920 the acreage devoted to cotton has increased rapidly, particularly in the last three years, when the stimulus of war demands and consequent high prices have been felt. It is probable that, including some 30,000 acres of upland cotton in he Pecos and Rio Grande Valleys in Texas and New Mexico, there have been not far from 500,000 acres devoted to cotton in the Southwest in 1920. This acreage includes also about 125,000 acres in Lower California, adjacent to the Imperial Valley, operated largely under American supervision, the product of which is marketed through American channels.

Of this half million acres of cotton about one-half, or 250,000 acres, was devoted to the production of the Pima variety, which is of the type known commercially as Egyptian. This variety produces a fiber 12 to 15 inches in length. For the acreage devoted to upland cotton there has been no standardization of seed supply, and there has been much varietal mixture and consequent deterioration. At first there were some fairly pure stocks of Triumph or Mebane (1-inch staple) and of Durango (11-inch staple), but these have been intermixed and contaminated with still other varieties until there is practically no pure seed of upland cotton available for general planting in the With the Pima variety there is an ample supply of pure planting seed available each year since 1917.

"During the last 10 years, within which the irrigated area devoted to cotton has extended from practically nothing to approximately 500,000 acres, there has been a very large extension of the area of irrigated land. In the aggregate and within the sections where cotton has been grown the increase of irrigated area has probably been nearly equal to the increase in cotton acreage. But the relatively high value of the cotton crop, and the requirements of capital, labor, and machinery for its production and marketing, and for the manufacture of its seed products, combine to make it a factor of the first importance in the agricultural complex of the irrigated Southwest.

Because of its rapid growth and because of the profitable returns it has given in the past three years, this industry has attracted wide attention. In the matter of returns the industry has had two bad years-one in 1914, when the outbreak of the World War caused a temporary market stagnation, and the other in 1920, when a general decline in the prices of agricultural products set in late in the season, which had been conspicuous for the high costs of labor and materials required in production.

It is still too early to determine the final effect of the present price recession on the cotton industry of this region, but it seems clear that it has temporarily at least reached the end of its first period of rapid expansion, and that it must from now on settle into a more stable equilibrium with its associated indus-

"THE TWO KINDS OF COTTON.

"The two kinds of cotton now being grown in the irrigated Southwest differ from each other in so many important respectsbotanical, agronomic, and commercial—that they must be considered separately in order to avoid continual confusion in the discussion of the subject. It has been noted above that the upland type of cotton includes several varieties which have been hopelessly intermixed with consequent deterioration of quality and yield. The Pima cotton, on the other hand, is all of the one variety; the seed for the entire 250,000 acres grown in 1920 having come from a single plant selected in 1911. Continuing care has been exercised to prevent varietal mixture either in the field or at the gin, and thus the most important, if not the only, cause of varietal deterioration has been eliminated.

"Upland cotton can be matured in a shorter growing season than Pima. The latter requires a growing season of 275 to 300 days between frosts, while the former may be grown safely with 225 days. Upland cotton is ginned on saw gins, while the Pima variety is ginned on roller gins. The lint of both types is marketed in the same kind of bales, and the seed of both types is manufactured in the same way. It has been the general experience in the Southwest that upland cotton yields somewhat more lint per acre than Pima, possibly 30 per cent more, but the yields of seed cotton are approximately the same for both kinds. On the other hand, the lint of the Pima variety has the higher market value, possibly double that of upland. The production costs are about the same for both, while the harvesting costs are nearly twice as much for Pima as for upland. It is not the purpose here, however, to discuss the relative merits of the two types of cotton for the region under consideration, but rather to point out the differences, and then to discuss certain features of each branch of the industry separately.

" THE UPLAND COTTON AREAS. " Pecos Valley.

"Proceeding from East to West, cotton is found under irrigation first in the Pecos Valley in New Mexico and Texas. In this region of high altitude and short growing season only upland cotton can be grown. The 1920 crop is estimated at 7,000 bales, which probably represents about 10,000 acres, of which a small portion is presumed to be Durango and the re-mainder is made up of varieties of the Texas big boll type. In 1918 the pink bollworm was reported from one section of the valley, but prompt measures have apparently been successful in checking its spread. The Mexican boll weevil has not been reported as causing damage in this section.

" Rio Grande Valley.

"In the Rio Grande Valley, both north and south of El Paso, where water from the Elephant Butte Reservoir is available, upland cotton has been grown in 1919 and 1920. In the latter season it is reported that there were about 22,000 acres devoted to the crop. Earlier experiments with Pima cotton had shown that the season was too short for this variety because of the high altitude. Late in November, 1920, two areas of pink bollworm infestation were found. One just southeast of the city of El Paso and the other up the valley close to the line of New Mexico. The quarantine measures that may be necessitated by the presence of this insect, together with the present low prices for cotton, may cause a reduction of the cotton acreage in this section for the near future. The agronomic conditions have been very favorable, and if protection from insect injury can be had, the cotton crop should find an important place in this valley.

"Yuma Valley.

"On the Yuma reclamation project conditions are favorable to the production of both upland and Pima cotton. Upland cotton was first grown there on a substantial scale in 1914, but adverse market conditions that year caused a reduction in the acreage in 1915, while from 1916 on there has been a rapid increase. In 1917 some Egyptian cotton of the Yuma variety was planted, but the returns from the upland varieties were so high that this type continued to be the more commonly grown. In 1920 special inducements were offered by several tire companies for the production of Pima cotton, so that about 10,000 acres were planted to that variety, while possibly 15,000 to 18,000 acres were planted to upland varieties.

"As early as 1912 the Department of Agriculture recommended to the farmers of the Yuma Valley that they try cotton of the Egyptian type, but without result. In 1913 some Durango seed was distributed, and in 1914 Durango was planted extensively, as was Triumph and some other Texas varieties. At the present time the seed of these upland varieties has been so badly mixed that the 1920 crop is highly unsatisfactory. The quarantine regulations, both State and National, make it difficult, if not impossible, to import new supplies of planting seed, and there are indications that the farmers may be forced to establish for themselves locally supplies of pure seed for planting. It is not yet clear which of the varieties will be adopted, nor is it clear that in the present period of low prices there will be effective action taken to provide pure planting seed.

"It has been demonstrated that very large yields of cotton can be secured in the Yuma Valley, particularly in the lower valley near Somerton and Gadsden. On some of this land cotton-root rot is serious. Some insect pests and plant diseases have been troublesome—for example, the cotton aphis, the cotton stainer, and anthracnose. There have been some cultural difficulties, such as getting good stands and irrigating properly, but, on the whole, upland cotton has done well, and in years of good prices the crop returns have been satisfactory. Up to the present time neither the pink bollworm nor the Mexican boll weevil has been in this valley nor in the adjacent irrigated valleys of California.

"Imperial Valley.

"For purposes of discussing the cotton industry the Imperial Valley may be held to include the area irrigated by the diversion from the Colorado River at Pilot Knob, just above-the international boundary. This area includes something over 130,000 acres of land in the territory of Baja California, Mexico, and something less than 400,000 in Imperial County, Calif. Cotton has been produced in substantial quantities in this region since 1910. In 1920 almost the whole of the irrigated area in Baja California was planted to cotton, while about 90,000 acres of the irrigated land in Imperial County was planted to cotton. of which about 28,000 acres was planted to the Pima variety. Prior to 1920 the Pima acreage in the Imperial Valley was so small as to be negligible, but this year the tire companies secured the planting of this variety in Imperial County by a system of contracts similar to those used in the Yuma Valley. very little Pima cotton planted on the Mexican side of the line.

Except for two or three properties, all of the irrigated land in Baja California is operated under lease from the Colorado River Land Co. (successor of the California-Mexican Land & Cattle Co.). This cotton land is rented, generally for cash, first year $2.50, second year $5, third year $7.50, and fourth and fifth years $10 per acre. In addition, the renter pays the taxes, about $1.60 per acre, and the water charge, about $8 to $9 per acre. This acreage has been operated in large properties with rather shiftless cultural methods. It is estimated by a man familiar with local conditions that not over 10 per cent of this cotton land has ever been plowed, almost no attempt has been made to grow other crops than cotton, possibly for the reason that the Mexican Government has maintained very high duties, either export or import, that have tended to discourage general farming. Most of the money used for growing the cotton crop on the Mexican side of the line is provided by American concerns, among which the Globe Milling Co. has been latterly one of the most important. This concern now owns most of the ginning plants in the Imperial Valley, as well as one or more oil mills. It bought out recently the properties built up by Messrs. Dale and Speer, of Fort Worth and El Paso.

"The seed cotton, cotton seed, and cotton lint produced in Baja California is all marketed in the United States. On moving across the line through the port of Mexicali it is assessed the following export duties: For baled lint or seed cotton the export tax is equivalent to $12.54, American money, for each 1,000 kilos. For cotton seed the export tax is equivalent to $5.825, American money, for each 1,000 kilos. The Federal Horticultural Board of the United States Department of Agriculture is represented at Calexico by Mr. O. A. Pratt, who inspects the cotton fields in Baja California, supervises all imports from Mexico or the eastern United States with a view to preventing the introduction of dangerous insect pests, and issues permits for the importation of the Mexican-grown cotton into the United States.

"In Imperial County cotton was grown in 1920 on rather less than 25 per cent of the cropped land. This proportion of the acreage in cotton would not be in excess of the limits of good farming if the crop were incorporated into a systematic rotation. Too often this is not the case. Much of the cotton is grown year after year on the same land or put on new land by Prior to 1919 the whole Imperial Valley suffered a renters. water shortage some time each summer, often at a time when the need of water was most acute for the cotton crop. As a result of these conditions, there have been many poor yields, and the crop as a whole has been scarcely profitable to the growers even during the recent years of high prices.

"Partly because of these recurring water shortages and partly because of shifting and speculative propensities of the cotton growers of the valley, the cost of credit has been relatively high. There has been a conspicuous lack of community cooperation in dealing with such problems as seed supply, labor, and markets. Cotton production has not been handled efficiently, other industries have been periodically more profitable, and, taken as a whole, the cotton situation in the Imperial Valley falls short of being satisfactory. It seems probable that if the present marketing conditions continue the acreage next season will be reduced.

" Coachella Valley.

"The Coachella Valley, which is the name applied to a north-westward extension of the same depression in which the Imperial Valley lies, has not been an important cotton-producing section. Early truck crops and dates have attracted more attention than cotton, though there are many good-sized fields of that crop in the valley this year. Previous experiments had shown that the climatic conditions were rather too severe for Pima cotton, chiefly because of strong winds in the spring and high summer temperatures. Some upland cotton has been grown with rather indifferent success for several years. In 1920 the high prices prevailing for Pima cotton in the Salt River Valley attracted the attention of farmers in the Coachella Valley and an aggregate of a few hundred acres of Pima cotton was planted. A somewhat larger acreage, probably not over 1,000 or 1,500 acres, was also planted to upland varieties, including some thought to be Durango.

"The water supply of the Coachella Valley comes from moderately deep wells which tap an underflow, fed from the mountains which surround it on the west. In the lower end of the valley, the southeastern end, these wells flow freely; at the upper end, the westward end, it is necessary to lift the water 15 to 25 feet, for which cheap hydroelectric power, supplied by the Southern Sierras Co., is used.

"At the Indio Date Garden, of which Mr. Bruce Drummond is superintendent, two small plats of upland cotton of the Acala variety were planted in the spring of 1920. One of these plats was located on desert soil and the other on land that had been Both plats were well cared for though rather a in alfalfa. poor stand was obtained on the plat on alfalfa land. Despite the severe summer temperatures, the plants on both plats grew well and fruited abundantly. Prior to November 30 the desert-soil plat of a little over one-half acre had been picked twice and had yielded at the rate of 3,300 pounds of seed cotton per The other plat had not all been picked over at the date mentioned, but so far as then picked was yielding at the rate of 3,000 pounds of seed cotton per acre. These plats were planted with fairly pure seed of the variety, and because of this fact and the high yield and attractive appearance of the crop they were attracting wide attention both in the Coachella and Imperial Valleys. It seems probable that some attempt will be made to give this variety further trial in this region and possibly also to provide for the continued production of a pure seed supply.

"It is hardly to be expected that a large acreage of cotton will be produced in the Coachella Valley, nor that the Pima variety will be grown there, but it may be that a small acreage may be devoted to the production of the Acala or some other upland variety on a pure-seed basis, with a view to selling planting seed in the Imperial Valley, or even in Texas and Oklahoma, where there is a continuing demand for pure seed of good " San Joaquin Valley.

"In the San Joaquin Valley the first serious experiments with cotton production were begun in 1917 near Bakersfield and Fresno. In 1920 there is assumed to be something like 20,000 acres of cotton in the valley, of which about half is upland and half is Pima. Bakersfield and Fresno continue to be the chief centers, but there are several fields around different points between these towns and the Boston Land Co. west of Fresno has planted some 2,500 acres of cotton, chiefly Durango.

'Most of the planting seed for the San Joaquin upland cotton was brought from the Imperial Valley and is badly mixed. There is one lot of Acala cotton from seed sent from Oklahoma by the Department of Agriculture in the spring of 1919 that was grown on about 100 acres of land in 1920, which is still fairly pure and has made a good showing.

"Most of the cotton in the San Joaquin Valley is grown with pumped water, which is relatively expensive. On some of the higher lands the lift required is 100 feet or more. Unless the price of cotton should continue relatively high it is doubtful if upland cotton can be grown profitably on the higher lands. On the lower lands where the water lift is less and where alfalfa, barley, and rice are now the chief crops, it may be practicable to continue the production of upland cotton, particularly if pure seed of the long staple varieties is used.

"The outstanding feature of the San Joaquin Valley is the fruitfulness of cotton. This is true both with the upland and the Pima. There is must less boll shedding than in the valleys south and east and the potential yield is correspondingly high. There is danger, however, that ripening of the late crop may be hindered by foggy weather.

'In addition to the areas enumerated above, upland cotton has been grown in a number of other localities in the irrigated Southwest, for example, in the Blythe district, the Parker Indian Reservation, and in several of the mountain valleys in southern California. In none of these has the acreage been very large. In some of them cotton may become relatively important with the development of additional water supplies.

"The preceding paragraphs may be summarized in a tabular statement as to the irrigated acreage of upland cotton in the Southwest in 1920, with the reservation that these figures are merely provisional estimates.

"THE PRODUCTION OF PIMA COTTON.

"Prior to 1920 Pima cotton was extensively produced only in the Salt River Valley in Arizona. Experimental plantings had been made in other localities and the variety was well known throughout the region in which its production is possible. The Egyptian type of cotton to which the Pima belongs was first produced in the Salt River Valley in 1912. From that year until 1916 the original American selection, known as the Yuma variety, was used. The Pima variety, which came from a single plant of the Yuma variety, was selected in 1911 and was carefully tosted during the part form as a large plant of the Yuma variety. fully tested during the next four years. Its superiority had been so clearly established by 1915 that arrangements were made to substitute it for the older variety in the Salt River Valley. Accordingly, a supply of seed sufficient to plant 275 acres was furnished a group of farmers near Tempe, Ariz., in the spring of 1916 and from this acreage a supply of pure seed was produced with which to plant the entire cotton acreage of the valley in 1917. This one variety has been grown exclusively in that valley since that time. The purity of the variety has been maintained by separate ginning and careful field inspection.

"The progress of cotton production in the Salt River Valley is shown in the following table, which gives the acreage and the yield of cotton for each year since 1912. The figures for acreage are only approximate; those for yields are as given in the ginning report published by the Bureau of the Census,

In addition to the acreage in the Salt River Valley there were 4,000 acres in the Yuma Valley and 200 acres in the Imperial Valley which contributed to this yield.

In 1918 it is estimated that Pima cotton was grown on 3,000 acres in the Yuma Valley, 3,000 acres in the Imperial Valley, 2,000 acres in the San Joaquin Valley, and 500 acres in the Palo Verde Valley, the yield of which is included above. In 1919 there was probably as much of an acreage grown outside of the Salt River Valley.

The complete ginning return for the 1920 crop is not available at the time of writing.

"The price at which this cotton has sold each year is obviously a difficult matter to determine. In the earlier years, when the crop was small, fairly accurate information was available, but in the later years, when the crop was larger and the marketing season extended over many months during which price changes were sometimes very great, it was no longer possible to learn the price at which the crop left the producers' The following figures are set down as the best estimate that can be made of the average price obtained by the grower each year:

"It will be observed from a comparison of the two tables above that a marked increase in cotton acreage has followed promptly on a sharp advance in price. The acreage increase in 1920 was still further stimulated not only in the Salt River Valley but elsewhere in the Southwest by two factors: The price of cotton advanced rapidly throughout the marketing season from an opening around 60 cents to a final price of $1.25, and several of the large tire manufacturing companies offered to contract with growers for the crop, with a guaranteed basis of 60 cents per pound and as much as 75 cents in some cases.

"GINS AND GINNING.

"The production of cotton involves the installation of gins and oil mills, and the character of the control of the former at least has a very important relation to the welfare of production. The following is a list of the roller gins operating in the Southwest in November, 1920, as furnished by Mr. S. H. Hastings and checked by Messrs, McLachlan and Camp:

"These roller gins are capable of turning out  $1\frac{1}{2}$  to 2 bales of cotton per day if run continuously with two shifts of men. When equipped with self-feeders a 10-stand plant requires a crew of eight or nine men for its operation.

"Notwithstanding the large number of gins in the Salt River Valley in 1920, this number was not adequate to keep up with the volume of cotton being picked at the height of the season. In the latter part of November there were estimated to be 30,000 cotton pickers at work in that valley, gathering daily at least 1,000 tons of seed cotton, or the equivalent of 1,000 bales of lint. The daily ginning capacity was hardly above 700 bales per day.

"The charge made for ginning Pima cotton in 1920 is $1.20 per hundred pounds of seed cotton, which includes the bagging and ties and an assessment of $4 per bale for the support of the organization that imports the labor for picking. It is said, on good authority, that the actual cost of ginning is somewhat higher than this. In 1912 and 1913 the regular charge for ginning was about 50 cents per hundred pounds of seed cotton, or $10 per bale, and the gins as then operated required the services of one man at each gin as a feeder.

"The mechanical feeders now in general use seem to be giving good satisfaction. Some new departures are being made in the covering of the rolls on the gins. Formerly the gin rolls were covered with strips of heavy leather, wound spirally on a wooden core and glued and pegged in position. Latterly a type of heavy hydraulic packing, made of rubber and cotton, has been used. At first this packing was put on in a series of disks pressed close together; later it was used in spiral strips alternating with strips of leather. Finally some rolls are being tried with the packing used alone in the spiral form just as the leather was formerly used.

"The ginning of the upland cotton crop, which is done with saw gins, is in general adequately provided for. In fact, in the Imperial Valley there were more saw gins than were needed for the volume of the crop coming off the plants at the end of November. The charge for saw ginning is this year 35 cents per hundred pounds of seed cotton, with an additional charge of $2.25 per bale for bagging and ties.

"There are a number of oil mills in the Southwest for the manufacture of cotton seed. Prior to the war these mills paid about $15 per ton for seed. This price was advanced during the war until in 1919 seed sold up to $85, and possibly even as high as $100, per ton. In 1920 the price of seed dropped back to the general level of $15 to $20 per ton. These prices were so disappointing that many farmers who had live stock were hauling their seed home from the gin with the intention of feeding it unless a better price could be secured.

"Up to the present time it has not been customary to compress the Pima cotton at primary shipping points. Some of the crop, moving eastward by way of Galveston, has probably been compressed for ocean shipment, but much of the crop has gone through to the mills in the low-density bales turned out at the gin. The upland crop, on the other hand, has largely been compressed at primary points. There are two compresses in the Imperial Valley, one at Imperial and the other at Calexico.

"The Pima crop is sampled at the gin before the bale is packed. The upland crop is sampled in the gin yard or at the compress, each bale being slashed on both sides for the sample.

"THE LABOR SITUATION.

"Ohe of the earliest problems in connection with the establishment of cotton production in the Southwest was that of securing the labor for picking the crop. Labor has always been relatively scarce and high priced in these new regions, and it was feared that the labor requirements of the cotton crop might be difficult to meet. At first it was thought that it might be possible to draw upon the Indians of the various Arizona reservations for the cotton-picking season, and during the first years that cotton was grown numbers of Pimas and Papagos were brought into the Salt River Valley for the picking season. As the cotton acreage was extended, however, it became clear that the supply of Indian labor available would not be sufficient to meet the needs of the cotton growers and it was decided to seek additional labor in Mexico.

"The effective importation of Mexican labor required money and united action. To meet these needs the farmers of the Salt River Valley formed a labor organization and selected Mr. W. H. Knox to take charge of the work. The necessary money was raised by an ingenious expedient. All of the gin owners of the valley were persuaded to sign an agreement that they would increase the ginning charge by $2 per bale above the regular charge and pay over to the labor organization the money so collected to be used as a fund for securing pickers.

"With these signed agreements as collateral the management of the labor organization was able to borrow from the local banks the money needed for its operations early in the season. This enterprise was launched in the summer of 1916. For the first two years labor was sought not only in Mexico but from Texas and Oklahoma and other points in the older cotton belt. Later it was found easier to get results from Mexico, so that recently that country has been the chief source of supply.

"If has been necessary for the labor organization to get a special dispensation from the Federal immigration authorities to bring this labor in. The immigrants not eligible for permanent entry must be returned to Mexico. It has been found advisable to bring in families, and this has necessitated the provision of medical care, shelter for living, and schooling for children. So far as can now be judged, this plan of importing labor has worked out well in the Salt River Valley. It has been possible to bring in sufficient labor to fill the need, and thus to prevent undue increases in the cost of cotton picking. At first the current rate of pay for cotton picking (Pima cotton) was

$2 per hundred pounds of seed cotton. This rate has been increased from time to time until in 1920 the pickers are paid $4

picker for each 12 acres.

"It is estimated by Mr. Knox that there were in the Salt River Valley in 1920 about 30,000 cotton pickers. Of these, about 15,000 were brought in from Mexico during the season, about 5,000 were Mexicans who had remained in the valley from previous seasons, and the remaining 10,000 included those diverted from other work in the valley and those who came in on their own account from other sections.

"Attempts have been made to extend the operations of the Salt River Valley labor organization to the Yuma and Imperial Valleys, but so far without conspicuous success. In the Imperial Valley south of the line it is possible to use Chinese, Japanese, and Mexicans almost without restriction, and that district has not suffered any serious labor shortage. North of the line it has been different, labor shortages have been perennial. This past season a serious attempt was made to form a central labor organization patterned after the one in the Salt River Valley. This failed because the ginners would not all agree to assess their patrons and thereby raise the funds. As a result of this lack of organization picking costs have been higher both in the Yuma and Imperial Valleys than in the Salt River Valley and the picking has not been so well done. Apparently no organized effort was made to get cotton pickers for the crop in the San Joaquin Valley this past season. There was, in consequence, a shortage of pickers even at the price of $5 per hundred, which is equivalent to 19 cents or 20 cents per pound of lint.

"It is estimated that on the average cotton pickers will gather from 60 pounds to 100 pounds of seed cotton per day when working in Pima fields and from 125 to 175 pounds per day in picking upland cotton. Thus on the basis of an average yield of 1,000 pounds of seed cotton per acre from Pima cotton provision must be made for 1 picker for each 6 acres of the crop. For upland cotton, on the other hand, the labor situation might be regarded as satisfactory if there were available 1

"THE COST OF PRODUCTION.

"It is not proposed here to undertake to state how much it costs to produce a pound of cotton in the Southwest. To do so would be like attempting to say how much it costs to build a house. But just as one might in the latter case set down some fairly precise information as to the local prices of brick, cement, lumber, and skilled labor so it is possible to make some estimates at least of the costs involved in the production of cotton. However, these can be no more than estimates. The actual costs will differ from farm to farm and from section to section.

"The production of cotton in the Southwest involves the use of land, of irrigation water, of certain agricultural implements, of labor both of men and horses, of skilled supervision, and finally seed for planting. Items of cost or value such as these may be assessed against each acre of land involved, regardless of the yield obtained. When the crop is ready to harvest the cost items are more conveniently charged against some unit of the crop as the 100 pounds of seed cotton or the bale of lint.

"This matter of production costs is always one of acute interest to cotton growers, but in 1920 the interest became abnormally keen as the season advanced and market prices for cotton declined. Growers and bankers alike felt the need of taking stock of the situation, not only to deal with the immediate problem of operating credits but also to determine a future course of action.

"It may be worth while before taking up current production costs to recall estimates made in 1913 and 1914, when cotton was a new crop in the Salt River Valley. Such estimates were published in Bulletin 332 of the United States Department of Agriculture. They may be listed as follows:

	Table IV.	Table V.
Fixed charges:     Land rental or interest and taxes.     Irrigation water.	$12.00 I,50	$17. 25- 2. 90
	13.50	19. 25
2. Growing cost: Cultural operations and seed	15.00	15.10
Total per acre cost	28.50	34.35
2. Harvesting cost (per 100 pounds seed cotton): Picking. Hauling to gin. Ginning.	2.00 .21 .56	2.00 .07 .56
Cost per 100 pounds seed cotton	2.77	2.63

"There were three different yields involved in the two tables cited above, (1) 1,200 pounds, (2) 1,800 pounds, and (3) 2,552 pounds, all in terms of seed cotton per acre. The first two were included in the estimate of Table IV and the third in Table V. If we divide the total cost per acre of Table IV by 1,200 we have $2.37, which, with the harvesting cost of $2.77, makes a total of $5.14 per hundred pounds of seed cotton. Similarly, we find for the 1,800-pound yield a total cost of $1.58 plus $2.77, or $4.35. Finally, for the third case, with a yield of 2,552 pounds of seed cotton per acre, the cost is $1.35 plus $2.63, or $3.98.

"The ginning experience in 1913 and 1914 was that 100 pounds of seed cotton would yield about 28 pounds of lint and 72 pounds of seed. The seed could then be sold at the gin for $15 per ton, or 75 cents per hundred pounds. Thus, if we deduct from the cost of the 100 pounds of seed cotton the gin value of the 72 pounds of seed, we have, by dividing the 28 pounds of lint into the remainder, a figure for the net cost of the lint:

"Case 1. Yield, 1,200 pounds:  $$5.14-$0.54 = \frac{$4.60}{28} = 16.4$  cents per pound lint. "Case 2. Yield, 1,800 pounds:  $$4.35-$0.54 = \frac{$3.81}{28} = 13.6$  cents per pound lint. $3.44

"Case 3. Yield, 2,552 pounds:  $$3.98 - $0.54 = \frac{$3.44}{28} - 12.3$  cents per pound lint.

"These figures are approximately what was thought to be the cost of production of Egyptian cotton in the Southwest in the first years of the industry. At that time it was thought that this type of cotton might bring on the average 20 to 22 cents per pound, at which price a fair profit might be made if good yields were obtained. The importance of high yields, even at some increase in the cost of cultural operations, is very obvious. The proportionate amount of fixed charges is so large that it is only with large yields that the unit cost of the product can be reduced.

With this background of prewar costs in mind, we can make a comparable list of the costs prevailing in 1920. It should be kept in mind that in the six years since the time of the earlier estimate land values, as well as the cost of labor and material, have increased very greatly. While the figures given below do not represent any extensive compilation of data, it is believed that they represent fairly well the average of the rather wide range of costs. In the case of land rental or its equivalent, interest on investment, the range for 1920 was very great. Some good land under a long period of rental cost. the operator only $15 per acre. On the other hand, land rented in the spring of 1920 committed the operator in some cases to as much as $84 per acre for the year. The costs of land preparation and of irrigation water also varied greatly, though probably within narrower limits than the item of land rental. On the other hand, the costs of picking and ginning were nearly if not quite the same in all cases, and the costs of most of the other labor operations were not widely different.

"The ginning experience of 1920 showed that 100 pounds of seed cotton would yield about 25 pounds of lint and 75 pounds of seed. The price of seed was somewhat uncertain, but it is hardly safe to estimate it as above $20 per ton. It is thought that the average yield in 1920 will turn out to be a little above 1,000 pounds of seed cotton per acre (0.5 bale), with many fields giving only 800 pounds and a few giving 1,600 pounds. To cover this range the cost estimates may be given for yields of 800 pounds (0.4 bale), 1,200 pounds (0.6 bale), and 1,600 pounds (0.8 bale). With these data the complete formula for determining the cost of production for any yield may be stated as follows: Divide the acre cost of production by the yield of seed cotton, to the quotient add the harvesting cost, from this sum subtract the value of the seed, and divide the remainder by the lint percentage to obtain the net cost per pound of lint. For the three yields mentioned we have the following:

1. Yield 800 pounds per sere

 - .75 - 60.4 cents.

2. Yield 1,200 pounds per acre:

$$\left\{\frac{$79.25+$5.95}{1,200}\right\}$$
 - .75 = 47.2 cents.

3. Yield 1,600 pounds per acre:

 - .75 = 40.6 cents.

"If we add to these three the formula for the half-bale yield generally estimated for the Salt River Valley we have:

4. Yield 1,000 pounds per acre:

$$\underbrace{\left\{\frac{$79,25+$5,95}{1000}\right\}}_{25} - .75$$
=52.6 cents.

"This figure may be taken as a fair statement of the average cost of production for the valley in 1920.

"It may be proper at this point to consider the problem of how Pima cotton may be produced at a lower cost in the future. This reduction in cost may be accomplished either by obtaining larger yields or by lowering the land rental and wages, or by a combination of the two. If we are entering upon a period of economic readjustment during which lower prices prevail, it is inevitable that there must be lower returns on capital invested and a lower scale of wages for labor.

"Prior to the war land rentals in the Salt River Valley ranged around $15 per acre, and the wages of farm labor were little more than half those prevailing in 1920. The prices of agricultural machinery were also much lower five years ago. It is, of course, impossible to forecast the rate or the extent of price readjustment, but it is the part of wisdom to consider seriously how to reduce production costs.

"In order to simplify this problem as much as possible, at least two basic assumptions may be made, one that Pima seed cotton will turn out 25 per cent at the gin and the other that seed will be worth $20 a ton. With these two assumptions granted, it is possible to construct a table of cost and yield relationships that will show what yields must be secured with given production costs or what production costs can be allowed with a given yield in order to obtain cotton lint at a certain price. In this table production cost is held to include all charges assignable to an acre of cotton land, such as land rental or interest and taxes; use of machinery and equipment; irrigation water; all costs of growing the crop, such as preparation of the land and planting; planting seed; labor for irrigation, cultivation, thinning and weeding; and supervision of production operations. These items in the 1920 estimate, given above, totaled closed to $80 per acre. The item in the table designated as net harvesting cost is made to include the cost of picking; hauling to gin; ginning; yardage, insurance, and association fees, picking supervision, tents, etc., less the value of the cotton seed at the gin. Thus, the net harvesting cost given in the 1920 estimate was slightly above $5 per hundred pounds of seed cotton.

"The following table shows in a striking way how the cost of the lint declines as yields increase. Thus, in the first line of the table, with a production cost of $80 per acre and a net harvesting cost of $5 per hundred pounds of seed cotton, the lint cost is 60 cents per pound when the yield is 800 pounds of seed cotton per acre and only 36 cents per pound when the yield is 2,000 pounds of seed cotton per acre. On the other hand, if it is possible to reduce the production cost to $50 per acre and the net harvesting cost to $4 per hundred, a yield of only 1,000 pounds per acre can be made at 36 cents.

Note.—In the column headed  ${}^aP^n$  the production cost is given in dollars per acre. In the column headed  ${}^aH^n$  the net harvesting cost is given in dollars per hundred pounds of seed cotton. In each yield column is given the corresponding cost of lint in cents per pound. In making these computations it is assumed that the seed cotton yields 25 per cent of lint and that the seed is worth $20 per ton.

"In considering the cost of producing upland cotton in the Southwest a somewhat different set of figures must be used. In some cases where upland cotton has been produced on less valuable land than Pima cotton the yields, in terms of seed cotton, have been approximately the same, though because of the higher ginning percentage upland has given distinctly higher lint yields. The cost of picking and ginning has been much less.

"On the other hand, the production costs, except for a possibly lower land rental, are approximately the same for the two kinds of cotton. The harvesting costs may be estimated for the season of 1920 as follows:

Harvesting cost (per 100 pounds of seed cotton, upland):  Plcking Hauling to gin Ginning, $0.35, including bag and ties Yardage, insurance, association fees Picking supervision, tents, etc	$2,00 .25 .50 .35
metal	0.0=

"From this total there may be deducted the value of the corton seed at the gin. With a ginning outturn of 33 per cent of lint there should be left 67 pounds of seed, which may be estimated as worth $20 per ton. This taken from the total harvesting cost leaves $2.58 as the net harvesting cost.

"If it is assumed that the average yield of upland seed cotton in the irrigated Southwest in 1920 was 1,000 pounds per acre. or two-thirds of a bale, and that the production cost was as much as $10 per acre less than for the Pima, because of lower land rental, we find by reference to the following table that the cost of lint would be close to 29 cents per pound.

Note.—In the column headed "P" the production cost is given in dollars per acre. In the column headed "P" the net harvesting cost is given in dollars per hundred pounds of seed cotton. In each yield column is given the corresponding cost of lint in cents per pound. In making these computations it is assumed that the seed cotton yields 33 per cent of lint and that the seed is worth $20 per ton.

"It has been the general experience for many years that cotton of 1\(\frac{1}{8}\)-inch staple, such as the Pima, is worth in the market one year with another about twice as much per pound as upland cotton of 1-inch staple. There is no good reason for expecting that this price relationship will be changed materially in the near future.

"Even in the demoralized market at the close of the year 1920, when upland cotton is worth only 12 cents to 13 cents to the grower in the Southwest, Pima cotton could be sold at better than 30 cents. Where the two kinds of cotton have been grown on the same class of land in 1920 each yielding 1,000 pounds of seed cotton per acre, equivalent to one-half of a bale of Pima and two-thirds of a bale of upland, it will be seen by reference to the two preceding cost tables that the net cost of the Pima lint is nowhere twice as much as the net cost of the upland lint. Even with the lowest production cost given in the table, $30 per acre, and allowing the corresponding net harvesting costs of $5 for Pima and $2.50 for upland, the table shows that for the 1,000-pound yield a lint cost of 32 cents for Pima and of 16.7 cents for upland. A comparison of these net costs with current market values gives no ground for changing from Pima production to the production of upland cotton.

"THE IMPORTANCE OF INCREASED YIELDS.

"The most conspicuous feature of the cotton situation in the Southwest in 1920 was the importance of getting larger yields. It was to be expected that with such a large increase in acreage much of the land planted to cotton would be found unsuited to the crop, and many of the farmers with little or no previous experience would make serious mistakes in the cultural operations, particularly in irrigation.

"It is not the purpose here to attempt to point out in detail the mistakes made in land selection or in cultural practice. It is intended rather to point out that large yields are essential to cheap production. To make this point clear one has only to study the tables given in the previous chapter. Take, for instance, the first of these which deals with Pima cotton, the first line of which shows a production cost of $80 per acre and a net harvesting cost of $5 per hundred pounds of seed cotton. When the yield is 800 pounds per acre the net cost of lint is shown to be 60 cents per pound, while a yield of 2,000 pounds of seed cotton per acre, not an unusual yield for good land and good care, shows a net cost of only 36 cents per pound of lint.

"This matter can be stated in another way. Supposing there were two farmers growing cotton with a scale of harvesting costs that would net $5 per hundred pounds of seed cotton and with a market outlet at 35 cents per pound for the lint, so that they would aim to make the crop for at least 33.3 cents per pound. If one of them should so handle his operations as to make a crop of 1,200 pounds of seed cotton while his neighbor with more skill or better land made 1,800 pounds per acre, the first farmer would get only $40 per acre to cover production costs and land rental, while the other would have $60 to apply on the same account.

"Some of the land in the Salt River Valley, for instance, is not well suited to cotton because of some inherent quality, such as alkali or liability to root rot. But for the most part, the low yields that have been obtained have been due either to adverse climatic conditions, improper cultural management, or lack of suitable crop rotation. Of these difficulties the two last named may be overcome and doubtless will be in large measure, as experience is accumulated.

" THE CLIMATIC DIFFICULTIES.

"The cotton crop in the Southwest is subject to the hazards of climate no less than in the eastern cotton belt. Cold weather in the early spring, rain that crusts the ground after the crop is planted, wind and hail during the growing season, excessively hot weather during the flowering period, an occasional water shortage during the critical months of late summer when the crop is making, and early autumn frosts make up a formidable array of hazards. Add to these plant lice and cotton stainers, with an occasional epidemic of 'black arm,' and there are surely troubles enough.

"Fortunately, however, it is unlikely that all these adversities will occur in any one season. And there is one outstanding advantage, the season of the cotton harvest is seldom rainy or windy, so that field damage is relatively slight.

"The season of 1920 was characterized by a cold, late spring, followed by a period of favorable growing weather which was in turn followed by a period of excessive heat. The first killing frost in the autumn did not come until near the end of November, except in the San Joaquin Valley, where a killing frost occurred on October 31.

"In other seasons there have been killing frosts in all the southwestern valleys as early in the fall as was the case in the San Joaquin Valley this year. When a killing frost occurs it stops the growth of the cotton plant, but it does not ordinarily injure the bolls that are nearly or quite mature, but have not yet opened. It is the usual thing for these bolls that are full-sized, but green at the time of frost, to burst open within a week or 10 days after the frost, so that the final picking can be made.

"In the San Joaquin Valley this season it was observed that the normal frost opening did not occur, particularly on the lower lands of the valley. On the higher lands the early frost was less severe, and the weather after the frost was drier and nearly normal frost-opening occurred. On the lower lands, however, fields seen a month after the frost showed very little frost-opening. A few bolls on the upper part of the plant had cracked at the tip but had not fluffed out so as to permit easy picking, while the bolls on the lower part of the plant where the bulk of the crop was borne had not cracked at all.

"In seeking an explanation of this phenomenon it was learned that the weather in the valley during November had been unusually humid. There had been a number of rainy and cloudy days, and also many days in which the morning fog had hung over the valley bottom until well into the middle of the day. The humidity record of the Weather Bureau station at Fresno shows that the month of November, 1920, was more humid than normal, while the same month in 1919 was less humid than normal. The significant data are given in the following table. "Dry-bulb temperatures in degrees F., and relative humidity in per cent for November, 1919, and November, 1920, and the normal relative humidity for the month, as reported from the Weather Bureau station at Fresno, Calif. Station located 89 feet above the ground:

	Dry bulb.		Relative humidity, per cent.
	5 a. m.	Local noon.	5 p. m.	5 a. m.	Local noon.	5 p. m.
November, 1919, mean November, 1920, mean Normal.	43. 1 46. 9	61. 1 60. 1	62, 3 60. 0	59. 4 84. 4 78. 3	.35. 9 55. 7 49. 2	31. 5 57. 5 48. 0

"This delayed opening of the bolls was observed on both Pima and upland cotton, and if such conditions are found to be of frequent occurrence they may constitute a serious obstacle to the extension of cotton production in the lower part of the valley, where the cheaper land and cheaper irrigation water would otherwise favor such extension. This autumn humidity, if it proves to be a serious obstacle to cotton production, is the more to be regretted, because the climatic conditions of the summer appear to be particularly favorable to heavy fruiting of cotton. It has been observed that cotton plants of both types are more fruitful in the San Joaquin Valley than in the other valleys of the Southwest. They seem to produce more flowers and a larger proportion of the flowers develop into bolls than is the case in the other valleys.

"It is probable that this greater fruitfulness is associated with the less extreme summer temperatures, though other factors may be involved. It is clear that there is ordinarily much less boll shedding in the San Joaquin Valley than in the other southwestern valleys.

"BOLL SHEDDING.

"The flower of the cotton plant is borne at the node of a fruiting branch, the flower pedicle being attached to the node close to one side of axil of the leaf. When the plant is subjected to certain adverse conditions during the flowering period, the flower bud, the flower, or the young boll may be dropped off the plant by a process similar to that by which mature leaves are dropped from deciduous plants. This reaction is known as boll shedding, and is one of the chief causes of reduced yields in the Southwest. The exact cause of boll shedding is not yet definitely known. It is believed to result from a combination of high temperatures and a sudden change in the water supply available to the plant.

"It has been observed that upland cotton reacts more quickly to the conditions that cause shedding than Pima cotton, but, on the other hand, when these conditions become particularly severe the final loss to the Pima cotton is likely to be greater than to upland cotton. This may be explained by the capacity of the upland cotton to recover more quickly than Pima cotton and put on more fruit late in the season when conditions are more favorable.

"Boll shedding was so severe on Pima cotton in 1920 as to attract general attention. It is estimated that in some cases fully half the potential crop was lost in this way. In many fields the plants had practically no fruit on the lower branches, and the first few nodes on the branches near the middle of the plant had lost their fruit.

"The outstanding characteristic of the Pima cotton in the San Joaquin Valley was that the fruit was held on the lower branches as well as on the upper ones. Though final maturity was checked by an early frost, the crop was on the plants. The plants in the San Joaquin Valley bore fruiting branches at the eighth or ninth node of the main stem, and these lower branches held their crop. In the Imperial and Salt River Val-leys, on the other hand, few plants bore fruiting branches below the sixteenth node, and often these lower branches were bare of fruit.

"There was sufficient uniformity in the plant reactions in the different valleys to indicate that climatic rather than cultural differences were primarily responsible. But there were sufficient differences from field to field in the same section to indicate that the adverse effect of climatic conditions could be minimized, to some extent at least, by the proper cultural Just what this proper cultural practice is remains to be determined. It is probably to be sought in the matter of irrigation. There is some reason for believing that if the irrigation water is so applied that the plants do not suffer for water during excessively hot weather in the flowering period the tendency to shed the fruit may be checked. There is probably a soil relationship as well—that is, a soil that is very permeable and has at the same time a relatively high water-holding capacity, so that the extremes of available moisture supply are less acute, may be found to have a restraining effect on boll shedding.

"If it should be found that more uniform soil moisture conditions during the flowering period actually offsets to some extent the injurious effects of very hot weather, it would be important to avoid overdoing the remedy. During the early years of Pima cotton production it was observed that farmers were inclined to give the crop too much water during the early period Too much irrigation early in the season appears to stimulate the vegetative growth of the plants at the expense of fruit production, and to increase also the difficulty of picking, because of the larger size of the plants. It may be possible to restrict irrigation early in the season before flowering time, thus checking excessive vegetative growth, and then irrigate frequently enough during the flowering and fruiting period, and particularly during the times of very hot weather, so as to check boll shedding, without forcing the plants into too much growth. Experiments to determine this point would seem to be well worth while; for, as the matter stands at present, boll shedding is a very serious factor in reducing yields in the irrigated Southwest, and cotton producers must find a way of getting larger yields if profitable crops are to be made under present economic conditions.

"COTTON PRODUCTION AND OTHER CROP INDUSTRIES.

"It is a well-recognized fact that cotton production can not be continued on the same land for an indefinite number of years without a decline in yield. It is not possible, however, to predict the rate of decline in any given case. On some land, naturally rich, the rate of decline would probably be slow. In some cases as many as eight successive crops have been grown with the last one showing no serious signs of distress. In other cases the second or third successive crop has shown a marked decline in productivity.

"When cotton was first proposed as a crop for the Southwest it was thought that in case it proved profitable it might come to occupy as much as 25 per cent or even 30 per cent of the cropped land. With this proportion of the land in cotton it was thought that a satisfactory system of crop rotation could be worked out, including alfalfa, grain, and truck crops. The profitable production of grain and alfalfa in the irrigated Southwest presupposes the feeding of live stock on the farms, for these commodities are too bulky to justify long shipment to market. Live-stock production, in itself ordinarily profitable, also gives a by-product of farm manure which if used on cotton land greatly increases

"The abnormal prices for cotton during and since the war have stimulated cotton production to such an extent that in the Salt River Valley at least the cotton acreage in 1920 was nearly equal to the combined acreage of all other crops. It is hardly to be expected that such a large proportion of the land in this valley will be put in cotton again in the near future. Already plans are being made to put some of the cotton land back into alfalfa and more of it will doubtless go into grain sorghums next summer. But such crops are profitable only if fed to live stock on or near the project, and at the present time the live stock population of the Salt River Valley is not large enough to consume much more alfalfa and grain than is now grown.

"The obvious need for the welfare of that valley is to increase its live-stock population, but that is another story.

"The present discussion of cotton in relation to other crop industries may be limited to pointing out two important considerations, namely, these other industries should be profitable in themselves and not used solely or too largely as a means of maintaining cotton yields and thus stand, in a measure, as an expense against the cotton crop; and cotton can not be grown continuously and profitably under conditions where its essential associated crops, such as alfalfa and grain, can not be grown at a profit on their own account. This second consideration is intended to apply to those sections where, because of recent high prices, cotton production has been undertaken with land and water costs so high that the production of alfalfa and grain is conceded to be out of the question.

"SYNDICATED COTTON PRODUCTION.

"The term 'syndicated production' is used here in reference to large scale production operations, whether individual, partnership, or corporate, as to management. When a single organization operates several thousand acres, all or chiefly in a crop like cotton, it has to deal with problems which differ in important espects from those of a farmer operating 100 acres or less. In the irrigated Southwest there are a number of cases where as much as 5,000 acres and even 10,000 acres of land is operated under a single management.

"There is, of course, nothing very unusual in this so far as size alone is concerned; the unusual feature lies in the fact that almost without exception those who are managing these large producing enterprises have had no previous experience or training in such work. Some of them may have had some farming experience and some of them have had experience in large-scale operations in other lines, but for most of them, if not for all of them, large-scale cotton production is a new experience. The remarkable thing, then, about these syndicated enterprises is not that serious mistakes and miscalculations have been made in their management, but that they have been even passably successful.

"These syndicated production enterprises, particularly those inaugurated by interests associated with the manufacture or use of cotton, have served one very useful purpose: They have given the farmers and bankers of the Southwest confidence in the ultimate stability of the market for cotton. These farmers and bankers, some of whom were at first skeptical as to whether there would be a satisfactory and continuing market for cotton, saw no further occasion for doubt on this point when the ultimate consumer began to invest large sums of money in produc-

"There is no very obvious reason why cotton can not be produced on a large scale nearly or quite as efficiently and economically as on a small scale. But this can not be done if the large-scale producer does not know or disregards the fundamental agronomic or economic principles of cotton farming. Without undertaking to formulate all these fundamental principles, the following may be set down as among the more important for the cases under consideration:

"1. The average cotton farm is not very profitable and the large enterprise must get better than average yields at little if any more than average production costs if it is to return a profit on the investment.

2. Expensive overhead costs must be avoided and labor must be continuously and effectively employed.

"3. Cotton must be grown in rotation with other crops if yields are to be maintained and labor and equipment effectively utilized.

"4. The other crops grown in connection with cotton for purposes of rotation must be so produced and utilized as to return t least a small profit on their own account and not stand as a liability against the cotton crop.

"5. The whole operation should be so conceived and conducted as to pay a reasonable return on the investment over a period of years and not so as to have to look for ultimate profit to an increase in land values.

"It may be urged that most of the actual profits that have been made in American farming have been derived from the progressive increase in land prices and not from the difference between production cost and crop returns. But it would be unsound economies to hold that the increase in land prices can go on indefinitely. There is reason for believing that in some sections of the country it has already gone too far.

"There may be a justification for syndicated cotton production when undertaken by cotton manufacturers which would not hold for others. This lies in the fact that certain users of cotton have such specialized requirements and their needs are so exigent that they can not afford to depend for their supplies of raw material on the hazards of a fluctuating market or the whims of a group of farmers who may change from one kind of cotton to another in a season or two. In such a case the cotton manufacturer might be justified in undertaking to produce all, or at least a large part, of the cotton he required, not so much because he could hope to do so cheaper than it could be done by farmers but because he could thereby reduce the hazards of his business.

"RELATIONS OF MANUFACTURERS TO COTTON PRODUCERS.

"One of the outstanding features of cotton production in the United States has been that cotton manufacturers have not maintained close relationships with cotton producers. Until recent years the two were completely separated geographically, cotton manufacturing being done almost wholly in New England or overseas. Within the last few years a number of cotton-manufacturing plants have been built in the South, but even these are quite as likely to draw their supplies of cotton from distant parts of the cotton belt as from near by.

"The producers of cotton and the users of the raw material have had almost no direct dealings with each other. The gap has been bridged by an elaborate system of middlemen. These middlemen have served, and doubtless continue to serve, many useful purposes, but they have also acted as a very effective insulation between the producers and manufacturers of cotton. It is very largely because of this insulation that the special needs and the ultimate discriminations of the manufacturers have been so slow in finding their way back to the producer.

"While the manufacturers of cotton have not maintained direct relationships with the producer, the manufacturers of cottonseed products have taken a different course. They have built their plants in the very midst of the cotton fields, and in many cases have built and operated ginning plants for the use of the farmers. Through these ginning plants the seed manufacturers have been able to establish direct relations with the producer. They have largely determined the kind of cotton that should be planted, because they have had planting seed to sell, and they have in many cases acted as the agents through whom the farmer secured credit for the production of his crop. Because of this advantage of position the cottonseed-oil man has been in position to influence the farmer in certain important matters. Were it to his interest to do so, he might exert a powerful influence in such matters as clean picking and better baling.

"This important advantage of position has only recently been appreciated by a few cotton manufacturers. These have begun, particularly in the Southwest, to establish gins, to furnish planting seed, to provide credit for growing the crop, and in some cases to contract in advance for the lint produced. This course of procedure may come to be regarded as an alternative to syndicated production. It has the advantage of being cheaper to undertake and of being less likely to result in serious

"The service of establishing and operating a cotton-ginning plant and providing of credit for crop production partakes somewhat of the character and involves some of the responsibilities of a public service. Because of that fact, persons thus engaged are in a measure subject to public regulation, and unless the business is conducted in a satisfactory manner it will not be possible to exercise much influence through such agencies. If a cotton manufacturer aims to use these agencies as a means of obtaining a fairly constant supply of a certain type of cotton, he must so conduct them as to retain the confidence and good will of his patrons. This should not be a very difficult matter, particularly if he is prepared to operate this part of his business at a small profit or even at a small loss in order to provide himself with a continuing supply of cotton. Probably the most important feature of such an arrangement as the one outlined is the opportunity to provide cotton growers with planting seed. The kind of seed planted very largely determines the kind of cotton obtained, and it is upon the proper management of the ginning business that the purity and value of the seed supply depends.

"SEED SUPPLIES.

"Certain differences between Pima cotton and the upland varieties grown in the Southwest have already been mentioned. None of these differences is more marked than is the contrast as regards seed supply. Ever since Pima cotton was first grown in the Salt River Valley the matter of maintaining the purity of the seed has been given most serious consideration. A group of farmers organized under the somewhat inappropriate name of the Tempe Cotton Exchange has assumed responsible leadership in supervising the production and distribution of planting seed. They have operated one 10-stand gin at Tempe, which has ginned only cotton from selected fields intended to supply seed. The seed is delinted and bagged at the gin and stored in a concrete warehouse. Each bag of seed is stamped with the variety name and the association mark, and it is now planned to ticket each bag with a certificate of inspection provided by the county agent.

"The records of field production of the seed supply are so handled that each bag of seed bears a number which shows when that particular stock of seed was inspected in the field to insure its purity. The system of field roguing and inspection has been described in detail elsewhere and need not be further mentioned here. During the past two seasons it has been necessary for the Southwest Cotton Co. to assist the Tempe Exchange in ginning and storing the seed supply. The capacity of the exchange gin is only about two and a half million pounds of seed, which has not been enough to supply the demand in the Salt River Valley and the other sections of the Southwest. In the spring of 1920 the demand for seed was so great that all of the pure seed was used for the first planting. The spring weather was cold and more than the usual replanting was required. As a result it was necessary to use some seed that had been run into oil-mill warehouses. Although this oil-mill seed was all grown locally, and therefore reasonably pure, there was enough seed in it of hybrid origin so that hybrid and off-type plants could be seen in every field in which it was used. year's experience is a striking demonstration of the importance of guarding the seed supply continuously, even in a community where no other type of cotton is grown.

"It is hard to describe the seed supply situation in the upland cotton districts. There have been supplies of pure seed in these sections in time past. There was at one time a large supply of Durango seed and shipments of pure seed of other varieties have been brought in from time to time. These stocks have been so effectively mixed at the gins that it is now almost impossible to distinguish them. This mixture of varieties would be much less serious if it were possible to bring in new supplies of seed, but the danger of insect invasion is so great that it has been necessary to prohibit the westward movement of seed.

"The effect of this general mixture of the upland varieties has been shown both in decreased yields and in reduced prices for the lint. For several years the upland cotton from the irrigated Southwest sold at a premium over similar eastern cotton because of its bright color. Recently, however, there has been a pronounced tendency to discriminate against it because of the irregularity in length of staple, despite its better grade.

"If there is to be maintained a continuing production of upland cotton in the Southwest it seems clear that some provision must be made to produce locally a supply of better planting seed than that now available. In fact, it would seem that one of the best reasons for continuing to grow upland cotton on high-priced irrigated land would be found in the production of pure stocks of planting seed to ship to the main cotton belt. One of the serious problems in the east is that in wet seasons the seed loses its vitality before planting time. In this respect the seed from the dry western valleys would have a very great advantage.

"FINANCING AND MARKETING THE CROP.

"It may be assumed from the figures given in preceding pages that the cotton crop of the irrigated Southwest in 1920 will turn out about 120,000 bales of Pima cotton, about 160,000 bales of upland cotton, and about 170,000 tons of seed, and that the production and harvesting of this crop up to the time it is ready for market will involve the use of money or credit to the sum of about $50,000,000. This money or credit is chiefly supplied through the local banks.

"In the case of the Salt River Valley alone the total investment in the production and harvesting of the Pima crop must be not less than $20,000,000. The bank resources of Phoenix, the financial center of the valley, were reported in the recent census as $27,500,000. Clearly the financing of the production of the cotton crop is among the most important of the problems of the Phoenix bankers. The daily interest charge on the money invested in the Salt River Valley cotton crop this year is something over $4,000. With the turn of the year new calls must be met for funds for the next season's operations and other crops and industries demand credit accommodations, for only about half the acreage of the valley is devoted to cotton. The 1920 cotton crop must be placed on another credit basis, "In the last two or three seasons the cotton crop was much smaller in amount, if not much less in aggregate value, and buyers from the east were bidding for it actively as it came from the gins. This season buyers are holding off. Some cotton has been consigned to eastern points on credit advances ranging from $175 per bale down to $100 per bale for Pima. These advances were not sufficient, in some cases at least, to release the cotton from the obligations already made against it. This situation was rapidly becoming serious in the latter part of November and continues so. It is receiving, as it deserves, the serious attention of the best minds in the community, and in this, as in other difficulties that have been met and overcome, there is a spirit of community action and community confidence that is indomitable.

"In conclusion it may be said that while the production of cotton under irrigation in the Southwest has scarcely yet passed beyond the experimental stage, it has been given a fair trial. The present indications are that it will be continued, though probably on a reduced scale, for the next few years. The experiment has gone far enough to demonstrate that good cotton can be grown, that varietal purity and high quality of product can be maintained where proper attention is given to the matter of seed supplies. At present it is doubtful if there is another crop that could be extensively substituted for cotton that would give better returns for the labor and capital invested.'

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.
Mr. McKELLAR. I notice that the Senator's amendment is to increase the duty on cotton 20 per cent.

Mr. ASHURST. The amendment proposes to increase the Mr. ASHURST.

duty from 7 cents a pound to 20 cents a pound.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. I am informed that the provision of the bill making the duty applicable only to cotton having a staple of 13 inches or more in length will exclude but very little Egyptian cotton; that the greater part of the Egyptian cotton that comes to this country now has a staple of less than 1s inches in length. If that is true, it would be immaterial what the tariff is on cotton if the length of staple covered by the bill is so great that Egyptian cotton would not be

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct. On this point I now read again from the Government publication entitled "Cotton Production in Southwest:"

This variety-

That is, our southwestern cotton grown on irrigated landproduces a fiber 13 to 15 inches in length.

I introduced an amendment to the emergency tariff bill last February proposing to strike out the fraction "three-eighths" and insert "one-eighth," so that if the bill should pass the cotton growers of the Southwest, who were so distressed, might obtain some relief. I voted for the bill in the vain hope that the psychological effect might be of some value to the cotton growers, but it would have been practically of no benefit, first, because the duty was too low and, secondly, because the figures " $1\frac{1}{3}$ " should have read " $1\frac{1}{3}$ " or " $1\frac{1}{2}$ ."

Mr. McKellar. One and one-eighth would be better. A great deal of cotton similar to that which is raised in the Senator's State is raised in the Mississippi Delta just below where I live, and a great deal is also produced in Florida, some in South Carolina, and probably in other portions of the country to a small extent; but none of this long-staple cotton will be benefited in any way if the 1½-inch provision is permitted to remain in the bill. It would make no difference how high the tariff duty is on it if no Egyptian cotton were kept ASHURST. The production of sea-island cotton last year dwindled to 1,725 bales-400-pound bales, I believe. The length of fiber as at present prescribed in the bill might give some relief to the growers of those 1,725 bales; that would be about all.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I will state that, having in view the contention made by the Senator from Tennessee, I have proposed an amendment to make the length of staple 11 inches instead of 13 inches. I have an amendment of that kind pending.

Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. President, if the Senator from Arizona will yield further, as I understand the situation, the present wording of this bill is unimportant in so far as long-staple cotton produced in the United States is concerned, for long-staple cotton will be admitted under the terms of Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. My understanding is that practically no Egyptian cotton is of 18-inch staple.

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The great body of the Egyptian cotton that comes over here under the law as it is now has a staple less than 13 inches in length, and, therefore, the pending bill would not affect it.

Mr. ASHURST. In other words, the Senator makes the point that with the figures as they are no relief would be granted

Mr. McKELLAR. Substantially no relief would be granted at all. Unless the provision shall be changed the cotton producers may as well understand that they will get no relief under

Mr. ASHURST. Let me repeat on that very point that in the last Congress I introduced an amendment changing the figures from 18 to 18, but, while the amendment was adopted in the Senate, it was defeated in conference.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield; yes, sir.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Did I understand the Senator to say a moment ago that there are about 1,700 bales of cotton raised in this country which would be protected by the 1%-inch provision?

Mr. ASHURST. I must make myself clear, and I will answer the Senator in this way.

Sea-island cotton-which is grown on the coast of the Carolinas and Florida, on the islands near the coast-is of a long staple or long fiber. In 1915 there were produced of that variety 111,716 bales. The next year, 1916, there were produced 117,559 bales. In 1917 there were produced 92,619 bales. In 1918 there were produced 52,208 bales. In 1919 there were produced only 6.916 bales. In 1920 the production of sea-island cotton shrank to 1,725 bales. I believe these are 400-pound In other words, in five years, from a production of 111,716 bales, sea-island cotton production shrank to 1,725 bales. This sea-island production was practically wiped out, but hundreds of thousands of bales of long-staple cotton have been pouring in from Egypt, which, of course, enters directly into competition with the Pima or Arizona Egyptian cotton.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Of what length of staple is the sea-island cotton the production of which has dwindled to 1,700 bales-1$ inches or greater?

Mr. ASHURST. I should not say it was greater. Some of it is not much greater, but it ranges from 11 to 19.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Does the Senator attribute the dwindling of that industry to the absence of protection?

Mr. ASHURST. No. That was caused by the boll weevil.
Mr. WOLCOTT. There must be some other cause, because it is common knowledge that in 1920, the year of smallest production, cotton prices were perhaps higher than ever before in history, and back in those other years when the production was so great that they were able to make money on a much lower price for the cotton.

Mr. ASHURST. I believe this dwindling of the production of sea-island cotton has been brought about by the boll weevil.

Am I correct in that?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have been so informed. I call the Senator's attention to paragraph 17 of the bill, which puts a tariff of 7 cents per pound on the manufactured goods.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. If we are correct about Egyptian cotton being prevented from coming in under section 16, that would mean that we are putting a tariff on the manufactures of Egyptian cotton to the absolute exclusion of American cotton.

Mr. ASHURST. That is one of the quarrels I have with the bill. After proposing to place a duty of 7 cents per pound on the raw material, we find that the manufacturers are going to absorb the benefit of it, because the very next paragraph, as the Senator points out, reads:

Manufactures of which cotton of the kind provided for in paragraph 16 is the component material of chief value, 7 cents per pound, in addition to the rates of duty imposed thereon by existing law.

Of course, we should move to strike out that paragraph, otherwise the bill would simply be for the benefit of the manufacturers instead of the producers.

Mr. President, I shall now read from a brief submitted to the chairman of the subcommittee on cotton of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives. This brief was prepared by Mr. Dwight B. Heard, of Phoenix, Ariz., who represented the Chamber of Commerce and the Cotton Growers Association, and it is so clear and so complete, with material facts and data, that I am sure Senators who are interested in this subject will be enlightened. It is addressed to Hon. WILLIAM R. GREEN, chairman subcommittee on cotton, Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives, and is as

Hon. WILLIAM R. GREEN,

Chairman Subcommittee on Cotton,

Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

Sir: Availing of your suggestion that I present in concise form a statement in behalf of the needs of the producers of American Egyptian cotton, I present the following:

STATEMENT BY DWIGHT B. HEARD, OF PHOENIX, ARIZ., REPRESENTING THE ARIZONA EGYPTIAN COTTON GROWERS' ASSOCIATION, THE PHOENIX (ARIZ.) CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, AND THE PHOENIX CLEARING HOUSE ASSOCIATION, AS TO THE NEED OF A PROTECTIVE TARIFF ON AMERICAN EGYPTIAN OR PIMA LONG-STAPLE COTTON.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT.

The American Egyptian or Pima long-staple cotton industry, which during the past 15 years has developed as an essential national industry, now faces destruction through competition with cotton of similar type produced by the present labor of Egypt on a present wage scale of 40 cents per day for a 12-hour day.

This Egyptian long-staple cotton is now being laid down at New England spinning points at 26 cents per pound, almost exactly one-half the estimated production cost of last year's exactly one-half the estimated production cost of last year's American Egyptian crop, as per a report recently furnished

Congress by Mr. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture. In the season of 1919-20, 485,000 bales of Egyptian cotton were imported into the United States as compared with an average importation for the previous five years of 202,000 bales. It is conservatively estimated that 70 per cent of this importation was Sakellaridis cotton, the type principally used for the manufacture of tire yarns and with which the American-grown Egyptian cotton comes in direct competition.

The standard of living of the Egyptian peasants who furnish the labor in the cotton fields of Egypt is vastly inferior to an American standard of living. This peasant labor is exceptionally efficient. These Egyptian laborers at the price of 40 cents per day work from sunrise to sunset, while in Arizona, where 85 per cent of the American Egyptian crop is grown, the cost of field labor for a 9-hour day in 1920 was $3. It is estimated that in 1921 this will be reduced to $2-still more than five times as large as the Egyptian wage, in view of the shorter hours in Arizona.

It is conservatively estimated that one-third of the cost of the production of long-staple cotton is involved in the picking. The cost of picking cotton in Egypt in 1920, according to the best information available, was less than $10 per 500-pound bale; while in Arizona the cost of picking the same size bale was $80. This situation presents an intolerable condition which can only be remedied by the reasonable protection asked. Officials of the United States Department of Agriculture have recently estimated that the cost of producing American Egyptian Pima cotton in Arizona in 1920, on the basis of a yield of half bale to the acre, was 52.6 cents. The attached statements from well-informed Arizona growers show an estimated average cost of production in 1921 of approximately 41 cents. According to the most recent market quotations, Old World Egyptian cotton of the Sakellaridis variety, the type which most nearly corresponds to the America Pima, and which comprises about 70 per cent of the import from Egypt, is being laid down in New Bed-ford for 26 cents per pound. The duty asked for by American producers to maintain this industry on a living basis is but 20 cents per pound. It is evident that unless the relief asked for through a protective tariff is promptly granted the industry built up through 20 years' cooperation with the United States Department of Agriculture faces destruction.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN EGYPTIAN COTTON.

Pima cotton was originated and developed by the Department of Agriculture as a result of plant-breeding work carried on in Arizona since 1902. A strikingly superior individual plant, selected in 1910 at the Government experimental station at Sacaton on the Pima Indian Reservation in southern Arizona. was the parent of the Pima variety, of which 250,000 acres were grown in 1920 in Arizona and California. It is an interesting conincidence that the plant which gave rise to the Sakellaridis variety, the principal competitor of Pima, was discovered in Egypt in the same year, 1910.

Pima cotton can be successfully grown only on the irrigated lands of southern Arizona and California, where the climatic and soil conditions have proven to be exceptionally favorable for the growth of this type, which is not adapted to conditions in the eastern cotton belt.

The Pima cotton has an average length of staple of 15 inches and is maintained in a high state of uniformity by careful seed ment of Agriculture. It is used in the manufacture of fine dress goods, hosiery, and sewing thread; but principally in automobile-tire fabrics. It is estimated that 80 per cent of the Pima crop in recent years has been used for this last purpose. In all these classes of manufacture the American-grown Egyptian cotton is in direct competition with Sakellaridis cotton imported from Egypt.

DECLINING SEA-ISLAND PRODUCTION MAKES PIMA ESSENTIAL TO NATIONAL DEFENSE.

During the recent war exhaustive Government tests showed that the Pima cotton was a thoroughly satisfactory substitute for sea-island cotton in the manufacture of airplane wings and balloon cloth, and during the last year of the war large quantities of cloth were manufactured from Pima cotton and successfully used in the air work. The first tests of Pima cotton for this work were made at the suggestion of the Department of Agriculture, which pointed out that with the rapid advance of the boll weevil the sea-island crop might be suddenly wiped out and that a substitute must be found if possible in an American-grown cotton. Since Arizona and California are well isolated from the boll-weevil district and were already producing a cotton of extra long staple and great uniformity, which was known to be capable of substitution for sea-island. an extension of Pima cotton growing in that region appeared to be a military necessity, and for that reason was especially encouraged by the Department of Agriculture in the war period. The figures given in the table showing the production of seaisland and American-Egyptian cottons during the last five years make it clear that the Department of Agriculture was thoroughly justified in calling attention to the necessity of a substitute for sea-island cotton, which now has almost disappeared from cultivation. If the war had been prolonged even for another year the Pima cotton would have become the sole reliance for this vital purpose.

Partly as a result of stimulation by the Government during the war the acreage of Pima cotton has been greatly expanded during the past two years, and with the sudden slump in the market in 1920 the growers have been left with fully 90 per cent of their last crop unsold. The danger is very great that unless adequate protection is furnished against the competition of cheaply grown foreign cotton this highly specialized cotton, which recent experience has shown to be essential to the national defense, will disappear.

With the sea-island cotton practically gone, this country would be entirely dependent on foreign sources of supply.

COST OF PRODUCTION.

In a very carefully prepared statement recently issued by Mr. C. S. Scofield, of the United States Department of Agriculture, based on a yield of a half bale to the acre in the Salt River Valley of Arizona, where about 85 per cent of the Pima cotton is produced, a production cost is shown for the season of 1920 of 52.6 cents per pound. Owing to reductions which have already occurred in the price of field labor and estimated reductions which are anticipated in the cost of picking and ginning Pima cotton for next season, it is estimated that the cost of production in 1921 on the basis of a half bale to the acre will be at least 42 cents.

It will be observed that if the 20 cents per pound tariff asked for is added to the present delivered price of Egyptian Sakellaridis cotton in New England the American grower would make only a very small profit above cost of production. It is hoped by this legislation to stabilize the price of American-Egyptian Pima cotton so as to justify continuing the American industry selection, under the supervision of the United States Depart- based on a price of approximately 50 cents to the producer.

The attached statements, Exhibits A, B, and C, of estimated cost of production in the Salt River Valley of Arizona for 1921, made by Mr. W. S. Stevens, president of the Arizona American-Egyptian Cotton Growers' Association, Mr. Charles M. Smith, a grower who keeps exceptionally accurate records, and the writer, who has grown this type of cotton for the past five years, are presented for the purpose of giving detailed estimates as to the cost of production for 1921.

On the Salt River Valley reclamation project in Arizona 186,000 acres were farmed in Pima cotton in 1920, on which a crop of seventy-two thousand 500-pound bales was produced. Confronted as they have been during the recent months with a price for this cotton far below its cost of production, the majority of the producers, through the assistance of the banks, have held on to their cotton, anticipating a relief from the existing situation, and it is estimated that 67,000 bales of this crop still remain in the hands of the producers. This situation illustrates the urgent need for immediate relief.

The emergency tariff bill, as passed by the House of Representatives on April 15, 1921, and now before the Committee of Finance of the Senate, in paragraph 16 contains the following clause as to the protective duty on long-staple cotton:

Cotton having a staple of 11 inches or more in length, 7 cents per pound.

It is evident that the above is not adequate to protect this industry on the basis of American standards of living. In the report of April 13, 1921, in connection with the emergency tariff bill, on page 20, the Bureau of Markets of the Department of Agriculture definitely recommends a duty of not less than 10 cents per pound, making the following statements:

10 cents per pound, making the following statements:

(4) Large areas of land in this country are available for the production of extra staple cotton, but because of the costs of reclamation, irrigation, and the higher standards of living and cost of labor, the cost of production of such cotton in the United States is high and our producers need a protective tariff to equalize the cost of production abroad with that in the United, States.

(6) In the table following are presented quotations on the selling price of Sakellaridis Egyptian and American Egyptian cottons. It will be observed that on March 15 the price of fully good Sakellaridis was 35% cents and good fair Sakellaridis 26% cents, c. i. f., landed Boston, and that American Egyptian cotton of No. 2 grade was quoted at 26% cents, and No. 3 grade at 25% cents, landed Boston. Such prices are far below the estimated cost of production of cotton in Arizona and California. It should be further pointed out that from the table the prices of good fair Sakellaridis and No. 2 Arizona Egyptian have been practically identical since November 13 last. In other words, the price of good fair Sakellaridis seems to fix the price of American Egyptian cotton.

(9) Producers of long-staple cotton have faced adverse market conditions in the sale of last year's crop and are said to have on hand a large part of last year's production. Accordingly, it is believed that the producer would receive the benefit of whatever protection that might be conferred by the proposed tariff measure.

I am presenting the foregoing statement at the request of the

I am presenting the foregoing statement at the request of the Arizona American Egyptian Cotton Growers' Association, the Phoenix Chamber of Commerce, and the Clearing House Associa-tion of Phoenix, whose letters in this connection are attached herewith. In this statement I have endeavored to present figures and facts as to this industry whose existence is so seriously threatened, and in view of the fact that through some misunderstanding the producers of American-Egyptian cotton had no opportunity to present their case before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House I trust opportunity may be found before the emergency bill passes the Senate to increase the duty on long-staple cotton from 7 cents to the 20 cents so urgently needed.

My Dear Mr. Heard:

There is such a wide difference in the ideas of rental values that I have eliminated this altogether, considering a man that is working on payment of one-fourth of his crop as rent. I have eliminated, as far as possible, the question of diversified farming, in that a portion of the crops produced might be used in feeding and caring for the stock of the grower. I am taking as a basis an exceptionally good man with an exceptionally good team, and giving him all the land that such a man can possibly handle under favorable circumstances, which is 50 acres. I am considering that this man and his one team must do all the work of preparing and planting, cultivating, supervising, picking, and deliver the cotton to the gin. In handling this acreage, he will have no time whatever to do any hoeing or irrigating. This is pro-

Hon. J. W. Fordney, Chairman Ways and Means Committee, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: From the standpoint of safeguarding the financial interests of the Salt River Valley of Arizona, the Phoenix Clearing House Association is vitally interested in the proposal to enact a protective tariff on American Egyptian Pima long-staple cotton. This is a special type of cotton developed by the United States Department of Agriculture through an experimental stage of 12 years or more, and which has become known to the cotton trade at large as the equal of any cotton in the world. This type of cotton has been extensively used for the manufacture of tire fabric on account of its superior length of staple and high tensile strength.

Last year in the Salt River Valley 185,000 acres were planted to long-staple cotton with a resulting yield of more than 72,000 bales. Estimates place the cost of last year's crop at about 60 cents per pound.

Estimates place the cost of last year's crop at about 60 cents per pound.

No general market has so far developed for the staple, and the few sales made during recent weeks have ranged from 24 to 30 cents per pound, basis No. 2.

Salt River Valley is especially adapted to the growing of long-staple cotton; the cultivation of this staple is restricted to a few valleys in the Southwest, where the length of the growing season permits the development of the fiber and general cultural conditions are favorable. It seems important that some steps be taken to insure the permanence of this new industry in the Southwest, which is just beginning to supply a growing demand for this superior type of cotton.

In order that the industry may survive the growers of Arizona and California need the benefit of a protective tariff of a sufficient amount to enable them to compete with Egyptian Sakellarides cotton, produced in Egypt by native labor on a wage scale entirely out of harmony with the American standard of living.

The Phoenix Clearing House Association, in special meeting, hereby carnestly advocates the adoption of a protective tariff on American Egyptian Pima long-staple cotton of 20 cents per pound.

Mr. Dwight B. Heard, representing the Arizona American Egyptian Cotton Growers' Association and the Phoenix Chamber of Commerce, will appear before your committee in behalf of the foregoing proposal. Mr. Heard is fully qualified to speak for the cotton growers of the Southwest, and we bespeak for him your most favorable consideration.

Yours, respectfully.

The Phoenix Clearing House Association, By B. E. Moore, Vice President.

THE PHOENIX CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, Phoenix, Ariz., April 14, 1921.

Hon. Dwight B. Heard, Heard Building, Phoenix, Ariz.

My Dear Mr. Heard: We are glad to have you represent the Phoenix Chamber of Commerce, with a membership of 1,100, at any and all meetings held in Washington in connection with the tariff or any other subject vital to this section of the Southwest.

This is to advise that you have been appointed as the general official representative of this organization at the board of directors' meeting held to-day, April 14.

Yours, very truly,

W. W. Lawhon,

W. W. LAWHON,
President.
HARRY WELCH,
Secretary.

Mr. ASHURST. I know how dry and unattractive statistics are, but I have confidence that Senators will peruse at least some of the statistics, and Senators ought to read them before they vote on the cotton schedule. Before I conclude, however, let me put these figures in juxtaposition before Senators. I will be very brief.

This Egyptian cotton is being imported into the United States at the time when the farmers are trying to build up this longstaple cotton industry, at the very time our farmers are working in a sun which blazes down sometimes at 115 degrees and sometimes at 120 degrees, working in competition with the Egyptian laborer, who, as I have said in the Senate heretofore, works 12 hours, and has since Cambyses came in from Persia, 2,500 years ago, and subjugated Egypt, been possessed of physical efficiency that is one of the phenomena of the world; the Egyptian fellahin works 12 hours in that hot climate. Our people in the Southwest have gone into competition with them and have tried to build up this industry. But unless some relief be granted thousands of Americans, who believed their Government at least would extend to them the same measure of consideration it extends to the Egyptian, will be driven to failure.

In 1911 there were imported from Egypt into the United States 183,786 bales of cotton. The United States took 12 per cent of the Egyptian crop that year.
In 1912 there were imported 175,835 bales, the United States taking 12 per cent of the Egyptian crop.

In 1913 there were imported 191,075 bales. In 1914 there were imported 137,355 bales. In 1915 there were imported 261,220 bales. In 1916 there were imported 339,854 bales.

Then in 1917, owing to the activity of the submarines and the necessity of using lands to raise wheat to feed the soldiers, the production fell off. It was reduced in 1917 to 198,805 bales. In 1918 it was 114,580 bales. In 1919 it was 100,006 bales.

Then, Mr. President, we find that in 1920 there were imported into the United States 485,003 bales of this long-staple Egyptian cotton, grown by these Egyptian laborers, who, as I said before, receive about 30 shillings a month. I will read the whole statement:

Wages to cotton laborers (in Egypt) in 1912 averaged 30 shillings per month, according to Arno Schmidt. Assuming an increase of 100 per cent, the present average wage would be 60 shillings, which at current exchange (the pound sterling=$3.92 at New York on April 15, 1921) would amount to $11.76 per month, or 39 cents per day.

I respectfully submit that Americans, whose ideas of living are so immensely superior to the ideas of the Egyptian laborer, can not work in competition with that Egyptian laborer who receives 39 cents a day.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield. Mr. STANLEY. Is it not true that this long-staple cotion is raised in the main upon irrigated lands?

Mr. ASHURST. That is true; I might say wholly. The Pima cotton, which term is used interchangeably with Arizona Egyptian cotton, is raised wholly on irrigated lands.

Mr. STANLEY. Prior to the recovery by reclamation of these lands by the Government, all of this long-staple cotton was imported, was it not?

Mr. ASHURST. Except such long staple as was grown in what we call the sea-island country, those islands off the coast of Florida and South Carolina.

Mr. STANLEY. There was no considerable amount of this long-staple cotton grown in continental United States?

Mr. ASHURST. It is my opinion that while some long staple was grown, there was no, as we call it, Egyptian Sakellaridis cotton grown in the United States, and there is none now grown in the United States except in Arizona and California.

Mr. STANLEY. Does the Senator believe it is a sound business policy in a government or a corporation to spend hundreds of millions of dollars in order to enable people hitherto en-gaged in a profitable business to engage in an unprofitable business?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not see the force of the Senator's ques-

Mr. STANLEY. I will try to make myself clear. Mr. ASHURST. It is my fault that I did not perceive the Senator's meaning.

Mr. STANLEY. I beg the Senator's pardon. These people who are engaged in growing long-staple cotton, under the stimulus of a bonus from the Government, were formerly engaged, if they were in the South, in raising short-staple cotton or corn or cattle, or anything else, in an unprotected and at the same time prosperous business. Is it wise that the Government should erect great dams, like the Roosevelt Dam, should spend untold millions of the people's money in reclaiming lands, not that people may make money on them but that they may lose money on them; not that they may engage in a profitable busi-ness but that they may be induced, and further buttressed and protected, into engaging in an unprofitable business? If this was a business that was of long standing, and some foreign competitor were underselling us, there might be some reason for it. But is there any more reason for the Government building dams in order that men may raise cotton at a loss than for the Government to make hothouses in order that they may raise grapes or bananas at a less in Montana or Nebraska or Alaska?

Mr. ASHURST. The United States has already invested in Arizona $20,000,000 in irrigation projects. That sum of money is not a gift; it is not a gratuity out of the Federal Treasury. The farmers and water users under the irrigation projects are required to repay that $20,000,000 to the Government within

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will excuse me, I understand that, and I am not maintaining now that the Government will not ultimately recover some part of the money it has spent.

Mr. ASHURST. The Government will recover all of it. Mr. STANLEY. It does not make any difference, for the purposes of my question. I wish to ask the Senator if he regards it as good business in an individual or a corporation or a Government to deliberately expend, in the way of advancement or permanent investment or gratuity, millions of money for the encouragement of a business which will be unprofitable the minute men enter into it?

Mr. ASHURST. As I was proceeding to say, the Senator will bear in mind that twenty millions of dollars have been invested in Arizona in reclamation projects. An intensive campaign throughout the United States, not only in respect to cotton but all other agricultural projects, has been carried on for 10 years. No speaker, no singer, and few clergymen believe they have done their duty until they shall have admonished people to "Get back to the land"; and, indeed, Mr. President, if we are to subsist the American people, and if those who dwell in the cities, and now constitute 52 per cent of our people, are to subsist, we "must get back to the land." But you can not get a man back to the land by singing him a song or telling him how refreshing it is to arise with the sun. You can get a man "back to the land" only by making it profitable to him to get back to the land. As a business proposition, vain, how idle, how childlike, to appropriate $20,000,000 to build up irrigation projects in Arizona, in California, and elsewhere, to encourage farmers, to send out literature to farmers urging them to plant long-staple cotton and other agricultural products, and then after they have planted their crops say that we will open wide the gate and allow the laborer in Egypt, who gets 40 cents a day, to come into competition with and destroy our farmer by taking away his market.

The Senator is entirely right. It is absurd to appropriate money and make speeches and sing songs and deliver lectures by the thousand urging people to go back to the soil, and as soon as they reach the land we say our solicitude is for the Egyptian laborer, not for the Arizona cotton grower. I think the Senator is entirely right.

Mr. STANLEY. It is well for the Government to send people back to the land if their activities upon the land will add to the wealth of their countrymen, if they make two blades of grass grow where one grew before, if they raise two bushels of grain where one grew before. The purpose of having them go back to the land is to add by the most direct and most immediate method of creating essential wealth to the prosperity of the community. But if we have to pension the man on the the community. But if we have to pension the man on the land, his being back on the land does not help the community He is simply living in the shade of the country trees breathing in the salubrious air of the country climate. Having the moral influence of the rural precincts does not help the rest of us if we have to pay him to live there. He had better raise posies and daisies and tulips or he had better raise Cain or hunt and fish and do nothing than to tax the American public $5 or $10 for every dollar's worth of stuff that he produces. Our country produces a modicum of sea island cotton, 1 pound perhaps in 5, and that costs us five times as much

Mr. ASHURST. We are producing more of the long-staple cotton.

Mr. STANLEY. But our importations exceed that production immensely now.

Mr. ASHURST. The production of long-staple sea island cotton, of the kind grown in Arizona, dwindled last year to about 1,700 bales.

Mr. STANLEY. How much did we import? We imported over 400,000 bales. Mr. ASHURST.

Mr. STANLEY. Exactly; and we imported ten times as much as we raised, did we not?

Mr. ASHURST. No. We raised 250,000 bales in the Southwest.

Mr. STANLEY. And imported how much?

Mr. ASHURST. We imported last year 485,000 bales. Mr. STANLEY. That is twice as much. If you put a duty of 7 cents a pound on the cotton he produces, you impose a duty of 15 cents on every pound of cotton produced. You charge every consumer in the United States, 100,000,000 people, for an essential in order to create a new industry in which a few thousand people are engaged; and you know from the start, from the time you build your dam and before they go there, that they are going to lose money unless they live, not upon their labor but upon mine, not upon wealth created but from wealth appropriated, not on account of the natural advantages of the country but on account of the partial operation of the law.

Mr. ASHURST. Whenever the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, who served with distinction in the House and who serves with distinction here, arises I tremble. I do not always tremble when other Senators rise, but I know that his reflections are usualy correct, and his choice rhetoric is hard to answer, but on this particular subject it so happens that he has a wealth of misinformation. This long-staple cotton goes into tires for automobiles, where great tensile strength is required.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt the Senator too much, but is not this sea-island cotton used in the manufacture of mercerized cloth?

Mr. ASHURST. It is used in the making of high-grade Democrats voted and spoke, most of them, for a luxury tax. This cotton goes into very high-grade shirting-into shirts that cost from $6 to $8 apiece.

But let us see about the philosophy of the situation. Have you been in universities and colleges so long that you are filled with free-trade theories? If you are a free trader, and have never done a day's work with your hands in your life, you can make a good argument for free trade, provided you say, "I believe in free trade on everything," but how a Democrat can stand for free trade on some things and tax other things I do not perceive.

I warn Democrats now, do not permit the American people to suspect that you look with favor on free trade. We lost the election of 1880 and we lost the election of 1888 because there was a suspicion in the public mind that we looked with favor on free trade. I have seen Democratic Senators in the North and in the West go down to defeat in their candidacies for Congress because they were suspected of being free traders. Every intelligent man knows that free trade exists only in the imagination of theorists. I was about to say there is no freetrade nation, but there is one, the Eskimos.

Sir, you are for a protective tariff? Very well, you can at least make an argument for a protective tariff if you say, "I am for a tariff on manufactured goods, and I am for a tariff on the raw materials," but how can you in honesty stand up and say "I am for a tariff on manufactured articles, but I am opposed to a tariff on the raw materials"

We have reached the day, Mr. President, when the farmer who must subsist the people and the stock grower and the cotton grower who must clothe the people are going to say, "If you want free trade, very well; if you want a protective tariff, very well; but you shall not longer put the manufactured article, the product of the factory, under a high protective tariff and allow the products of the ranch and the field and the farm to be kept on the free list." If this be a farmers' bill, if this be a bill to protect the agricultural interests of our country, then let us protect the agricultural interests of our country.

I have already asked unanimous consent to include in the RECORD certain tables that have been prepared, some by myself and some by the Department of Agriculture, giving the importations of Egyptian cotton into the United States and the growth within recent years. I shall ask that my amendment lie upon the table until the time for voting comes, and then I shall ask a roll call on the amendment in the belief and in the earnest hope that it will be adopted, because if it is not adopted the bill will be of no utility and will be of no service to the cotton growers of the Southwest.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator's amendment proposes to increase the rate, as I understand it, as well as to decrease the length of staple.

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, no; merely to increase the rate from 7 to 20 cents a pound. Mr. HARRISON. Does it propose also to decrease the length of the staple?

Mr. ASHURST. I have not introduced such an amendment, but I believe some other Senator from a Southern State has introduced such an amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not know. I wanted to know what the Senator's amendment was and whether he desired the staple to be decreased from 12 inches in length.

Mr. ASHURST. Of course, my amendment proposes to strike out 7 cents and insert 20 cents, but I have no objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi. I would not claim something for my own constituents that I would be unwilling to grant to other people.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask if all the cotton grown in Arizona is 13 inches in length?

Mr. ASHURST. We have some of what we call upland cotton that is of about the black but the first length. ton that is of about that length, but the great bulk of our cotton is from 1½ to 15.

Mr. HARRISON. In that connection I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the report of the House Ways and Means Committee, upon which this legislation was based, in which report, prepared by Mr. Young, who introduced the measure in the House, it was said:

The Young emergency tariff bill proposes a duty of 7 cents a pound on cotton the staple of which 1½ inches in length. We are of the opinion that the minimum length of staple on which a tariff is to be levied should be 1½ inches and that the duty should be increased from 7 cents to not less than 10 cents a pound.

So there is a report and argument for a protective tariff on cotton of 13-inch staple, stating that as between 13 and 13 inches as applied to cotton from other countries the shorter staple should be adopted, and yet when they write their bill they only propose to make it 1% inches.

Mr. ASHURST. I may say for the Senator's information that my amendment which decreased the length of staple from 13 to 11 inches, as shown in the bill introduced in the last session of Congress, passed the Senate but was rejected in conference.
Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the bill throughout is based on just the same deceptive and misleading and incorrect statements as are found touching cotton in this report.

Mr. ASHURST. It seemed to me a species of hypocrisy so continuously to urge the farmer to work and then give him no sensible, practical method to get a profit out of his work. We hear so much about the ultimate consumer. I am thinking of the producer. If ever a time existed in the history of our country when we should think of the producer that time is here now, and that is the reason why I wish this rate increased from 7 to 20 cents a pound.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD at this point certain statistics on this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter is as follows:

COTTON PRODUCTION IN EGYPT.

Mr. ASHURST. John A. Todd, "The World's Cotton Crops" (1915), states that the average size of landholdings in Egypt in 1913 was about 31 acres and the average land value per acre in 1913 was £50 to £200. There has been a considerable increase in land values and rentals since that time.

The average yield of fiber, according to the monthly agricultural statistics of the ministry of finance of Egypt (Oct. 31, 1920), was 343 pounds per acre for the five years 1915–1919. The following table, compiled from Government reports of Egypt and the United States, has been compiled by the Bureau of Crop Estimates:

	Number of persons engaged in agriculture.	Acres in cultivated land.	Average area cultivated for each farm worker.
Egypt (1907–1912)	2,315,000	5,457,000	2. 4
Umrted States (1910)	12,390,000	293,794,000	23. 7

COST OF PICKING COTTON IN EGYPT.

According to John A. Todd in The World's Cotton Crops (1915), the prewar wages for picking in Egypt ranged from 5 pence to 1 shilling per day, the lower wage being paid to children, who could pick from 30 to 50 pounds per day each. Taking Todd's statement as a basis and assuming (1) that adults average 75 pounds daily and received a wage of 1 shilling, (2) that the wage has doubled since the war and is now 2 shillings, this at current exchange is equivalent to about 39 cents for 75 pounds, or about one-half cent per pound of seed cotton. Since the lint percentage in Egypt averages at least 30 per cent, as compared with an average of 25 per cent in Arizona, 1,666 pounds of seed cotton in Egypt will yield a 500pound bale. The cost of picking 1,666 pounds of seed cotton at one-half cent per pound is $8.33. The picking cost per pound of lint in Egypt, therefore, works out to 1\(^2\) cents, while in Arizona the cost is 16 cents when the pickers receive 4 cents per pound of seed cotton (the 1920 wage) and 8 cents when the pickers receive 2 cents per pound of seed cotton (the prewar

EMERGENCY TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, when this measure was under consideration in the Sixty-sixth Congress I was one of four Senators upon this side of the Chamber who voted against it. I accompanied my vote with some restrained comment, in the course of which I attempted to characterize the proposals which the bill then contained and which it now contains. I thought and I think that the measure was and is unscientific, unjust, and sure to defeat the hopes of those who have advocated it.

But, Mr. President, the scanty drippings of the sanctuary which oozed from beneath the closed doors of the Committee on Finance led me to expect, and I had earnestly hoped, that the inequities of the measure, although not in themselves diminished, would at least be palliated to an extent which would permit me to vote for it, even though holding my nose while doing so. I had hoped that the antidumping provisions and the provisions for the employment of American valuations would be such as to dilute the dose in its bitterness; but, upon examination of those provisions which I had thought might sugar coat the pill to my taste, I discovered that they are so nebulous as to provide no substantial reason for my accepting that which I can not square with my convictions and which I regard as subversive of every principle of a protective tariff as the Republican Party has taught me to look upon protection. They provide in the main, Mr. President, for an enlargement of ministerial authority in the Treasury Department at a moment when the country is seeking relief from all such provisions, being wearied to exhaustion with the discretionary and arbitrary power which the last administration seized and extended under the specious claim of war necessity.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. MOSES. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is delivering such an interesting address and there are so few Senators present that I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. MOSES. Oh, Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not press that suggestion.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. MOSES. I hope the Senator will withdraw the sugges-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hamp-shire has the floor, and can not be interrupted without his consent even for the suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

Mr. MOSES. I did not yield for that purpose, Mr. President, I wish to finish my remarks with continuity, Mr. HARRISON. Very well; I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. MOSES. I know the Senator from Mississippi is vastly interested in what I am saying. I hope he will stay even though others may be absent.

Mr. HARRISON. I am going to stay, and I had hoped that more Republicans would be here so that they could listen to the advice the Senator is giving.

Mr. MOSES. They can read my remarks.

I have heretofore regarded the bill and have characterized it on the floor of the Senate, and elsewhere, as being a helter-skelter hodgepodge of items forced into it through the power of a voting combination, sectional in its character and wholly selfish in its purpose. In fact, Mr. President, the advocates of the measure in the two Houses of Congress and in the two Congresses in which the bill has been under consideration are themselves in radical disagreement as to its effects. I have ventured to scan none too closely the report submitted on this bill by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania. I have also refreshed my memory regarding the parallel statements made in the House of Representatives in the last session of Congress by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means

As a result of this examination, I find discrepancies applicable to substantially every item in the measure. The rates of duty remain unchanged from the last Congress, but the sums of estimated revenue are revealed to us in wide disparity. For instance, in item 1 of the bill now before us, and with identical rates of duty upon wheat, I find the chairman of the House committee estimating the revenue to be $2,429,529, while the distinguished chairman of the committee in the Senate estimates it to be only $35,000. Passing from the first to the eighteenth item of the bill—wool—I find the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee estimating the revenue under this measure to be $9.900,000, while the chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, under the identical rate, estimates it to be $15,000,000. I find the revenue from washed wool to be estimated by the chairman of the House committee at $28,500,000, while the more moderate chairman of the Committee on Finance has estimated it at only $300,000. And so it goes throughout every item in the list of 28 which make up the measure. Sometimes the House chairman sets the more rosy estimate, sometimes it is the Senate chairman who is possessed of the vision. In no case, Mr. President, do they agree. In order, however, not to weary the Senate or to detain it from the passage of this measure, which the Senator from Pennsylvania says is prayed for night and morning, and with a clamor of petition which reaches the skies and penetrates to the Senate Chamber, even to the enlarged precincts of the floor which we now enjoy, I will not read the table which I hold in my hand, but I will ask permission that it may be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Bursum in the chair) Without objection, permission is granted.

The table referred to is as follows:

Not estimated.

No figures.

Although "filler tobacco" is provided for in both emergency tariff bills, there is, however, no change in rates of duty on same from existing law. Therefore this item should not figure in this table.

Mr. MOSES. I will content myself, Mr. President, with offering the only possible explanation for the discrepancies in this table which suggests itself. These figures in both instances both House and Senate chairmen-were undoubtedly furnished by the Democratic experts who assisted the Senator from Alabama when he drew the now existing tariff law, who assisted the Representative from North Carolina as he drew the revenue measures under the Democratic administration, and who have now been brought over bodily to serve Republican chairmen in the House and Senate and to assist them by providing statistics as misleading as those which they provided for Democratic predecessors in years gone by. I shudder to think, Mr. President, of the mass of unreliable statistics with which both Houses of Congress will presently be inundated from the same Democratic source if these men are continued in their positions as expert statistical advisers in chief to Republican framers of a supposedly Republican tariff measure.

I have dwelt upon these defects of the measure, Mr. President, not for the purpose of emphasizing the inherent weakness of the bill, but to emphasize my own party regularity which would have led me to vote for the measure despite these errors if they had been the only ones which it contains. From the beginning of the movement to enact this legislation for the supposed benefit of suffering agricultural interests it has been vigorously asserted that no amendments were to be considered, that its items were sacrosanct, and that no impious hand should be laid upon them. In pursuance of this policy, sir, in the last be laid upon them. In pursuance of this policy, say, Congress we saw an amendment for mildly compensatory duties in the wool item offered by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts only to be incontinently rejected. We heard the Massachusetts only to be incontinently rejected. We heard the plaintive voice of the Senator from Missouri crying out in vain for a duty on sunflower seeds. We heard the friends of magnesite, of tungsten, and of latch needles vainly imploring the obdurate Senator from North Dakota to permit a few loaves of his tariff manna to fall into their empty hands; but all in vain.

There was a duty on hides, but none permitted on shoes. There was a duty on wool, but none on woolens. There was a duty on cotton, but none on cottons. There was a duty on wrappers, but none on cigars.

The committee in the Senate was deaf eared and stony hearted until the junior Senator from Pennsylvania appeared before the tribunal presided over by his colleague and procured from its members the insertion in the bill of Title V, which would continue for the life of the measure the existing embargo and licensing system as applied to dyestuffs. By this action, Mr. President, the Finance Committee has vitiated the principle upon which the bill is supposedly drawn, for by no stretch of imagination can it be adequately contended that suffering agriculture can be benefited by an embargo on dyestuffs.

Such a proposal has been intermittently before Congress for more than a year and a half, and during all of that time I have persistently and consistently opposed it. My opposition to it has not abated now, and because of its inclusion in this measure I am compelled once more to vote against the bill. This proposal, Mr. President, is not protectionism; it is monopoly. Still less is it Republicanism. I do not believe that it is Democracy either. It is class legislation of the most vicious and dangerous kind; and it comes over to us as a device of the last administration, designed as a war measure and seized upon by the rapacious who are only too eager to continue the system under which they have already made enormous profits, and as the result of which they have entered into agreements of world-wide scope to assure them gigantic and undisturbed profits in the future.

Mr. President, I am a protectionist—a protectionist in the nth degree, believing in protection almost for protection's sake. Through the operation of that doctrine, devised by Hamilton and handed down to his successors in political faith, the Republican Party from its birth has stood for the development of American industry behind the sheltering wall of a protective tariff. Our richest epochs of industrial development and national prosperity have been those during which wise protection sm has held sway. This country prospered and grew great, Mr. President, not under the embargo and licensing system but under a protective tariff; and I can not understand, s r, why the dyestuffs industry should now be considered or dealt with differently from the tin-plate industry or from any other of the great industries of America which have grown up under a protective tariff. If the manufacturers of dyestuffs would be content with the same treatment which has been given to other American enterprise and in tiative, I would join with them in placing protection at whatever point, no matter how high, the necessities of their business would demand. But, Mr. President, when they come here with a renewed and impudent demand that measures arising from the exigencies of war time should be continued for their benefit at a moment when we are ardently seeking peace and a return to normalcy, my convictions and my pol tical judgment alike forbid acquiescence. Mr. President, this proposal can not be considered as an administration measure. No word in advocacy of it can be found in any of the President's official utterances; and one looks in vain throughout his message for any suggestion that this proposal should be written into the tariff legislation which he recommends.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. MOSES. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator has just said that this is not, as he understands, an administration measure. May I inquire of the Senator whether, if President Harding had recommended it, he would have thought that the measure was entitled to any greater consideration or any fairer treatment, or would it come with any additional sanctity? Would there be any obligation upon the Senator from New Hampshire and other Senators to abdicate their prerogatives, forget their oaths of office, and follow that recommendation simply because it was an administration measure?

The Senator will remember that for a number of years Senators upon the other side of the Chamber have denounced the former President of the United States, Mr. Wilson, and denounced the Democrats because, as they said, the Senate and House of Representatives had degenerated into rubber stamps; that all that the administration needed to do was to make a recommendation and it became a law. I had supposed that when the Republican Party came into control there would be a manifestation of independence that would command the admiration of some of those who had been so dictated to in the past.

Mr MOSES. I hope I am giving an exhibition of that kind now, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. I commend the Senator, and I sincerely hope that his example will be followed by other Republican Senators.

Mr. MOSES. This bill contravenes the President's emphatic dictum that we shall have more than a score of the active industries of the country, and it puts hundreds of business men to the disadvantage of exposing the secrets of their business to some petty agent of the War Trade Board which continues to function, though war has long since ceased. I do not believe, sir, that any $900 a year civil-service clerk in Washington is competent to run any business at arm's length, and I can see no adequate reason for thus singling out for conspicuous favoritism an industry already so profitable that it is easily able to maintain in Washington the largest, the most highly organized, the best paid, and the most arrogant of lobbies which this Capitol has ever seen.

It appears, Mr. President, that the impoverished dyestuffs companies of the country who, in December, 1919, were hammering at the gates of Congress with the plaintive cry that they could not live out the winter unless still further privileges were given to them, have, nevertheless, been able in the meantime to expend in the calendar year of 1920 the not inconsiderable sum of $104,932.61 in pressing forward the measure now before us.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, would it bother the Senator if I should interrupt him further? I apologize for doing so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. MOSES. I yield. Mr. KING. The Senator has stated that under this measure manufacturers would be compelled to make known and reveal their trade secrets, their processes, and so forth, to some supernumerary, petty official. The Senator, perhaps, is advised of the fact that quite recently the War Trade Board—and its functions of course are to be continued and it is to be perpetuated, although assigned to the Treasury Department-has required that the applicant shall go-

Mr. MOSES. I will touch on that later, Mr. President—Mr. KING. To an organization which is controlled by the dye producers of the United States.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator only anticipates what I intended to say upon that subject.

Mr. KING. I apologize to the Senator.

Mr. MOSES. Of this amount, substantially three-quarters, or $70,464.33, was paid for that which is euphemistically described in the Knit Goods Bulletin for April, 1921, a copy of which I have before me, as "legislative expenditures." The income of this body-and I am speaking, Mr. President, of the American Dyes Institute-during the same period was derived from dues, assessments, and special assessments in the tota, sum of $131,976, and the items of expenditure are of such interest that I venture to ask that the article to which I refer may be included in my remarks at this time without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Knit Goods Bulletin, April, 1921.]

HIGH COST OF GETTING DYE LICENSE—OVER $70,000 CHARGED TO LEGISLATIVE EXPENSES IN AMERICAN DYES INSTITUTE'S STATEMENT OF INCOME AND DISBURSEMENTS FOR ONE YEAR.

The high cost of lobbying for the establishing of a dye-licensing system is shown in the financial statement of the American Dyes Institute of March 9 to the members of the institute. The statement comprises Bulletin A-205, and shows income and expenditure from January 1, 1920, to December 30. The total disbursements were $104.932.61, of which $70,464.33 is charged to legislative expenditures. Salaries and counsel fees are put down at $20,125.78. The cost of monthly meetings and luncheons was $2,443.43. Under legislative expenditures of $70,464.33 in one year, to secure the passage of the Longworth bill, there appears, among others, the following items:

25, 000, 00 25, 000, 00 505, 01 3, 494, 99 1, 020, 96 Evarts, Choate, Sherman & Leon Various expenses incident to distribution of A. D. I. pam-phlet Expense incident to distribution done by legislative com-872.93 mittee 497. 12

The income from dues, assessments, and special assessments was $121.976. Among the accounts payable is shown an item of $21.505.01—Evarts, Choate, Sherman & Leon—this, apparently, an expense in addition to the several large payments to this firm.

Mr. MOSES. In this compilation, Mr. President, it is worth noting that the largest items of expenditures were those for counsel fees, which amounted to about $50,000, divided in equal parts, one paid to Joseph H. Choate, jr., as his compensation to October 10, 1920, and the other to Judge J. Harry Covington, of this city, who descended from the Federal bench in order to take the more lucrative employment which this client affords. Another interesting item is one of $1,505.01 paid to Mr. Choate for his traveling expenses to Paris, with a further payment "on account Paris tr'p" of $3,494.99, while hotel bills for the wellhoused lobby of the dye makers amounted to $7,670.28; and the further impoverishment of the dye makers is shown by the item "Tips, meals, hotels, taxis, etc.," amounting to $876.66. It is further worthy of note that the financial report of the dye makers to their members contains the item of an amount payable to Mr. Choate of $21,505.01. For these sums-in hand and payable-Mr. Choate has spent no inconsiderable portion of his time in roaming about the country addressing parlor meetings of ladies in advocacy of national defense to be obtained by giving his clients an absolute monopoly in the dyestuffs market of America. What crimes, Mr. President, are committed in the name of preparedness when a liberal fee is attached thereto!

I have sometimes wondered, Mr. President, whether the collateral motive for pressing this un-Republican, un-Democratic, un-American scheme was not a desire to maintain or to create jobs in the Federal service, whose personnel Congress and the country so earnestly desires to reduce. For instance, Mr. President, in a letter from the American Dyes Institute, under date of May 3 of the present year, addressed to me, and I suppose to every other Member of the Senate, occurs a paragraph calling attention to the fact that the passage of the socalled Knox peace resolution will automatically end the authority of the War Trade Board, the tenure of which this bill would continue. In connection with this, sir, it is interesting to note the manner in which the War Trade Board is now functioning with regard to dyestuff licenses. An American consumer of dyes recently received from the War Trade Board a copy of the new conditions which that board has set up for the obtaining of licenses and in which it is required that the applicant must apply first to the American Dyes Institute before applying to the War Trade Board. It is the American Dyes Institute, I venture to remind the Senate, which has so lavishly recompensed Mr. Choate and Judge Covington for their services and so liberally enable them to journey to Paris and to dispense largess to the bell boys of Washington.

The moving spirit in the American Dyes Institute is one Morris R. Poucher, formerly connected with the Badische Co.a firm well known in the chemical industry-and who is now associated with the Du Ponts, who in equal measure have become notorious and noted in the same line of bus ness. Mr. Poucher is chairman of the executive committee of the Dye Institute; he is on the advisory committee of the War Trade Board appointed by the Dye Institute; he is on the advisory committee of the Textile Alliance, who imported the German reparations dyestuffs; he is also, I understand, director of the Textile Alliance, where he represents the Dye Institute. In other words, he is the Dye Institute, he is the Du Pont Co., he is the Textile Alliance, and it is now proposed to make him the doorway to the War Trade Board. In these various capacities the way will be open to him to know not only the details of the business of every dye manufacturer in the United States, but to secure an accurate line on the consumer as well-to whom he may dictate what he may or may not use. If this, Mr. President, is to be the policy of the War Trade Board, whose continuance is provided in this measure, the dye consumers of the country might as well understand in the beginning that the entire dyestuffs business of the United States is to be turned over to Mr. Poucher and those whom he represents, and that they will determine who shall or shall not continue in business, whether manufacturing, importing, or consuming.

The provisions of Title V in the bill, Mr. President, are open to other avenues of criticism. It would appear from the language employed that an absolute embargo is intended upon all dyes, whether natural or artificial. The word "dyestuffs" which the bill contains is new in our statutes. It has never been found in any tariff bill before. It has received no legal interpretation. It has been used indiscriminately in trade papers and in discussion, so that it is impossible to tell from the language of the bill as it stands whether this word shall include only the coal-tar colors or whether it also embraces natural dyes, such as logwood, fustic, natural indigo, natural alizarin, ultramarine, Prussian blue, and the like, to the end that its operation shall bring into its all-embracing tribute not only the textile manufacturer, the color maker, the paint factory, the lithographer, the ink maker, and the tanner, but even the humble washerwoman at her tub, who must blue the clothes before drying them.

It should also be noted, Mr. President, that the bill in this title provides no means for a further issuance of licenses, and it is by implication only that the consumer may enjoy even the limited privilege which he has thus far possessed. The personnel and the records of the War Trade Board-with such remnants of appropriation as the board still enjoys-are, it is true, transferred from the State Department to the Treasury; and there, Mr. President, will be found nebulous authority granted to the Secretary to "make rules and regulations necessary for the enforcement of this act." The Secretary thus becomes the magisterial officer who must define quality, quantity, price, and delivery. And it is pertinent to ask through whom he will exercise these functions. Is the remaining appropriation for the War Trade Board sufficient for the purpose, or shall we soon be confronted with a deficiency appropriation to provide for a new army of clerks, statisticians, and experts to be added to the army of tax eaters which the war created and which we seem unable to demobilize? In a statement issued the other day by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania he declared that the American people are more concerned in getting taxes reduced and "retiring the sheriff to the background" than in any academic discussion of international disarmament." May I add to this sage remark the further comment that the American people are still more concerned in freeing the business of the country from the palsying hand of governmental regulation than they are in setting up any monopolies?

Mr. President, I am well aware that this bill will pass. Its advocates are already celebrating their victory. In the edition of the American Dyestuff Reporter for May 2, 1921, on its first page, will be found an article announcing in large type that "The fight has been won!" In the course of this article a deserved tribute is paid to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania for the response, "both prompt and gratifying," which he made to the appeal of the dye makers; and the editor adds that he "does not imagine that Messrs. King, Moses, and others of the opposition will find much to encourage them." He concludes his panegyric with the injunction that "Philadelphia, New Hampshire, and Colorado papers please copy." On another page of the same journal is to be found an order issued in rhyme, as follows:

Lordly solons, Nation's stay, Legislative mill, Congress, Senate, Warren—Hey! Pass that dyestuff bill!

I assume, Mr. President, that the Congress, the Senate, and the President, who is thus affectionately and commanding y addressed by his Christian name, will be interested in the gloating already going on at Wilmington and so soon to be amply justified by the action of the Senate on Wednesday.

Mr. President, I am a Republican-orthodox and regular. prefer infinitely to vote with my party, or with the majority of my party associates here, rather than to vote against it or them. Insurgency for insurgency's sake has no charm for me: and it is only because this measure runs counter to all the doctrines of sound Republicanism that I am voting against it. If it stood alone, if it bore no relation to more important tariff proposals which soon will come before us, it is probable that I would have contented myself with no word of protest save in my negative vote. Put, Mr. President, we shall soon have before us a general tariff bill. Within six weeks it may be, certainly long before this measure shall have run its limited span of life, the tariff bill of 1921 will have reached the Senate. I am convinced, sir, that the same arguments now advanced, the same forces now arrayed to secure the passage of these proposals as an emergency measure, will then be equally vigorous in demanding that they be continued as permanent legislation. They can, and no doubt will, argue cogently that nothing has happened in the intervening time to change the situation from to-day. They will ask why if they are to-day entitled to that which this bill gives them they will not be equally entitled to it six weeks hence. To that demand no adequate answer can be made. the passage of this bill, Mr. President, we are opening the door for the continuance of a policy which no man here n his heart believes will furnish an effective remedy for any of the distress which any interest now suffers and for which no man here can find an adequate excuse. But we shall have it fastened upon us.

The cry from the country during the whole period while this iniquitous license and embargo proposal has been before the Congress has been for a reduction in the high cost of living; and yet, sir, it is worthy of note that substantially every measure which Congress has been called upon to cons der in that time has looked toward the maintenance, or the increase, of the high prices which war fever brought upon us. The country has gone on with its cry for high and still higher wages, and prices and profits. Deluded interests still think to lift themselves by their boot straps through congressional action. What the country needs, str, is not legislation, but liquidation. Until every interest of investment, or manufacture, or production, and of labor is willing to confront the inevitable reactions of the war, is willing to write off its losses, is willing to begin anew under the conditions which the reactions of war involve, this country can have no economic peace or progress.

A homely rhymster, whose verse is a daily delight to thousands of readers, has pictured the situation; and I ask the Senate and the country to take counsel from these words of

Walt Mason:

EXIL TIMES.

There is a crisis everywhere, and all the world is in despair. I read the news from day to day, from countries near and far away, and I'm discouraged as I mark our prospects, desolate and dark. Oh, anarehy and doom and wreck and countless evils are on deck; some crisis every day appears and humps its back and wags its ears, and statesmen cry, as they've long cried, "The tail must travel with the hide." For six long years it's been the same; the crisis played its low-down game, and filled us with the dumps and blues and kept us shaking in our shoes. We had a crisis months ago, because no prices then were low, and profiteers were on our trail, demanding all our hard-earned kale. That crisis slumped, another rose, and now low prices are our foes, because the cost no longer soars a thousand mills have closed their doors, and workless workmen walk the streets and clamor vainity for the eats and soak the silken shirt they wore when tother crisis had the floor. I'm tired of all this crisis stuff; they've fed me up—I've had enough.

Mr. President, history has a trick of repeating itself. Twelve years ago a Republican President had just entered the White House, and he, too, came from the State of Ohio. Behind him stood the largest vote that any President had up to that time ever received. The Republican majority in both Houses of Congress was ample; and that majority wrote a tariff bill. That tariff bill was a Pandora's box of political evil for Republicanism. The year following its enactment saw the Republican majority in the House of Representatives swept away, saw State after State, previously deemed safely Republican, taken into the Democratic column, and saw the Republican majority in this Chamber sadly diminished. Two years later came the frightful debacle in the Republican Party and in its train came eight years of Wilsonism and war, bringing with it the embargo and licensing system which this bill would continue. I hope, Mr. President, that the Republican Party of 1921 is not again setting its feet in the path of 1909.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I have listened with great attention, some amusement, and some astonishment to the combination of logic, eloquence, doggerel, and prejudice which have been emitted by my distinguished friend the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses]. It is not my purpose to approach the consideration of the amendment to this bill for which I am responsible from the standpoint of a profit and loss account of a Dolly Varden calico mill in New England, but from the standpoint of the roster of the dead who have died in this Great War, from the standpoint of the list of casualties, and I make my appeal to the men who have followed the history of this war and learned the lessons it has taught. It will require but a few moments, Mr. President, to justify this amendment, explain its purpose, and satisfy thoughtful men of its wisdom.

When the Great War with Germany broke out 99 per cent, perhaps, of all the projectiles that were flung against the allied forces were filled with high explosives, high explosives which France and Great Britain could not and did not produce, but which eventually were produced by the United States. In the last great retreat an examination of the huge ammunition dumps of the German Army showed that over 50 per cent of their projectiles, instead of being charged with high explosives which merely exploded the projectile and scattered its fragments, were filled with poisonous gases which mingled in the air and asphyxiated and destroyed thousands, even though not within their immediate range.

What does that lesson teach? It teaches that from practically a negligible quantity of projectiles charged with poisonous gases during the war there developed fully 50 per cent so charged, and if the war had continued two years longer and America had not made the progress which enabled us to meet these people upon common ground the story of the war would have been different.

Let me read to you, Senators, a few observations made by a man whom I have the honor to call my friend, Col, Phillippe Bunau-Varilla, who left one of his legs upon a field in Flanders, in speaking of the blindness of the French people in not meeting the Germans upon the common ground of the development of organic chemistry and therefore the production of chemical armament. He said:

This seems incredible, but it is a fact!

The blindness of the French administration, the deceiving songs of the pacifists as to the impossibility of a European war, had gradually led France to get engulfed in the methodic and devilish entanglement of the German dyestuff industry.

The terrible situation in which France, as well as Great Britain and Russia, was placed by the lack of ammunitions after the earlier battles of the war is explained thus:

Who makes dyes to-day can to-morrow make high explosives—with the same men, with the same plant, with the same materials—provided he disposes also of oxidized nitrogen.

The dye industry and the high-explosive industry are so intimately connected as to be virtually one. In fact, melinite and trinitrotoluene are nothing but hydrocarbides, extracted from distilled coal tar, in which is incorporated oxidized nitrogen.

which is incorporated oxidized nitrogen.

Germany had established all over the world the monopoly of her apparently innocent dye industry. It was the scientific noose which was going to strangle all her enemies after the first months of war owing to the famine of explosives.

The vie methods of warfare admirably condensed by the celebrated Count Luxburg, the minister of Germany to Argentina—suggesting neutral ships should be sunk "without leaving traces"—were also followed in peace. The same men who enjoyed the hospitality of the United States, while depositing bombs with time fuses in the ships leaving the American wharves, were active during peace times also.

The dye industry being for everybody, except Germany, a peaceful one, and, for Germany only, a war industry, it was protected against competition by German war methods.

Whenever a non-German dye appeared either in France, Great Whenever a non-German dye appeared either in France, Great Britain, or America, immediately it was stifled under an avalanche of German goods. If, however, the competitor resisted the business pressure he was soon put out of commission by the purely Boche pressure he was soon put out of commission by the purely Boche trickery.

Suitable additions of noxious substances were made by criminal hands in the mills of the users of non-German dyes. Everybody was soon convinced that non-German dyes did not possess the standard qualities necessary for their industrial use. By this double method in time of peace—dumping and sabotage—the Boche acquired the practical monopoly of the dye industry. Free-trade nations were glad of it. The innocent economists and the candid pacifists were conveniently misled, while in fact the monoply of the dye industry constituted the control of explosives by Prussia. She alone was capable of making the explosives on a large scale, when she should decide to let loose her dogs of war and to complete the task which she had begun in 1619. This monopoly was to insure her conquest of the world.

Everybody remembers the universal complaints about the absence of dyes when the war was declared by Germany. Nobody, of course, remembers any complaint about the absence of explosives. It was, however, the very same question. The manufacture of explosives. It was, however, the very same question. The manufacture of dyes was the manufacture of explosives. The various nations abstained, naturally, from exposing their incredible blindness and the almost criminal neglect of their Governments in not having taken, during peace, adequate protective measures. Their stock of material for providing their artillery with high-explosive shells was practically just sufficient for the first weeks of the war.

Germany alone was capable of the industrial effort necessary to furnish the large masses of explosives required for the war. She had of the plant, she had of the personnel, she had of the raw material. She had also succeeded in freeing herself from the necessity of importing nitrates from Chile. Chile, on the contrary, was the only source open to Germany's blind enemies for obtaining the oxidized nitrogen which is the essential element of high explosives or of gunpow

Thanks to supreme technical efforts she had succeeded in devising the proper scientific and industrial methods to extract from the atmosphere the oxidized nitrogen necessary for the manufacture of her explosives. It is safe to say Germany alone among the nations at war could produce an unlimited quantity of explosives on her own soil and with products generated within her own frontiers.

Mr. President, to-day perhaps the noblest call to man is the dissipation of the possibility of future war, and perhaps one of the strongest arguments that can be put up to Governments is that to avoid war we must disarm. But what profits it, Mr. President, if we shall destroy our battleships, if we shall destroy our arsenals, if we shall cease to cast guns and swords and bayonets, if we leave the world's productive capacity of organic chemistry in the hands of Germany, which enables her to turn out instantly, with the flexibility of her plants, the most deadly weapon that human ingenuity has yet devised? You may sink every German battleship to the most remote cave of the sea, you may reduce to dust her proudest fortresses, you may blow the great Krupp plant to hades, and you may cast the big Berthas into plowshares and pruning hooks, but if you leave the dye industry in the possession of Germany she has the world by the throat.

Mr. President, those of us who take an interest in what has happened during this war, those of us who seek intelligently to understand the causes of the great destruction of this late war, those of us who have visited the hospitals and seen the asphyxiated boys, many of them demented-my God, how can we refuse by our votes to take over to ourselves the ability to do that which they would do? Nations do to each other, what the others would do to them, but if we are wise we should be sure to get ready to do it first.

I place no importance at all in this discussion upon the eco-nomic features of this amendment, and yet perhaps there could be no greater argument made for any American industry than could be made for the protection of the dye industry, when you take into consideration the circumstances under which it came into being,

Woodrow Wilson had the vision to see what it meant. Twice has he specifically, in his messages to Congress, called attention to the necessity of the building up of this great arm of national defense. In 1914, when the war broke out, there were seven manufacturers of dyes in the United States. In 1920 there were 184, and yet we hear gentlemen cry "monopoly"; that this industry is in the hands of a few. We hear gentlemen complain of the efforts these people are making to protect the two or three hundred million dollar investment. Mr. President, every time a superbattleship is built in the United States it is paid for to the extent of forty or fifty million dollars out of the pockets of the American taxpayers. Every time à dye plant is constructed which costs forty or fifty million dollars it is built at the expense of private individuals, who, because of the peace-time uses of their product, can afford to construct these plants, which, as I have said, are almost instantaneously convertible into munition plants. Yet your battleship in five or six years is obsolete and your investment is gone; but your dye plant, if the country is progressive, will become greater and greater and more efficient, not only for the purposes of peace but for the purposes of war.

We hear complaints that these institutions are great, enormously capitalized, and make large profits. Mr. President, in this day of grace, when great things are being done in the world, it requires great instrumentalities to accomplish them. You can not equip an army to fight 5,000,000 Huns in the blacksmith shops at the crossroads, and you can not finance it at the little national banks in the villages throughout the country. have to take a view of this situation, Mr. President, that is becoming the size of our country, the dignity of our statesmanship, and the wisdom and patriotism of the men who sit here and represent the American people.

I ask leave to print as an appendix to my remarks an article in the New York Herald, written by Mr. Edwin C. Hill, on the uses of gas in warfare.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and leave is granted.

WORLD MASTERY LIES IN "DEW OF DEATH"—POISON GAS FROM AIR-PLANES WILL DECIDE NEXT BIG WAR—GEN. FRIES, CHIEF OF THE CHEMICAL WARFARE SERVICE, DEPICTS HORRORS AS A REAL DANGER FACED BY OUR ISLAND POSSESSIONS AND EVEN BY NEW YORK—AMAZ-ING REVELATIONS IN OFFICIAL MEMORANDA.

**Horrors of the Great War reached their climax with the use of poison gas projected far behind the front lines by means of gas-filled shells. Yet terrible though the results were both for the fighting forces and civil population, they pale into insignificance beside the picture of the gas war of the future painted in the accompanying article.

"The facts about armament plans of the several nations gathered by the New York Herald and presented in these columns from time to time have attracted nation-wide attention. The details presented to-day—all from official sources—are sure to gain international attention. No such frank revelation of the possible use of poison gas dropped broadcast by fleets of airplanes ever has been published, and the description of the probable results staggers the imagination. These will be chemists' wars, if wars must come again, and the simple truth is that the mind of man is not yet able to picture the horrors that will be released.

"DREADFUL FORECAST OF EVILS BY NEW WAR DESTROYERS.

"Great cities, an ocean apart from their country's enemy and tranquil in fancied security, far out of reach of the longest range gun, will stir from sleep in the night to the agony of their people, as from unseen poison ships, circling above them in the dark, dews of death fall to blind and burn and paralyze, Fortresses, manned by the most powerful ordnance man has been able to perfect, will lie helpless under this gentle, frightful rain. Armies with banners will be leveled to the dust, no longer armies, but masses of sightless, pain-crazed human beings, incapable of motion, incapable of thought.

In all the thousands of years that men have schemed to slay other men for greed, ambition, or the love of women nothing even remotely so terrible has come into warfare as the discovery and coldly scientific application of poison gases as a weapon. The possibilities are absolutely illimitable. There are 200,000 chemicals known to man, and as yet only 5 per cent of this vast number have been used for experimentation. Yet with the few discoveries made in the 5 per cent and employed in the Great War the casualties were terrific.

"The Surgeon General of the United States Army reports that almost one man out of every three that entered the hospitals of the American Expeditionary Forces as a battle casualty was suffering from enemy gas. Including the marines and attached naval personnel, poison gas caused 72,056 casualties, of which 1,271 proved fatal. That is what the dew of death did to American fighting men. What it did to the French and the British can be imagined without statistics.

"Yet from 1915, when the Germans first drifted a poison cloud across the field of Ypres, until they surrendered, more than three years later, they developed only 3 per cent efficiency. Had it been 50 per cent so early in the struggle, or even later, history might have had another tale to tell.

"'Had they got up to 50 per cent,' said Brig. Gen. Amos A. Fries, Chief of Chemical Warfare Service, United States Army, we would have had to come home-those of us left.'

"IN ITS INFANCY DURING LATE WAR-NOW A MENACE.

"At Ypres in 1915, when the Kaiser's hosts added the new terror to warfare, they had the world in their hands had they followed up the shocking surprise their poison waves sent through the British and the Canadians-but they did not follow it up. One is reminded of Victor Hugo's explanation of French defeat at Waterloo—the sunken road of Ohain, Napoleon's strange indecision, Grouchy's blunder. Hugo put it in a word: God.

"Nor did the Germans advance their primary advantage with the energy that had marked them in all other fields of military achievement and purpose. The German chemical-shell program was 25 per cent of their artillery ammunition. During the entire time that the American troops were in action it is doubtful that the chemical-shell firing ever exceeded 15 per cent. They could not manufacture chemicals fast enough. In the battle of the Meuse-Argonne, the longest and hardest-fought battle the American troops participated in, the Germans used a relatively small amount of gas. Their available supply had been dissipated in other sectors and little was left to employ against the Americans. But with poor efficiency and a dwindling supply it must not be forgotten that German poison gas struck out of the battle line one in every three of the American fighting men who went to hospital.

"Does anyone think that the vision of whole cities thrown into helpless agony by invisible airships dripping poison is too fantastic? Or that it would be impossible to subdue such fortresses as Corregidor or the green-terraced ramparts that guard the Narrows of New York Bay? Nevertheless that is the cool and carefully weighed opinion of Gen. Fries and of his aids in the Chemical Warfare Service. They approach these amazing con-clusions with knowledge of secrets that are not accessible to the rest of us-grim and dreadful mysteries that have been worked out in the great Chemical Warfare Service laboratories at Edgewood, Md., and in the many private laboratories whose science is given to the United States Government.

"If the Philippines are ever attacked by an enemy, it will be a gas attack, Gen. Fries believes, and the measure of his opinion is indicated in the following interesting memorandum he sent a few days ago to Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood, who is now on his way to our Far Eastern possessions. Here it is:

"FORECAST OF LOSS OF PHILIPPINES BY GAS RELEASED BY ENEMY.

"Japs can take Philippine Islands with gas—let us assume Japan has decided to make war upon the United States. Her first objective is the Philippine Islands. They lie to the south of Japan and more or less parallel to the Asiatic coast as is Japan herself farther north. American troops and fortifications are concentrated on the island of Corregidor at the mouth of Manila Bay. This is the usual tropical island, with an extreme length of 7 miles and an extreme width of 1 mile, the total area being less than 3 square miles. It is rather a typical promontory on the west, gradually shading off to almost sea level on the east. It has the usual tropical growth, with cleared places for barracks, officers' quarters, and gen emplacements.

"Japan, having decided on war, will seize a small bay within 100 miles of Corregidor. Her air force will fly there by way of Formosa and land in the little harbor picked out. She will carry in her fleet 100 tons of mustard gas. This gas and the methods of making it were thoroughly worked out by the different Allies in the World War. Hence Japan's knowledge of the gas and of manufacturing it are complete.

"A force of 50 planes, each carrying it ton of mustard gas in a simple tank, will leave at night for Corregidor. A half hour later they will be over the island and will be synthing it thoroughly with mustard gas from one end to the other. Fifty tons of mustard gas, even if half of it is wasted on the surrounding waters, will form a deadly concentration that can not be gotten rid of under 5 to 10 days. Men can not live anywhere on the island without wearing masks and oil clothing which is gas proof.

"Within 48 hours the place will be practically untenable for anybody. Animals and all human beings will begin to grow sick from injury to the lungs or from very bad burns. Forty-eight hours alone will suffice for a reduction of the island without firing a shot. Thus will pass the Philippine Islands into the hands of the Japanese.

"The next step will be just to hold the Philippine Islands and walt for results. They might possibly attempt to apply the same methods of attack against the Hawalian Islands. It is perfectly certain that the attack would be just as successful against the Hawalian Islands as against the Philippines, unless the Americans have a superior air force that can keep the invaders way.

"The Caroline and Marshall Islands, including the island of Yapover which the Japanese are to have a mandate, would afford numerous small harbors which w

"GEN. FRIES DESCRIBES POSSIBILITY AS A VERY REAL DANGER.

"In preparing this extraordinarily frank memorandum, Gen. Fries 'got right down to brass tacks,' as he says, believing that no good would be served by minimizing a very real danger. And the same danger would apply, in his opinion, to any part of the United States whatever in war time if the Navy was not big enough and the air force not numerous enough to keep an enemy from establishing a base for poison-gas raids.

"Take New York City itself-

"Said the general-

"Said the general—
"New York, the magnificent. For the sake of argument, let us assume that the United States Navy, allowed to deteriorate, had suffered defeat or that the Atlantic Fleet had been outmaneuvered by a cuming foe. Let us assume that the same neglect of military aviation continues. What then? The answer is as certain as that might follows day. Airplanes are being developed so that even now it would be possible for great squadrons to leap the Atlantic and sprinkle our cities with burning poison. If an enemy nation could seize and hold a base in the Caribbean, we would be wide open to the most frightful bombardment mind of man ever conceived—not a deluge of shot and shell but a rain of something infinitely more dreadful.

"We know that 10 tons of mustard gas will desolate a square mile and make life impossible in that square mile. Suppose a fleet of 100 poison sprinklers swooped over New York in the night, having defeated or evaded the American flying fleet. Death, desolation, and deteat would most certainly result. In the millions of the great city hundreds of thousands would be blinded, burned horribly, driven insane from terror. It is not a picture one cares to contemplate even in speculation, but I tell you that the scientific use of gas in warfare is approaching this extreme of horror.

"The American people should know that these possibilities exist, that the peril is not a nightmare of military men, but a cold, scientific fact, well enough proved in the past war and infinitely more potent now. We have adopted a policy of the utmost frankness because we believe in the sound judgment of the American people. We have our secrets, but we do not believe in trying to keep too many matters secret. Too much secrecy often defeats the very purpose of secrecy. We believe in being frank to ourselves, to our comrades in the Army and Navy, to Congress, and to the people as a whole. We helieve in publicity, because we don't see how the Army and Navy, or any of the other institutions of our Republic, can be prop

"EATTLE FIELDS OF THE FUTURE NEVER TO BE FREE FROM GAS

"Poisonous gases in the past war caused 27.3 per cent of all American casualties, killed and wounded. Considering only the wounded admitted to hospitals, over 31 per cent were gas alone, and yet the use of gas, even at the end of the World War, was a child's game compared to what it will be in the future. With gas defiting from clouds let loose on the battle line, with gas being thrown to enormous distances by all calibers of guns, and with gas raining from airplanes or bursting from airplane bombs, the battle fields of the future will never be free from gas.

"This is no exaggeration. We have the raw materials for these gases. We have the personnel to manufacture them. We have the factories. More than that, we have the men in the Army and the Navy and the Air Service that will distribute them; and the military many who fails in the future to consider gas in every problem he studies is falling to consider the most powerful weapon of war, both for offense and defense.

"There is still talk in places that chemical warfare may be abolished by agreement. It can't be done. If you can abolish chemical warfare by agreement, you can abolish all war by agreement, the way agreement, the can are that have been kept, such as not to use poison bullets or not to poison wells. Such agreements have been kept for one reason, and one reason only. The methods are inefficient. Poisoning of wells is a species of guerilla warfare comparable with stabbing a man in the back, and gets only an occasional casualty. But chemical warfare, getting its casualties by the tens and hundreds of thousands, is too powerful a force for any military commander to overlook, either for offense or defense, and too powerful for any nation to dare trust that no other nation will use it in war. History proves that no powerful method of making war has ever been abandoned until a more powerful method was devised. And why shouldn't we use poison gas? It is just as sportsmanlike to fight with gas as it is to fight with rifles or swords. Gas, being so universally adaptable, requires the highest intelligence and the keenest minds to use it successfully. We Americans believe we have the mind, the skill, and the ingenuity to use it just a little better than anyone else.

"A recent writer in a military magazine stated that gas would probably not be used in our barrage during an attack, because of the difficulty it might cause our own troops. He forgot the enemy—a danger-ous lapse of memory for any military man. Battles have been lest and nations have been swept away because commanders of armies forgot to figure on what t will deluge our advancing intantry because he knows that him.

"This simply means that gas will be used everywhere, in every battle, and woe be unto the general and his staff who fail to prepare so to use it. No war can be fought without suffering casualties, for, as Napoleon said, 'To make an omelet you must break some eggs.' We recognized that fact when we drove our men so close to our high explosive and shrapnel barrages that we had many casualties from our own shells. Why did we do it? Simply to enable our men to get into the German trenches before the German machine gunners, hiding in deep dugouts, could man the trenches and mow our men down with machine-gun fire at short range.

"CHEMICAL WARFARE IS CHEAP, BUT GERMANS PROVED IT TERRIELE."

deep dugouts, could man the trenches and mow our men down with machine-gun fire at short range.

"Chemical warfare is a very economical method of waging war or maintaining peace. It is doubtful if 15 per cent of the German shells fired at American troops contained gas, yet that 15 per cent of gas shells alone accounted for almost 30 per cent of all our cansatires. The United States spent in the World War for gases, gas masks, gas plants, and all other needs of the Chemical Warfare Service $120,000,000, less than one-half of 1 per cent of the cost of the war, and yet with that one-half of 1 per cent of the cost of the war, and yet with that one-half of 1 per cent of the cost of the war, and yet with that one-half of 1 per cent of the cost of the war, and yet with that one-half of 1 per cent more than 4,000,000 masks were shipped overseas, sufficient to equip the critic army in France and leave on hand at the signing of the armiticle 1,000,000 masks were shipped to the British and the French and filled into shells by them. Several thousand tons of other chemical-warfare supplies were shipped to France. A number of plants were built, among which is the great plant at Edgewood Arsenal, one of the most valuable war plants in existence in the United States to-day.

"Give the Chemical Warfare Service 2 per cent of the appropriation for the Army, and, if the Navy destres it, 1 per cent of the Navy appropriation, and we believe that we can do as much to guarantee American success in war as could be had with 25 per cent spent in any other way.

"We have developed two new gases that may play a tremendous part in warfare, One is a new cloud gas, transmitted from toxic smoke candles. The old type of cloud gas required the burying of cylinders in deep trenches, requiring the work of many men for many days in order to prepare an attack. This method is obsolete. The modern method is to heat a solid. The solid gas, contained in a simple holder resembling a squat, old-fashioned hantern, is released when a fuse is lighted. It is Panama Canal and our own seacoast. If the British had had 5,000 tons of it in 1918 they would have stopped the German drive in the first 5 miles.

"Dyphenal-chlorarsine, made of carbolic acid, chlorine, and arsenic, is fired in shells or used in cakes in concentrated form. In high concentration it is deadly. In low concentration it causes severe coughing, pains in the chest, and vomiting. The effects of it simulate pneumonia. It penetrates all save the very latest types of protective masks and a drop or two of the stuff upon a man's clothing will put lim out of action. In defense it could be launched in cloud form against an enemy when the wind was adverse; and the stuff upon a man's clothing will put lim out of action. In defense it could be launched in cloud form against an enemy when the wind causes bilindness from excessive tears. It goes into shells and is spread by beat. This is the gas that will be used in the future to break up mobs, and it should be a tremendous asset to every police department. Mobs are helpless when they can not see. We are at work now upon a substance even more powerful than the tear gas developed by the war. At all times we conduct a warfare among ourselves in the Chemical Warfare Service. We do our best to find a gas that can not be stopped by our most modern masks and clothing. When we find that we invent new masks and new clothing; then look for a more penetrative gas. It is like the "Phosgene is a liquid gas that volatilizes almost instantly. It irritates the lungs very severely and produces symptoms that are familiar to doctors in pneumonia cases. In treating pneumonia patients.

"Lewisite, a new gas discovered by Prof. Lewis of Northwestern University, resembles mustard gas, but is more powerful in burning qualities. It volatilizes even more quickly. We are just beginning to produce it and it will undoubtedly play a large part in the next war.

"These are some of the principal gases that we are constantly experimenting with, and about which we know enongh already to be certai

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, with the unemployed not to be found between the seas, and labor receiving the most munificent reward ever known in the annals of American enterprise, the Republican Party made this solemn platform declaration-

We pledge ourselves to carnest and consistent attack upon the high cost of living-

And that promise was emphasized and dignified as a solemn covenant by its candidate.

We can promise no one remedy which will cure an ill of such wide proportions—

Said candidate Harding in his speech of acceptance-but we do pledge that earnest and consistent attack which the party platform covenants.

The chairman of the last Republican convention was not less earnest or less emphatic in assuring the people that if intrusted with power his party would keep that covenant, would make "that earnest and consistent attack."

The rise of prices

Said Senator Lodge-

the high cost of living which reach daily into every home is the most pressing as it is the most difficult and most essential problem which confronts us. Some of the sources of this trouble can be reached by legislation, although not all, and everything that can be effected by law should be done at once.

At last, Mr. President, we have the promised legislation. The Republican Party now proposes to solve "the most essential problem which confronts us" by an embargo upon foodstuffs, by piling upon the towering and abhored rates of the Payne-Aldrich bill a higher duty still upon food and raiment, by penalizing every producer of life's essentials who dares to offer food or clothing or shelter to your countrymen except at the same or a higher figure than it is sold at the place of production or in any other market of the world.

This bill makes a mockery of your President's sacred covenant, your party's solemn pledge, "a promise made to the ear and broken to the hope." The obligation to keep that pledge inviolate is a hundredfold more binding now than then. The promise was made at a time of high wages and universal employment; and now, in the midst of depression and distress, wage cuts on every hand, factories, mines, and mills closed everywhere or working upon reduced time, 5,000,000 desperate, jobless men and their wives and children in destitution and despair demand the fulfillment of that pledge, the keeping of that covenant. Their meager and diminishing savings will no longer sustain the intolerable burden of the existing cost of every essential of life. They are demanding, and they have a right to demand, that promised relief. They ask for bread and you give them a stone. They demand the enactment of legislation cheapening food and clothing and shelter, and you enact a bill deliberately designed to enhance the power of the Wool Trust, the Beef Trust, and the Lumber Trust in maintaining the existing scale of prices.

GROUNDLESS DREAD OF GERMAN COMPETITION.

Alleged dread of German competition is the "bogey man". used by the advocates of high and higher prices to frighten the American consumer into an acceptance of this legislation and a patient endurance of its burdens.

Prior to the Franco-Prussian War the German States exercised but a negligible influence upon international trade, controlling but a bare 7 per cent of the world's commerce. With the formation of the Empire and the acquisition of Lorraine, Germany's foreign commerce, especially her trade in coal and iron, advanced by leaps and bounds. Having despoiled her neighbor of enormous resources in ore and coal, and as ruthless in industrial methods in peace as in military operations in war, Germany did invade the markets of the world and by the most ingenious forms of destructive competition attempted to secure that control, especially over the steel and iron industry, which she had long enjoyed in the production and sale of dyestuffs.

In underselling competitors German industries employed the kartell, resembling in many respects the American trust, but better adapted to the invasion of foreign markets and the destruction of foreign competition. Under this system the constituent companies, while maintaining their separate organizations, sell to a central agency, and when necessary contribute a bonus in the marketing of a surplus in foreign markets. Behind these formidable combinations stood the Bank of Berlin and the moral support and illimitable resources of a mighty State.

Special reductions and rebates were cheerfully given to export trade, and a great merchant marine was subsidized to carry the German product at the lowest possible cost to the remotest corners of the earth.

Perhaps the most powerful of these kartells, the Central Verband of Dusseldorf, having secured the control of the iron markets of Germany, Austria, Switzerland, and Belgium, boldly attempted to take and to hold the foreign commerce of the world. Starting with a negligible trade, by 1911 Germany had caught and passed her greatest, most formidable rival, controlling 20 per cent of the world's output in iron against 18 of United Kingdom and at the same time becoming her closest competitor in the production of coal. Germany's exportations in the same year reached a total of 6,100,000,000 marks against 4,100,000,000 marks of Great Britain.

This powerful kartell did not hesitate to engage in the most destructive competition or to make any reduction in export prices. Nails selling at 25 marks per hundred kilograms in Germany were offered to the rest of the world at 14 marks. Such practices were openly avowed and boldly maintained by this organization.

Large steel plants-

Said the Verband-

must work to a certain maximum capacity without interruption if they are to remain efficient and produce at a minimum cost. It is impossible for the home market of any plant in any country to absorb a large output without interruption in the flow of orders due to periods of depression from economic causes outside the influence of the steel industry. * * * The Steel Verband therefore maintains that it is better for the entire economic life of the country in slack years at home to dispose of surplus products abroad at prices which may even cause a loss, inasmuch as the loss incurred by dumping abroad is in no comparison to the losses which would be incurred if production were reduced at home.

The bold avowal of such principles and practices was viewed with apprehension by academicians and political economists in America. David Jayne Hill in the December issue, 1915, of the North American voices an almost hysterical alarm:

In war it is expected that victory will cost a certain loss of life. For the sake of ultimate triumph the state (Germany) is ready to make this sacrifice. Why not then incur temporary losses for the sake of final victory in the bloodless battle of commercial supremacy? More than any other people the Germans were prepared to do this, and did it cheerfully. The same products of iron that in Germany itself sold for 120 marks a ton sold in England, South America, and the Orient for 103 to 110 marks, and in Italy for 75 marks.

What was the effect of this industrial warfare upon the domestic and foreign markets of America? Safely ensconced be-hind a tariff wall at home and abundantly able to take care of himself abroad, the American producer remained secure and serene. Undismayed by this wholesale "dumping" upon the world's markets, the head of the United States Steel Corporation approved the principles and emulated the practices of his German competitor. On June 2, 1911, Judge Gary said:

There is a practice all over the world of dumping, as it is called, surplus products. It is really for the same reason that the merchant at some seasons of the year clears his shelves and sells what he has on hand at less than cost. * * * This export question is a very important one, and I have no doubt this committee will consider it. Now, some years, and, in fact, many years, we do sell export at prices somewhat less than domestic prices, but the total result is that we can afford to sell for domestic consumption at a lower price. All countries do exactly the same thing. The net result is not prejudicial to the domestic purchaser but is a benefit to him.

The American manufacturer entered into active competition with this powerful Verband in the markets of Japan, China, Australia, Cape Colony, and the United Kingdom. According to a report of the commission on German kartells-

In 1890 the United States of America's output of wire was 457,099 tons; in 1902 it was 1,574,293 tons (rising from 1,365,934 tons in 1901 and 846,291 in 1900).

The United States Steel Products Co. exported 5,000 tons of steel a day or 1,500,000 tons per annum, and by 1910 the Steel Corporation's exportations reached the sum of 3,000,000 tons.

Other steel products were not less successful, and everything made of steel, from a wrist watch to a locomotive, American cash registers and typewriters, sewing machines, mowers and twine binders, offered at less than the alleged cost of production at home, found ready sale in the markets of the world in the face of the fierce competition of the German Kartell.

This German invasion of foreign markets was impossible without the aid of concessions and rebates by land carriers and subsidies on the sea.

With the rich ore fields of Lorraine returned to France, the Sahr Valley and the Ruhr region in the clutch of the Allies, railways in ruin, a great merchant marine driven from the sea, and a reparations commission at the throat of the Empire imposing an export tax on what is left of her mills and mines, what have we now to fear from the wrecked industries of this prostrate State? If such an expedient was not necessary to protect the American market from invasion when Germany was at the summit of her industrial and political power, it is worse than useless now.

It is demonstrated by hearings before the Finance Committee and admitted by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCum-BEEL that there is to-day no threat and no immediate prospect of this dreaded dumping from any country in the world. From whence will it or can it come? What continental country is prepared to supply its own needs, to say nothing of the sale of the necessities of life in markets across the sea? Two-fifths of all the wealth of the world has been obliterated by the rav-ages of war, has disappeared in fire and smoke. Will the ruined factories of Lille or the dismantled mills of Belgium to-morrow arise like a phœnix from their ashes? Are the gaunt peasantry and artisans of France and Belgium, clad in paper and in rags, now prepared to furnish us with soft woolens and fine linens at less than the market price at home or below the cost of production? Are we to apprehend a horrible inundation of beans and rice, eggs and oil from the Orient, while China, desolate and scourged, sees 20,000,000 of her naked populace perish miserably in the skeleton clutch of famine?

LEGISLATION UNNECESSARY.

Hon. William S. Culbertson, member of the Tariff Commission, in a recent and very admirable work entitled "Commercial Policy in War Time and After," inserts a most instructive chapter on antidumping legislation. He defines three kinds of trade practices properly falling under the head of "dumping," as follows:

(1) The sporadic selling of goods in order to relieve a surplus; that is, the offering of bargain sales in international trade;
(2) A permanent policy of foreign industries of selling in this country a portion of their output at a price below their domestic price in order to keep their factories running full time; and
(3) Unfair price cutting, the object of which is to injure, destroy, or prevent the establishment of an American industry.

The sporadic selling of goods in order to relieve a surplus and a custom of selling a portion of the output at less price in foreign than in domestic markets is almost universally practiced and justified by American industries. This act is ostensibly designed to meet the condition described by Mr. Culbertson "as unfair price cutting, the object of which is to injure, destroy, or prevent the establishment of an American industry." Section 201 of the act provides, among other things:

SEC. 201. (a) That whenever the Secretary of the Treasury * * * finds that an industry in the United States is being or is likely to be injured, or is prevented from being established, by reason of the importation into the United States of a class or kind of foreign merchandise * * * sold or is likely to be sold in the United States or elsewhere at less than its fair value, then he shall make such finding public to the extent he deems necessary—

And so forth.

This act by the very terms of this preamble is superfluous Under the proposed bill the injured party and unnecessary. is without remedy or relief. The law as now written prohibits such price cutting or unfair practices and provides liberal com-pensation to the domestic competitor for all injuries to his business or property resulting from such practices.

Section 801 of an act approved September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," provides:

provides:

That it shall be unlawful for any person importing or assisting in importing any articles from any foreign country into the United States, commonly and systematically to import, sell, or cause to be imported or sold such articles within the United States at a price substantially less than the actual market value or wholesale price of such articles, at the time of exportation to the United States, in the principal markets of the country of their production, or of other foreign countries to which they are commonly exported, after adding to such charges and expenses necessarily incident to the importation and sale thereof, in the United States: Provided, That such act or acts be done with the intent of destroying or injuring an industry in the United States, or of preventing the establishment of an industry in the United States, or of restraining or monopolizing any part of trade and commerce in such articles in the United States.

"Any person who violates or combines or conspires with any other person to violate this section is guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Any person injured in his hysiness or personets by reason of any yield.

Any person injured in his business or property by reason of any violation of, or combination or conspiracy to violate, this section, may sue therefor in the district court of the United States for the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages sustained, and the cost of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

Trade between individuals and nations alike is, in its last analysis, a mere matter of barter, each converting the commodity produced by labor or by skill into currency for the purpose of facilitating the exchange of values. Just how is the American producer to be bankrupted by the world's offer to give more of the things he needs, more of the necessities of life for the fruit of his toil than can be obtained under existing conditions? Is the American farmer to be impoverished because Germany insists upon giving more potash for his cattle or his corn than she offers to the domestic producer? Is he to be ruined in his business by receiving too much linen from Belgium or silks from France or fruits from Italy or rice and carpets from the Orient in a like exchange?

It is more than incomprehensible, it is an astounding proposition at this time. You have promised to lower the high cost of living and that means nothing more or less than a promise to lower the price of the things upon which we must live. In most instances the American trusts have refused to do it, and by this act you say no other shall.

PERILS OF PROBABLE RETALIATION.

I shall offer an amendment to this bill providing that its antidumping provisions shall apply only to countries which have enacted similar legislation. The Hon, Henry C. Emery, pro-fessor of economics of Yale University and appointed chairman of the United States Tariff Board by President Taft, very pertinently calls the attention of the American public to the imminent danger of retaliation incident to the enactment of such legislation.

What about our own position-

Says he-says ne—in regard to selling surplus products abroad? Do we wish to help start a movement as yet confined to a few sparsely settled colonies (Canada, Australia, etc.), which will become the practice of our leading competitors? What would be the position of our own export trade if all countries should adopt the principle that all goods can not be sold in foreign markets for less than the established price of the domestic market? We are in a peculiar position. In general, our domestic prices are relatively so high that dumping in our market is not so necessary as in other markets. The foreign manufacturer can commonly meet the situation by offering his goods at his regular home prices. On the other hand, prices in foreign markets are so low that the American exporter is largely driven by the sheer force of international competition to sell his surplus at some reduction. For this reason I believe the movement for an antidumping law may prove dangerous to American exporters.

The whole fabric of protectionism is based upon the assumption that the cost of production is greater at home than abroad. The minimum of protection is as a rule this alleged difference between the cost of producing a given commodity in a foreign country and in this. If it is not true that the standard of wages is higher in this country than abroad and the cost of production greater, then the whole system of protection is admittedly a sophism and an economic lie.

In that event the importer can now enter American markets without reduction in the price of his commodities. The do-mestic producer, with a higher level of costs and prices, further inflated by the necessary operation of a protective tariff, must sell his surplus abroad at a lower price or he can not sell it at all.

As Prof. Emery has well said:

Prices in foreign markets are so low that the American exporter is largely driven by the sheer force of international competition to sell his surplus at some reduction.

They who advocate such legislation are blind to the signs of the times and the sweeping changes of a few short years. Yesterday a debtor, to-day a creditor Nation; yesterday an importer, to-day the greatest exporter in the world. The entering of foreign markets is of more vital importance than a temporary embargo of our own.

I am indebted to the Hon. Cordell Hull, of Tennessee, for ably compiled statistical information showing that while importing less than four billions of foreign merchandise, we are selling eight billions annually abroad. Our imports of manufactured goods are but a little over four hundred and twentyfive millions per annum while our exports of such manufactures, ready for consumption, are over two billion five hundred millions. Our imports of manufactures for the use of manufacturers are about five hundred and seventy millions, our exports of such manufactures are over nine hundred millions.

To carry this colossal traffic we have builded and are maintaining a great merchant marine and for its successful operation we must have something more than ships; we must have cargoes; we must have foreign as well as domestic markets. In the great channels of international trade there are no empty Let the nations of continental Europe emulate our pernicious example and our foreign commerce is dead, our surplus products without a market and our proud ships left to rot in our ports.

THE EMERGENCY TARIFF.

All tariff legislation necessarily involves the disturbance and disruption of economic conditions. Industries affected by its schedules must be adjusted to it, and it has been hitherto uniformly admitted that such adjustment when made should be as enduring as possible. If this legislation is wise it should be permanent, and if unwise it should not be enacted at all.

It is designed by those who are enacting it not as a boon but as a bait for the farmer, an elusive and temporary relief offered for a few weeks in the vain hope that he may be committed to the pernicious policy of protection, estopped from complaining when inordinate duties are imposed for the benefit of protected industries and inordinate prices demanded by protected monopolies.

FOLLY OF CANADIAN EMBARGO.

The most pernicious thing in this pernicious bill is the attempted embargo upon Canadian commerce.

Prof. Edward Van Dyke Robinson, of the University of Minnesota, has ably demonstrated the consummate folly of erecting an impassable tariff barrier upon the Canadian border:

In spite of tariff barriers-

Says Prof. Robinson-

Says Prof. Robinson—

a vast and constantly increasing commerce is even now carried on across the Canadian boundary, which argues that each country urgently needs many things which the other produces. Reciprocity by removing or lowering these tariff barriers would consequently tend to increase this mutually profitable commerce. Consider for a moment the location and characteristics of the two countries and it must be apparent that they are designated by nature for mutual dependence and benefit. They lie side by side across the continent, a distance of more than 3,000 miles. No natural barrier separates them. Each side of the boundary is found the same race, the same language, the same customs, the same ideals of social and political justice, even the same scale of Wages and the United States, the investigations of the Tariff Board leave no room for the claim that protection is necessary to equalize differences in wages between the United States and Canada, for between eastern Canada and eastern United States, and Canada, for between eastern Canada and canada, for between eastern Canada and castern United States, western Canada and western United States and Canada, for between eastern Canada, moreover, is by nature merely a portion of a geographic unit, of which the other part lies this side of the boundary.

Thus the Maritime Provinces are physiographically a continuation of New Kagland, the St. Lawrence Valley corresponds to the Hudson Valley, the lands bordering the Great Lakes are alike on the north and the south, the prairies of Canada are indistinguishable from the Dakotas, and the Pacific slope in Canada reproduces the soil and climate of Washington. Except for the tariff walls which mark the boundary, commerce would flow back and forth along the lines of least resistance, each physiographic province as a whole producing those commodities for which its advantages are greatest and buying from the others those commodities which they in turn are best fitted to produce, precisely as accurs between the several sections of the United States.

Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, Minnesota and Iowa, Washington and Oregon, have prospered without any tariff wall between them, or, rather, have prospered chiefly because of its absence; why not Canada and the United States? What magic power resides in a mere political boundary, when conditions of life are the same on both sides of it, to render necessary or beneficial an obstruction to commerce which no man will deny would be injurious between the seweral States of the Union? The truth is that the same spirit and the same range of vision which demand a tariff wall between adjacent States, adjacent counties, adjacent townships, adjacent farms, for all these compete, yet at the same time and in a larger sense cooperate with one another precisely as Canada and the United States compete and cooperate; and what is beneficial in the one case can not prove injurious in the other. The whole question thus seems to resolve itself to this from the viewpoint of the farmer no less than of society at large: Shall we have the courage to follow established economic principles and extend to a neighboring and closely related country that commercial policy which has long been approved in our own domestic practice, or shall we suffer protection, like conscience, to make cowards of us all?

Developed Canada consists of a narrow band of territory from 200 to 400 miles in width and extending along our northern border for over 3,000 miles. Commerce between the eastern, central, and western Provinces of Canada, separated as they are by lofty mountain ranges and vast stretches of unpeopled wilderness, was for many generations practically impossible. No such barriers existing between these Provinces and the States south of them, the natural course of trade was north and south, the greater advantage accruing to the United States. Her meager manufacturing enterprises confined in the main to the Province of Ontario, inaccessible to the bulk of that vast domain, Canada for half a century vainly knocked at our doors, seeking as a boon the privilege of providing millions of tons of freight for our lake and land carriers, timber and grain for American mills, ores of iron, copper, nickel, and cobalt for American furnaces; hides for American tanneries; and flax and asbestos for American factories.

Purblind protectionism maintained the stubborn barriers in open violation of all the laws of commerce and of common sense, until the Dominion was forced to overcome the almost insurmountable obstacles imposed by nature to the development of her resources, to piece the wilderness, to span estuaries and broad rivers, and surmount the lofty peaks of the Rockies in bringing to her own mills and factories that rich store of raw materials which had been denied admission to our own. For that purpose Canada has constructed three complete transcontinental railway systems—the Canadian Pacific, the Grand Trunk Pacific, and the Canadian Northern—the total trackage of the Dominion amounting in 1916 to 37,000 miles, a per capita mileage twice as great as in the United States and greater than that of any other country in the world except Australia.

Canada is no longer a suppliant at your gates. She no longer begs for the privilege of enriching you. By an enormous outlay of wealth and labor she has diverted the natural course of traffic over more than 3,000 miles of widespread territory and between distant and isolated Provinces. For once an American tariff wall has developed the transportation facilities and manufacturing enterprises of a great country, but it has developed them on the wrong side of the wall. The roads stretch from British Columbia to Quebec and the mills and factories are erected, not in New England but in Ontario.

Canada's refusal to accept the reciprocity agreement of 1911 tendered by the United States has demonstrated the fact that prejudice and a blind worship of the fetish of protection is not confined to this country. Angered by the memory of ancient wrongs and deluded by the sophistry of the industrial interests of Ontario she, too, is capable of the folly of an embargo upon commerce between great countries, whose real interests are reciprocal, rendered mutually beneficial by all the laws of demolished the traffic between these countries, what will be the effect upon the commercial future of the United States? In this effort to exclude a few bushels of grain is it not well to first count the cost?

Your tariff wall will, in the first place, shut in two dollars of exports to Canada for every dollar's worth of her produce entering your own markets.

According to a recent report of your Tariff Commission, the exports from the United States to Canada are now second only to exports to Great Britain, and before the war already had equaled those to Germany. America's sales to Canada are more than twice as great as the combined sales to all the countries of South America. Canadian commerce forms approximately one-eighth of the total international trade of the United States, and about equals in volume that with Japan, China, Russia, the East. Indies, and the Philippine Islands combined. The need for imports of foodstuffs and raw materials from Canada has increased with the growth of population; and though the United States buys from Canada hardly more than half as much as she sells, her imports were more than four hundred millions in 1918 and formed almost 15 per cent of the total from all other countries.

I maintain without the fear of successful contradiction that at

I maintain without the fear of successful contradiction that at this time we are in infinitely greater need of Canadian raw materials than of her markets; that we receive a greater benefit from the things we buy than from those we sell; that of the two, the loss of her imports involves a greater injury to American industries and greater hardships to American consumers than even the destruction of our vast export trade to Canada—approximately, at this time, one billion annually.

For the year ending June 30, 1920, we received from Canada unfinished products as follows:

Copper to the value of	$11, 953, 752
Precious metals (except coin and gold bullion)	11, 973, 244
Nickel Asbestos Lumber and timber	7, 533, 437 6, 506, 629 70, 807, 220

Newsprint paper, 1,239,183,470 pounds, at	56, 963, 745

A total value of _____ 253, 989, 155

Is work so plentiful and are our industries so overburdened with unfilled orders that our furnaces and smelters no longer demand the metals and ores of Canada; are cutlery, tools, and domestic utensils so abundant that we no longer need her nickel, silver, and copper? Are homes and building materials so cheap, or rents so low, as to justify the exclusion of her wealth of lumber and timber?

Consider a prohibitive export duty upon wood pulp and print paper alone. We have spent untold millions in the purchase and protection of vast forest reserves in an earnest effort to preserve our rapidly vanishing timber supply and to conserve the flow of navigable rivers. Forests can be conserved and improved by the scientific cutting of timber for building materials, but the paper mill sweeps the forest as the sickle sweeps the grain. The size of the tree is immaterial. It is all ground into pulp. No other agent has wrought such havoc or denuded such areas as the paper mill. What would be the effect upon American forests should Canada, in retaliation, place an embargo upon the exportation of wood pulp and print paper? Where else in all the world will you secure 2,000,000,000 pounds of wood pulp? Destroy one-half of the available supply of this invaluable commodity, in the face of the present scarcity, and from whence and at what inordinate cost will school children obtain their books, or the publishers of the country the millions of tons essential to supply the magazines and great metropolitan dailies of America? No other commodity, with the possible exception of building materials, iron, and foodstuffs is so absolutely essential to the industrial and intellectual life of America.

It is a source of some surprise that the great manufacturing and industrial enterprises have not more earnestly and more seriously analyzed the commerce between these great countries.

Manufactured exports from Canada, consisting principally of iron and steel products, machinery, and agricultural implements, amounted in 1920 to $34,112,228.

On the other hand, we exported to Canada in iron, steel manufactures, rolling-mill products, machinery, vehicles, engines, and agricultural implements a total of $140,272,568.

The total of American imports for 1920, according to figures prepared by the Department of Commerce, totaled $464,029,014, and our exports for the same time reached a grand total of $800,632,849. I ask leave to incorporate these tables with my remarks as Exhibit A.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the tables will be incorporated in the RECORD.

Mr. STANLEY. It is claimed that in the face of a sudden emergency the farmer must have instant relief from an inundation of agricultural products from Canada, and that the American consumer is to be impoverished by an excess of cheap foodstuffs from the Dominion. Those who make this claim are ignorant of the nature of this commerce, or forget that our exports of agricultural products to Canada vastly exceed our imports.

In 1920 we shipped to Canada 1,211,831 boxes of oranges, valued at $6,066,962; 13,902,863 pounds of prunes, valued at $1,997,914; and 26,831,775 pounds of raisias, valued at $4,890,294. Other fruits, fresh and dried, shipped to Canada in 1920, amounted to $21,065,619.

For the same period we shipped 10,454,931 pounds of cotton and manufactures thereof, valued at $34,636,310; oil cake and oil-cake meal valued at $6,606,854; our exports of tobacco were valued at $9,310,976; our tobacco imports for the same period amounting to $65,878. We exported onions to the value of $465,826, our imports for the same period being $7,389.

Our total exports of the articles enumerated above amounted to $85,114,545, and our imports to $73,267, giving the American agriculturist a balance of $84,967,488.

I ask leave to insert at the conclusion of my remarks tables containing a complete and exhaustive summary of the interchange of agricultural products between the United States and Canada, from 1910 to 1920, inclusive, covering the exportation and importation of seeds, corn, grain, flour, vegetables, fruits, fresh and dried, cotton and wool, cattle and hogs, fresh and cured meats, and so forth. For the year 1920 this summary shows an excess of exports over imports of $62,967,488, and now this half-baked and so-called emergency bill proposes to relieve the farmers and gardeners of the United States by the instant and utter demolition of this splendid balance in their favor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the tables referred to will be printed at the conclusion of the Senator's remarks.

CANADIAN WHEAT,

Mr. STANLEY. The fear of the dumping of Canadian wheat upon the American market is the only reason yet assigned or assignable for this embargo upon Canadian commerce. Canada never has and she never can dump any material portion of her grain upon the American market, and if she did it could not appreciably affect the price in this country. The price of wheat in Canada, as in the United States, is necessarily determined by the price of the surplus from each country; and this surplus being sold in the same market and under practically identical conditions, it is a matter of small importance whether it is shipped from Montreal or Chicago. In each case, broadly speaking, it must necessarily bring the Liverpool price, less the cost of transportation.

A study of the ebb and flow of grain across the Canadian border shows that its movement is determined by freight rates or other local conditions rather than by any marked or permanent difference in the price level of the two countries, and that on the whole there is no material difference between exports and imports

From 1910 to 1920, inclusive, Canada exported to the United States 58,468,248 bushels of wheat. During the same period she imported from us 50,406,748 bushels of wheat, leaving a net excess for the 10-year period of 8,061,503 bushels. In other words, during this period Canada on the average "dumped" annually into the United States a net excess of about 800,000 Just how 800,000 bushels, or 8,000,000 bushels, could disturb the general level of prices on six or seven hundred million bushels of American wheat is inconceivable. I ask leave to include in my remarks in the RECORD a table showing the movement of wheat.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be included in the RECORD.

'Net excess of imports over exports in bushels

Mr. STANLEY. This duty of 35 cents per bushel is imposed for the double purpose of stopping the Canadian influx of grain and of increasing by that amount the market price of American wheat. If the impossible should happen and American wheat should advance as a result of this tariff 35 cents a bushel over the Canadian product, it would not stop the shipment of a single grain, for the simple reason that the shipper having paid the import duty would immediately recover it in the higher price paid in the American market.

We have just exported a surplus of 210,000,000 bushels of wheat. If this tariff raises the price of this commodity by 35 cents a bushel, no producer will ship any part of it abroad to be sold in a lower and an unprotected market, and in order to maintain this artificially created price level, every man, woman, and child in the United States will be compelled to consume at the higher price approximately one-half barrel of flour more next year than this. Unless this does occur, the unsold surplus in the United States will necessarily depress the price to the level of the Canadian and Liverpool markets, tariff or no tariff.

The truth is that wheat imported from Canada has been sent to mill rather than to market. The great mills in Duluth and Minneapolis produce a finer grade of flour by mixing the hard wheats of Canada with the softer grain raised in the States. Minneapolis mills between September 1, 1918, and August 31, 1919, received 75,000,000 bushels of grain, producing 16,554,000 barrels of flour and 1,224,000,000 pounds of feedstuff.

Let us assume that during the ensuing year Canada should ship into the United States 50,000,000 bushels of grain. It would not affect the price of the commodity one cent on the bushel.

It seems that only those industries which walk upon crutches can command the aid or the sympathy of the protectionist. These mills are importing wheat and exporting flour with the result that more than half a million tons of invaluable feedstuffs, made in considerable part from Canadian wheat, are available for the America producer of cattle and hogs and for the American dairyman. If 50,000,000 bushels annually of Canadian wheat should be imported into the United States, ground in American mills by American labor, millions of tons of this rich animal feed could be offered to the stock raiser. Is the stock raiser producing beef and pork or the dairyman milk and butter so cheaply that we must by legislation deprive him of the product of these great mills upon which he now depends for the maintenance of his herds and dairies?

CONDEMNED BY TARIFF COMMISSION.

For a decade the Republican Party has boasted that it was the creator and preserver of that sacred institution, the Tariff Commission. Again and again, in platform declarations, you have solemnly pledged the American people that you would take this issue out of politics, that you would not attempt to change schedules vitally affecting the revenues and the industries of the Nation without first calling into your councils staid and dispassionate philosophers and learned political economists far removed from the bias and personal ambition of the mere politician. Has the Tariff Commission been consulted about this iniquitous thing? I challenge you to find on or off the Tariff Commission any political economist, still preserving his intellectual integrity and professional self-respect, who will vouch for this naked piece of political demagogy, this transparent sham,

In their platforms of 1912 reactionaries and progressives alike pledged their allegiance to a tariff commission, the regulars declaring:

To accomplish this (tariff revision) correct information is indispensable. This information can best be obtained by an expert commission. * * * To apply tariff rates justly to these changing conditions requires closer study and more scientific methods than ever before. The Republican Party has shown by its creation of the tariff board its recognition of this situation and its determination to be equal to it.

The progressives were even more emphatic:

We pledge ourselves to the establishment of a nonpartisan scientific tariff commission, reporting both to the President and to either branch of Congress. * * * We believe that this commission should have plenary power to elicit information, and for this purpose to prescribe a uniform system of accounting for the great protected industries.

In 1916 a reunited Republicanism repeated the pledges:

We favor the creation of a tariff commission with complete power to gather and compile information for the use of Congress in all matters relating to the tariff.

The United States Tariff Commission has compiled two volumes containing more than 200 pages on the one subject of this proposed embargo upon Canadian grain, graphically presenting to this Congress the manifest advantage to the milling interests of America of an untrammeled opportunity to avail themselves of the hard Canadian wheat that, while fostering the cattle-producing and dairy interests, they may give to the consumer the staff of life of a better quality and at a lower cost.

This free movement of wheat-

Says the commission-

Says the commission—between the United States and Canada, making the North American crop a common source of supply, has certain demonstrable advantages.

* * * American elevators, distributing interests, and rail and ocean lines enjoy the benefits accruing from this larger volume of traffic; domestic mills, which had been losing ground to Canada in the export flour trade, are able to meet this competition through importing Canadian wheat for blending and milling; a larger volume of mill feed is available to the dairy industry, which consumes more mill feed than is yielded as a by-product of domestic flour consumption.

Vonce own commission has nitilessly exposed the transcevent.

Your own commission has pitilessly exposed the transparent folly of attempting to enhance the price of six or seven hundred million bushels of American wheat by excluding a few thousand carloads of Canadian grain from a Minneapolis mill.

Says this report-

Says this report—
from the question of price levels, however, it may be said with some certainty that inasmuch as the United States is on an exporting basis any wheat that is imported from Canada (aside from the question of special cases to meet special needs) released an equal amount of American wheat for export. This being true, it is not a matter of great importance whether the Canadian wheat reaches Europe directly or indirectly through the United States either in the form of flour or by releasing similar American wheat. Indeed, if we may assume that the European demand is controlling our market, as it does in normal times when we are on an exporting basis, there is a possibility that if the Canadian wheat has been thrown on the English market before the close of Lake navigation, instead of filtering slowly through the United States, the world price level, and therefore our own market, would have been depressed more than it was in the fall of 1920. From this point of view it seems fortunate for American producers that there was a buffer between the great Canadian surplus and the Liverpool market.

If this country were on a net importing basis, the prices obviously would be depressed by the imports from Canada, but at a time when heavy exports are going out of the country the relatively small imports probably do not alter the general rule that it is of no great importance to the American producer whether Canadian wheat reaches the European markets directly or indirectly through the United States. To the Canadian grower, however, access to the great American markets, to the mills, and to the shipping facilities south of the border is obviously a factor of substantial importance.

I am not surprised that the authors of this measure have submitted it to the consideration of the Senate in silence, if not in shame. The more discerning, I fancy, even now catch a glimmer of the handwriting on the wall. I assure the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber that, as a partisan, I can rejoice that you make this nostrum of protection a panacea for all the ills of the farm and factory and that you dare not put it to this practical and acid test. The farmer will be enlightened, not deluded, by the object lesson. Find he will, as find he must, that the value of these great, great staples whose sale is found and whose price is fixed in the open and competitive markets of the world is not dependent upon a tariff schedule. The tobacco grower in Kentucky and Tennessee, in Virginia and the Carolinas, herdsmen from Texas to Montana, the planter in the corn belt of Illinois, and the wheat grower on the Dakota prairies will learn, and shortly, too, that they are as little affected by the bogus schedules of this bill as by the precession of the equinox or the movement of the stars.

This act will demonstrate that protectionism-in the hands of trusts and monopolies the most facile instrument of extortion yet devised by the wit of man-is utterly impotent when applied to the cotton and cattle, the corn and grain of the American producer. It will demonstrate that while it can despoil, it can not defend; while it can plunder, it can not protect him.

The dupes of this doctrine in agricultural States will awaken to-morrow sadder and wiser men, and peradventure they will survey with a broader and keener vision the operations of these same gentlemen when they meet a few months hence to appor-tion, not for 6 months but for 60 years, if need be, to special interests and pampered monopolies those rewards which their political activities may have deserved or your political obligations may demand.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am a strong believer in political parties—in political organizations—for the reason that I believe no measure of any importance can be presented before the American people and no policy can be adopted by the American people unless there is some party behind the policy-some party that is capable of presenting the issues to the American

But while I believe in party ties, I am not blind to some of the evils which flow from those ties. I have seen the manifestation of that evil not only when the Republican Party was in the minority but to a greater degree now that the Democratic Party is in the minority. A great many Senators seem to think that the moment their party becomes a minority party their highest duty to their consciences and their States is to find some kind of a pitfall into which they can dump the other party, and therefore they struggle and strive day after day, holding up legislation in some wild attempt to see if they can not find some flaw in the position taken by Senators on the other side of the Chamber.

I may claim that I am, perhaps, as little inclined to be a blind party follower as any man in the Senate; and the fact that I am not inclined to always follow does not detract, in my opinion, at least, from my good, sound, Republican principles. I claim to be a protectionist, and I follow that rule in voting upon tariff legislation. I do not think that everything which emanates from the Democratic side of the Chamber is necessarily wicked and vicious and hellish, as some of my friends on the other side think of everything which emanates from this side of the Chamber. I find that political parties are made up from the people of the United States, and that the people either inherit their political beliefs, as they often inherit their religious beliefs, or are affected by their early environment. I believe that, as a rule, people try to be reasonably honest with themselves, and that there are few questions presented for argument in this Chamber which have not their two sides and can not be defended upon either side to a certain extent.

Therefore I regret-and I may say that I exceedingly regretwhen I see Senators with such transcendent ability as many of those on the other side of the Chamber possess spending most of their time in finding fault with the Republican Party and condemning it rather than discussing fairly and, I think, honestly, the real merits of any proposition before the Senate.

I am not claiming that if we pass the pending bill we are going to raise wheat immediately 25 cents a bushel or 35 cents a bushel. I do not claim for a single moment that grain, like any other article, is not affected by the world's supply and demand. There are many conditions which affect it. But I must claim that I know a little more about the trade between this country and Canada than the informant who furnished the material which was the subject matter just discussed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY].

The Senator from Kentucky says the prices of grain in this country must be governed by the surplus of both this country To a certain extent that is true. Then he backs up his proposition by a statement that we exported to Canada some 50,000,000 bushels of grain and Canada exported to the United States 48,000,000 bushels of grain, or some such amount, in a given length of time. I may not give his figures correctly, as I did not understand him exactly, but they are sufficiently accurate for this discussion:

The Senator perhaps did not quite understand all the conditions involved in the export of grain from the two countries. We do not export one bushel of wheat to be consumed in Canada, so' that eliminates 50,000,000 bushels. We may through the Welland Canal, for export, 50,000,000 bushels, which comes through Chicago, and from the Southern and Central States. We export practically none of the spring wheat which is raised in the Northwest, except in the form of macaroni. But the millions of bushels which come from Canada into this country; about which we are complaining, is the wheat we grind into flour and sell to the people of the United States. In other words, it comes into competition with the product grown in the United States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Curus in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah? Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator ought to state that we export to Canada millions of dollars worth of cereals in various forms during the year.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, yes; we do export some millions, I think, most of it perhaps canned, like canned corn, and such articles, and a great many things which, by reason of our superior milling facilities, we are able to export.

Mr. KING. Breakfast foods of various kinds.

Mr. McCUMBER. And other different articles of food. I am not questioning that. I will hold close to the discussion of wheat for a while, however, until I get through with that.

The Senator from Kentucky states that it must follow if there is a surplus in the United States and a surplus in Canada, the price of our grain will be governed by the surplus in Canada; If we had to send all our surplus of a certain kind of grain to a foreign country, that would be true. But it so happens that it is not true.

The Senator from Kentucky has theoretical ideas about this situation, but the wheat buyer up in Minneapolis has practical ideas, and he puts his ideas into effect. When he looks across the border and sees from thirty-five to forty-five million bushels of wheat on the other side of the lake which will come over here the moment he bids up a little higher for the American wheat, he is not going to bid up any higher for it. He is going to get his wheat just as cheaply as he can.

The Senator seems to be surprised that the Canadian wheat brings just as good a price as the American wheat. Why, of course, that is what we are complaining about. protection, however, to keep it out of the country, it would not, Naturally, water will seek its level, and if the prices should be a little lower on the Canadian side for a single week it would begin to flow over to this side, and the fact that it can flow over to this side means that it will keep our prices down as low as the Canadian prices, and that will always be the case just as long as we have no tariff wall between the two countries. I hope the Senator will understand that practical propo-

I wish to invite the attention of the Senator now to another matter that I do not think he has fully considered. Under normal conditions, when we know just what the world's supply is for several months ahead, if I sell May wheat as against December wheat, I will always sell May wheat at an advantage. What will measure the advantage? It will be the difference between the carrying cost from December until May. That is the higher. That is, when we are protected.

But now let us see. If you will look at the grain statistics for the last month you will find that May wheat has been selling from 18 to 28 cents below cash wheat. There is a reason for that, a real practical reason, and the farmer up in my State understands that practical reason and of course the wheat buyer understands what it is. What is it? There are 45,000,000 bushels of wheat over at Fort William and Port Arthur all ready to be shipped when navigation opens. Navigation generally opens in May. In ordinary years there may be half a million to a million bushels there, but now there are from 35,000,000 to 40,000,000 bushels there realy for shipment to the United States the moment navigation opens. That will add so much to our surplus, and if we have a given amount of surplus of course it depresses the price, but if we multiply the surplus three times over our price is depressed to a still greater extent. The wheat buyer understands that, the miller understands it, and whea he is buying for his mill for several months ahead he is looking over the country to see whether the visible supply is where he can get hold of it at a moment's notice. If he finds in his own country in the section from which he draws, say Minneapolis, from the spring-wheat section, that there is not a visible supply and that means a supply in the elevators from which he can draw, he will begin to bid up on his price to bring in the grain.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President— Mr. McCUMBER. Just a moment and I will yield. If that supply can come over from Canada and he sees that there is a supply that he can reach into, he does not have to bid up at all. He can get that wheat for the same price and just bring it across the lake, and it will not cost him any more than to bring it from any other section as near by.

I now yield to the Senator from Kentucky. Mr. STANLEY. As I understand the Senator, his argument is as to the price of wheat adjacent to the market, which means adjacent to the Minneapolis mills, to which this wheat is consigned, and not the level of prices over the country generally?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes. Mr. STANLEY. The contention is that it affects wheat in that immediate locality but not over the country generally?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; only as the price in one section of the country immediately reflects itself all over the country. It may not to any great extent, but it actually does. At one time we had 25 cents a bushel tariff on Canadian grain. We were exporting during all the years that we had that tariff. I am dealing with facts and not theories. Our prices averaged during that time at Minneapolis, which were the same at Duluth and on the Lakes, nearly 10 cents a bushel more than on the Canadian side. Sometimes they would be almost the same. There were times when even the Canadian wheat might be a cent or two higher, but taking the average throughout all those years, the prices as quoted day in and day out were always higher upon the American side, and when we were short in our spring wheat in 1909 and 1910, Minneapolis and Liverpool prices were practically the same during most of the summer. It showed that in that year we had some 18 or 20 cents above the prices on the Canadian side. They had plenty of wheat on the Canadian side to ship in and of the same kind that the Minneapolis miller uses. We did not have 25 cents a bushel advantage, but it did help us out; it gave us an average of about 10 cents when wheat was selling from 90 cents to a dollar a bushel.

Mr. STANLEY. The Senator speaks of the difference. differs widely from the conclusion reached by the Tariff Commission touching the difference in prices and costs. Does the Senator mean to contend that the difference in price was due to any other cause than the difference in the value of American money and Canadian money?

McCUMBER. Oh, no; this was before the war, and Canadian money was at par then. I am speaking now entirely of the period before the war, because that is the time when we had our tariff of 25 cents a bushel.

Mr. STANLEY. Taking it before the war, were the differences between the prices in Minneapolis and Winnipeg any greater than the difference between St. Louis or Kansas City and Minneapolis, or Charleston, S. C., and Minneapolis?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, yes; there was a greater difference, and I will tell the Senator why.

Mr. STANLEY. I think in that respect the Senator differs again from the findings of the Tariff Commission.

Mr. McCUMBER. I say it was reflected, but the difference would be greater, I think, during that period.

Mr. STANLEY. I will place in the Record at a later date the statement of the Tariff Commission, in which they differ radically from the findings of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Tariff Commission can not differ from the actual figures as shown from the daily reports which I gave some time ago. I have not them with me now. I went over a period of 10 years and took the Winnipeg prices, made a very little allowance for the difference between the higher standard of grain which they really required for their No. 1 northern and our No. 1 northern, and compared the two for, I think, the 10 years that I took at that time, and they averaged a little less than 10 cents difference.

Mr. STANLEY. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota if it is not true that No. 1 Winnipeg Canadian wheat brings a higher price in Liverpool than American wheat of the same alleged quality?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; a very little higher, because they require a little stricter grade of any kind of mixed wheat. I think when wheat was $1 a bushel the difference as I computed it at that time would make from 2 to 3 cents better for the Canadian than for the American on that basis.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understood the Senator a moment ago, he said that whereas there was a surplus of about one and onehalf million bushels of Canadian wheat, there is now a surplus of about 50,000,000 bushels?

Between 35,000,000 and 40,000,000. In Mr. McCUMBER. elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur there were on the 1st of April between 35,000,000 and 40,000,000 bushels of wheat.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us say about 40,000,000, whatever it may be. I wish to ask the Senator—and I am asking for information-why it was that this immense increase in the amount of surplus of Canadian wheat had taken place? Was it owing to an immensely increased Canadian crop or to an immensely decreased world consumption?

Mr. McCUMBER. I suppose undoubtedly that we can credit it to some extent to both. There was not a greatly increased Canadian crop, but there was a very good crop throughout Canada and a rather short crop in the spring wheat States in the United States. Canada produced the same kind of grain, and therefore there was a big demand by millers in this country for what they called the spring No. 1 northern wheat.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understand it, the increase of the Canadian crop over the normal Canadian crop in no way accounted for the difference between 1,500,000 and 40,000,000

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no; certainly not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then do I understand that the immense accretion of Canadian surplus must be due largely to the decrease in world consumption?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think it may be due to a decreased world consumption and a decrease of foreign demand because of the inability of many countries to buy as much wheat as they could use

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that.

Mr. McCUMBER. And therefore affording a better market in the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. When I said world consumption, of course, was speaking in terms of economics. The world consumption of a product is the amount of the product that the world can afford to take and pay for, so that the world consumption is effectually the world demand. Now, has not that same thing happened with regard to cotton and with regard to nearly everything else which we raise in the shape of raw material. and can we hope to cure a world condition like that by mere American legislation?

Mr. McCUMBER. It often happens when you can not make sick man well that you can at least keep him from dying. You may prescribe something that will prevent his demise en-I do not think anything that we can do in the shape of legislation to-day will make farming profitable in the United States at present wages and considering what the farmer has to pay for other things which he purchases, but it will make his losses less, and, therefore, I desire to do what I can for that reason.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I submit this thought to my friend from North Dakota: You can not keep a sick man from dying if he is dying for lack of food unless you give him food, and unless you are an altruist or philanthropist the world can not give him food unless he can pay for food either in money or in credit. So that you can not increase the foreign demand for American and Canadian wheat by American legislation which merely affects a little competition between America and Canada, nor by Canadian legislation which would merely affect the same thing. I add that because, of course, Canada will retaliate. Canada would be an immense ass if she did not retaliate if we start upon this economic warfare; but in either event the little settlement of our quantum of supplies for the competitive market could not enable the foreigner to buy the wheat or the flour unless we could reduce the price to him. Then, of course, pro tanto he could buy more; but when we increase our tariff between one another it is for the express purpose of increasing the price in the home market. If that has any effect in the foreign markets at all, the increase will be reflected there.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, no legislation, perhaps, that we can pass is going to affect the price that Canada can receive for her grain in a foreign market; I will admit that; but legislation which we can pass which will give to the American farmer exclusively, as against the Canadian farmer or any other farmer, his home market will pro tanto assist the American farmer. That is all we are claiming for the proposed legislation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One more question, and then I will prom-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield in a moment. the broad proposition that the American market belongs of right to the American farmer just so long as he can supply that market for a reasonable compensation for his labors. We are not asking anything further. We can not go any further than that, but we can go that far.

WILLIAMS. Mr. President, one more question, then I will resist the temptation further to bore my friend with questions.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Mississippi never borcs anybody.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The United States is now raising a surplus of wheat over and above the domestic demand for it, is

Mr. McCUMBER. On the whole, I answer the Senator's question yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course we have got to take ourselves as a whole; we are a Nation now. We are raising more wheat than we are consuming; and if the Senator admits that our local legislation can not increase the foreign price for wheat, then we have already overloaded the home supply of wheat, which can not be affected by merely cutting off foreign competition for the home market, where we already have an oversupply.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have answered that, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's parden. I shall not ask him to answer it again,

Mr. McCUMBER. I have answered by saying that our spring wheat States-and they constitute the section of the country principally affected-have not a surplus; in fact, there is somewhat of a deficit. If Canada did not supply what amounts to a surplus, then we would have a very much better price for the grain that is raised in the spring wheat States, and that condition, while it would not entirely remedy the situation in Kansas and Nebraska, would be reflected to a certain extent in higher prices throughout the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. At the risk of seeming to violate my promise of a moment ago, I desire to say that the different grades of wheat which are converted into various grades of flour are substitutable for one another as breadstuffs, as I

Mr. McCUMBER. They are not wholly so.
Mr. WILLIAMS. If that be the case, then we must consider the entire American demand for flour and the entire American supply of flour-edible flour, substitutable flour, one for the other. If we have more material out of which to make bread than the American people can eat or buy, then there is still a surplus in the market of all grades of wheat.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator were in my State he would soon find that the good housewife would never dream of using winter wheat flour. She knows nothing about it; she does not think it makes good bread; at least in her way of making it, it does not. It is not the bread that she is used to making; and she will buy nothing but "Pillsbury's best," or some one of those flours that are made from the wheat grown in the spring wheat States, which are very rich in gluten. Perhaps if I were to go into Kansas I should find that there they would not use that flour to any extent whatever, even although it is used to quite an extent in Washington, I notice by the advertisements, and the fact that every grocery store carries it. However, so long as there is less of the spring wheat raised in the United States than our mills can grind and find a market for, our prices will naturally go up unless we can reach right over across the line and open another spout and run in the Canadian grain of like quality.

I want to be perfectly fair in the discussion of this matter; I am not claiming everything for this legislation; but I know that it will do that much good, and I know that Canada has this granary right across the Lake, and sends us May wheat, which ought to be higher than cash wheat—for from 18 to 28 cents a bushel less than cash wheat. That is due entirely, as shown by the daily reports, in anticipation of the opening up of the Lakes for the transfer of Canadian grain to this country for consumption.

Mr. STANLEY rose.

Mr. McCUMBER. Now I yield to the Senator from Kentucky, and then I should like to pursue this matter to a conclusion.

Mr. STANLEY. As I understand, the Senator contends that generally prices for wheat are higher in the United States than in Canada?

Mr. McCUMBER. Under what conditions?
Mr. STANLEY. Under normal conditions.
Mr. McCUMBER. No; I do not claim that at all. Under the abnormal condition of having a tariff wall the Senator's statement is correct; under the normal condition of having no tariff wall naturally the prices of grains reach a common level, and they are no higher on one side of the line than on the other, because if they get higher on the one side than on the other, with no barrier at all, they immediately flow from one side to the other. I am not claiming that under normal conditions the prices are any higher here than in Canada.

Mr. STANLEY. I understood the Senator to say Mr. McCUMBER. What I am complaining is tha

What I am complaining is that if we put up a barrier, a wall high enough to keep out Canadian grain, we are going to have our prices at least considerably higher whenever there is a little shortage.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I understood the Senator to state just a moment ago that the prices for wheat just before the war were higher in Minneapolis than in Winnipeg.

Mr. McCUMBER. During the war the prices might have been higher for some little local reason in connection with the supply and demand, but there is no general range of prices higher on one side than on the other whenever grain can flow from one side of the line to the other. That naturally follows. The prices were higher when we had a tariff than when the tariff was taken off, when the two flowed together and the price was practically the same on both sides, making the ordinary allowance for a little speculation in Winnipeg at one time and a different speculation in Chicago or Minneapelis, which might send the price up or depress it, depending upon whether the bears or the bulls were at work.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to complete my remarks. The rates fixed by the agricultural schedule of the pending bill, it will be membered, will continue for six months only. Of course I want to continue them indefinitely, and hope to be able to do so in the next tariff bill. We expect to have a general tariff bill before the end of six months, and the rates provided in the pending bill will continue until that time. It is intended merely that they shall remain in effect until we can perfect a general tariff bill.

The pending measure provides for rates of duty on the articles enumerated according to the table duties which I ask permission to insert in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, while many articles of consumption in the United States have materially decreased in selling price, agricultural products, including those of cattle, sheep, and wool industries-I might mention cotton also-have decreased entirely out of proportion to the general decrease of commodities throughout the country. Bear that in mind. The decrease in the selling price of farm commodities rests upon an entirely different basis from the decrease in the case of other commodities. I wish Senators to consider that proposition for a moment. Most commodities in the United States had been held up for excessive prices so long that the people had become unable longer to purchase at those excessive prices. ceased buying, and in order to induce sales it became necessary to reduce the prices of such commodities. That is not true of agricultural products. There is just as much bread and butter and meat and poultry and eggs and vegetables consumed in the United States per capita to-day as there were when those products brought from two to three times the present prices. prices have not fallen because of a decrease in demand. A man can wear his shoes or suit a month or six months longer if he can not afford to pay the prevailing prices for these articles, but he can not let his stomach go empty for one day, no matter what the price of food may be. We must, therefore, look elsewhere to ascertain the cause of the tremendous slump in the price of agricultural products.

We will find, Mr. President, that the decrease is due entirely to an accumulating surplus of agricultural commodities in the United States, practically all brought about by enermously increased or inflated importations. There has never been a year for the last century in which we have not to some extent been exporting agricultural commodities. We have always had some surplus. The greater proportion of our products have always been consumed in this country. Our prices, therefore, have been fixed by the home demand, affected, of course, by the general world supply. The greater our surplus the smaller, naturally, our price. The visible supply—that is, the supply that is in the immediate reach of the miller—is the principal factor that governs the price which he offers for grain. If the supply is somewhat limited in this country, or in a certain vicinity, and we have something of a tariff wall between us and the great Canadian granary, the Minneapolis miller may be compelled to advance his price in order to keep his mill going. If he can tap this Canadian granary without any duty whatever, it will not be necessary for him to increase his bids.

The price of our wheat has been driven down to the lowest possible point because of enormous importations and imminent danger of still greater importations. The prices of our sheep and cattle have been driven down by reason of the enormous amount of shipments of mutton and beef and other meats. Our wool has been driven down because of the stupendous increase in the importations of wool from foreign countries.

I will elucidate by a few figures on the wheat situation, without repeating anything I said in my previous argument on this question.

As shown by the report of the Bureau of Markets, prior to 1914 the heaviest importations of wheat in any crop year were 2,673,000 bushels, and 150,000 barrels of flour, which, converted into wheat, makes about 60,000 bushels of wheat, and that would make somewhere about 3,000,000 bushels of importations for that year. That was the year ending June 30, 1914. general average for the several years just prior to 1914 was less than 1,000,000 bushels.

Now, turn to the year 1920. According to this same report, for the four months of September, October, November, and December there were imported for consumption in the United States from Canada 37,800,000 bushels of wheat-that is, for home consumption, not for export from the United States. In January and February the imports by rail to Minneapolis and Duluth amounted to 6,800,000 bushels in addition.

On March 1, 1921, Canada had a net surplus of 45,000,000 bushels of wheat, about 35,000,000 of which were in store at Fort William and Port Ontario, in country elevators and cars in western Canada. With the opening of navigation these 35,000,000 bushels will be immediately loaded onto the United States. How much is coming in now I can not say, but I want to read from this same report a few items that may interest Senators who want to get at the real truth of the effect of Canadian importations.

I quote:

Wheat reserves in Canada will move slowly until about May 1, when, with the opening of navigation, it is predicted by the Chicago Board of Trade houses, there will be a heavy movement to the United

That accounts for the difference in May wheat. This is from official sources:

Speculators on the Chicago Board of Trade have begun to anticipate the heavy movement of Canadian wheat by selling the May future. The discount of the future under cash wheat indicates such selling pressure on the future and an absence of pressure on cash wheat.

Cash wheat, No. 2 red winter, in Chicago on March 19 sold at 22 to 23 cents over the May future, or at $1.62 to $1.65, and No. 2 hard winter at 11 to 15 cents over May, or $1.53 to $1.57. A year ago No. 2 hard winter sold at $2.48 and two years ago at $2.37.

This is from the Bureau of Markets:

In Minneapolis, on the 19th, No. 2 dark northern spring sold at 10 to 28 cents over Minneapolis May, or at $1.47 to $1.65. A year ago No. 2 dark northern sold at $2.70 to $2.95 and two years ago at $2.44.

Now, I turn to a later report which I selected from the Jamestown Alert, a daily of my State, quoting the Minneapolis prices. This is April 27, just a few days ago:

MINNEAPOLIS GRAIN.

MINNBAPOLIS, April 27.

Flour unchanged. Shipments, 45,416 barrels. Bran, $16. Wheat receipts, 314 cars, 101 cars a year ago. Cash No. 1 northern, $1.30\(\frac{1}{2}\) to $1.38\(\frac{1}{2}\); May, $1.18\(\frac{1}{2}\)—

Making 20 cents difference-July, $1.113.

And so on. The further you get ahead, the lower the price is, depending upon the anticipated shipments from Canada.

I remember when we were discussing the Taft reciprocity proposition in the Senate, and I would pick up the daily papers. One day it was thought that the reciprocity program would go through and wheat would go down from 6 to 10 cents a bushel. The next day it was reported that it would fail to go through, and wheat would go up from 6 to 10 cents a bushel in the Min-neapolis and the Duluth markets, all owing to the probability or improbability of free trade between the United States and Canada.

Mr. President, it is a waste of breath for any Senator to philosophize about the price in the United States being affected solely by the Liverpool price. The price is always affected by the principal place of consumption, and the United States consumes seven times as many bushels as are ever exported from the United States, and its home consumption is the main factor that fixes the price.

Of course, we are governed by the world supply and demand, and a great world supply reflects upon our price and depresses it, and a world deficit naturally affects it; but what affects it in addition to that, and what we are most concerned in, is the question of holding the American market for the American farmer.

Now, Mr. President, I want to put into the RECORD a statement of the shipments of flaxseed into the United States.

I notice that Canada exported to the United States, between 1910 and 1914, 4,110,370 bushels of flaxseed. That was five years ago-less than a million bushels a year, about 800,000 bushels a year. In 1920 it was increased to 1,687,813 bushels. Now, I come to Argentina. Argentina exported to the United States for those four years a little less than 2,000,000 bushels. That would be less than half a million bushels for each year; but in 1921 she exported almost 23,000,000 bushels. Does anyone think that that does not have any effect upon the price of flax in the United States-more than twenty times as much as she had ever exported in any single year before? To protect the American market we are giving a higher protective duty.

I am not going over the wool schedule, nor the sugar schedule, nor the other schedules. They were fully discussed at the last session, and I do not think any further discussion is needed. All I want is that the Senate should clearly understand the real situation as it affects the American people at or near the Canadian border.

As to meats, I quote the following from the Bureau of Mar-

There is a great surplus supply of meats and meat products in the United States, and prices of live stock have been driven to a decline much more rapid than the decline in cost of production while imports of meats have further depressed the market. This constitutes a meance to the live-stock industry. Live-stock operations (before the war frequently precarious and unprofitable) did not during the war build up a reserve of profits sufficient to offset the present losses due to the current marketing of war stimulated production at less than its cost. Chicago market live-stock prices in February, 1921, reached index figures ranging from 104 to 111 (based on 1913), while general commodities were 167, and manufactured articles 230. Allowing for increased freight to the market, farm prices of live stock are practically at or below prewar levels. The price drop has been so rapid that the value of animals in many cases is now less than the amount of loans secured by them, wiping out the grower's equity entirely.

With reference to butter, the Bureau of Markets has this to

With reference to butter, the Bureau of Markets has this to Previous to 1919 our annual importation of butter varied from 1,000,000 pounds to 7,000,000 pounds, and in only one year, 1914, was it greater than 3,000,000 pounds. The exchange and credit situation stimulated imports, and we received from foreign countries over 9,000,000 pounds of butter in 1919, and in 1920 our imports reached the unprecedented figure of 37,000,000 pounds. In January, 1921, we imported 3,800,000 pounds and in February 1,896,000 pounds.

I do not care to discuss the assertion so often made that this is giving the farmer a gold brick. If it is giving it to him, we are not charging him a cent for it and it will not do him any harm; but the same Senators who are arguing that the farmer will not get any benefit from this legislation are with equally zealous and earnest argument declaring that it will raise the price of wheat 35 cents a bushel and that the consumer will pay I can not imagine anything more inconsistent. If the consumer will pay it, he can afford to pay it. If we should add 35 cents to the price of every bushel of wheat in the United States and it raised the price that much to the consumer, the consumer would pay 4 mills more for every loaf of bread that he ate, and as he eats half a loaf of bread a day upon the average for each person, it would cost him 2 mills more a day; and if he can make the farmer prosperous by paying 2 mills a day more for what he consumes, it is the best investment he can ever make, because it will enable the farmer to buy the products that the consumer is producing with labor that costs from $5 to $15 a day, while the farmers over the country to-day are not earning a dollar a day.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. McCUMBER. I yield, Mr. President. I am ready to yield

Mr. KING. I do not know that I am controverting the solicitude which the Senator has exhibited for the farmers. Indeed, I think the farmers probably have not been sufficiently compensated for the labors which they have performed in the development of our country. But if the argument which the Senator is making is sound, does not the Senator concede that it would be wise to increase the cost of everything which is produced, upon the theory that it would enable the vendor and the producer to buy more of other articles which are manufactured, so that as a result the more you pay for goods the greater your prosperity will be? Is not that the reductio ad absurdum to which the Senator's argument leads?

Mr. McCUMBER. No, Mr. President. You may, by excessive labor costs, brought about from any cause that you see fit to assign, make two-thirds of the country live upon a plane whereby they can expend five times as much as the other third can possibly earn. That is the trouble we have to-day. city prices are so much in advance of the prices and the earnings in the rural districts that for everything which you purchase in the city, from your land, which costs $100 a square foot, to the buildings which are constructed on it with bricks that cost a dollar apiece, they have to charge enormous prices, while they hope to recoup as against the farmer and compel him to produce for almost nothing. I want the farmer to earn as much as the carpenter. I ask the Senator if he does not?

Mr. KING. I would like to have him earn a little more. Mr. McCUMBER. I want the farmer to earn as much as the carpenter. I want him to have as good a wage as the bricklayer. I want his children to dress as well. I want them to have just as much money to spend at the movies and to take their families to the theater. I want them to be able to ride in a good auto and not in a flivver always, and to live the way the rest of the people live. What we want is to equalize the earning capacity of the American people, and the farmer's earnings are not a quarter of the earnings in any other possible line of business. By helping agriculture along in any way we can we are blessing the country at large.

RECESS.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, if no other Senator desires to address the Senate to-day upon the pending bill, and I am informed that there is no one, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 10, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, May 9, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord God, we do not come unto Thee in fear and distress, but with a psalm of human thanksgiving, for Thy mercies are with us as the bread of life, and Thou dost give us hope and aspirations not born of time. Continue the bestowal of Thy blessings upon us, and may everyone have a place in Thy great heart, which is coextensive with the needs of man. God bless our homeland and preside over its life and destiny. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen,

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. J. Res. 52) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to furnish water to applicants and entrymen in arrears for more than one calendar year of payment for maintenance or construction charges, notwithstanding the provisions of section 6 of the act of August 13, 1914.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1084) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes, had agreed to conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. McCormick, Mr. Moses, and Mr. Underwood as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ADDITIONAL PAGE.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration for the privileged resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 77.

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint an additional page for the remainder of the present Congress, to be paid compensation out of the contingent fund of the House, at the rate of $82.50 per month, said appointment to date from the opening of the present session.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, this is the usual resolution to provide a page to attend the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL]. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

CLERK, COMMITTEE ON DISPOSITION OF USELESS EXECUTIVE PAPERS.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the consideration of another privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 75.

Resolved. That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, until otherwise provided by law, compensation at the rate of $2,000 per annum for the services of one clerk for the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers, said compensation to date from April 1, 1920.

The committee amendment was read, as follows: Strike out "April 1, 1920," and insert "April 11, 1921."

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House. the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers and Documents has not half completed its work. It worked during the vacation, and wishes to continue and complete the work it now has in hand and dispose of these papers which are cluttering up the files of the departments. The clerk to the committee was paid during the vacation on an interregnum certificate from the committee. This is to continue the work that was authorized last session. I ask for the adoption of the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5010, the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5010, with Mr. Tilson in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5010, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5010) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose an amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] was pending.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 9, after the word "all," strike out the figures "$29,-350,000," and insert in lieu thereof "$27,500,000."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, the committee feels that the amount named in the bill is as low as it is safe to go in the matter of subsistence for the coming year. As stated on Friday, the Committee on Appropriations cut the cost of the ration several cents below its present cost to-day. We cut it from its present cost of 42 cents to an estimate of 37 cents for the next fiscal year. We are taking quite an element of risk in cutting it that low, but believe it would be unsafe to go to a lower figure, because the War Department would have the right to bring in a deficiency, of course, for any amount it may cost them to feed the Army over that.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In ascertaining the amount is there anything in addition to what you call the constant items of the subsistence itself included in arriving at this figure?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know how much the constants are in the matter of subsistence. I imagine the constant cost is lower in the matter of subsistence than in any other item in the bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What I am anxious to know is whether or not there is anything included in this amount other than-

Mr. ANTHONY. No; I think the cost of labor and cost of storing and all that is carried in other items in the bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Kansas to the situation under this item according to his own statement. When the bill was reported providing for 168,000 men, the appropriation for subsistence was $29,350,000. By action of the committee the enlisted personnel has been reduced to 150,000 men. Now, the gentleman from Kansas says that notwithstanding that reduction in the enlisted strength there should be no reduction in the amount of money appropriated for subsistence. Manifestly if that is true, the appropriation of $29,000,000, which the gentleman now says is needed for 150,000 men, would have been entirely inadequate for 168,000 men. Now, I have taken the The gentleman says the ration figure trouble to calculate this. is 37 cents. If you will figure on 37 cents for 168,000 men it amounts to $22,688,400, and in addition to that, according to the hearing before the committee, there should be included what they call the constant items of subsistence.

Those constant items of subsistence are set out in a table on page 540, based on an Army of 175,000 men. It includes, for instance, subsistence for 9,000 Philippine Scouts, when we have not, according to the hearings, more than 7,000. But even taking their figures, the figures of the War Department, the constants amount to but $3,741,000, which added to the total of $22,688,400 for 168,000 men would total only $26,429,000. taking your 168,000 men at 37 cents each, throwing in $3,741,000 under the head of the constant items of subsistence, you have only got $26,429,000, and the bill provides $29,350,000. But the situation is that the committee has reduced the personnel to 150,000 men, so let us calculate for 150,000 men, not at 37 cents, but allowing them 42 cents each, which is 100 per cent more than it was in 1914. Forty-two cents is what the ration costs Taking it for granted that there will be no decrease during the next year in the price of foodstuffs, and basing it on 5 cents more than the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. An-THONY] bases his figures on, 42 cents for 150,000 men amounts only to $22,995,000. Then taking your constant items for an Army of 175,000 men, which amounts to $3,741,000, it makes a total, based on 42 cents per man, of $26,736,000. Then, just for good measure, I throw in another million dollars to make it $27,500.000, which was the amount provided when the committee originally reported this bill in the last session. And I call your attention to the fact that providing not 37 cents but 42 cents and anyone can take a piece of paper and calculate it—and throwing in $3,741,000 for constant items, then you are still $1,000,000 under the amount previously carried in the bill, $27,500,000, and here you are going to add $2,000,000 more and make it $29,000,000, the amount the gentleman wants to retain in this bill. Can the gentleman tell me where there is any other item besides these constant items that is included in the I have thrown in $1,000,000 just for good measure, I have allowed 42 cents for rations per day instead of 37 cents, and I think the House is entitled to stand by the original recommendation of the committee for $27,500,000 for an Army of 150,000 men.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to hear that the gentleman is in favor of economy. I hope he will really be in favor of it when we reach items where there can be further deductions. As to this item, Mr. Chairman, the War Department estimates an expenditure of over $31,000,000 even on the basis of an Army of 150,000 men. As I said on Friday, I thought at the time this bill was reported that the committee was rather low with this item, even on the basis of an Army of 150,000 men. We can not afford to take any chance of starving the Army of the United States. In any event, the law fixes the ration. The rations are bought in the market on competitive The amount expended would be the amount required to buy, at the market price, the number of rations necessary for the men who are in the establishment. So that if the same were reduced and a larger sum was necessary, there would be a deficiency. On the other hand, if any less sum is required, less would be spent. And this amount ought not to be reduced.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move as a substitute to strike out the section. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized. Mr. BLANTON. I have made this pro forma motion merely to get the floor. Mr. Chairman, the other day, as a basis for this large appropriation and the apparent surplus in it, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] called attention to the fact that the Navy ration allowance was much larger than that of the Army, and he indicated that the Navy ration was more elaborate and more extensive than that of the Army; in other words, that the Navy boys received more food and costlier of the Army. Why, we all know that when a boat leaves a port and is on the high seas for thousands of miles before it reaches another port, that boat has to carry provisions at a much higher rate of cost than they could be procured for at Army camps. And the Navy must of necessity buy food at various foreign ports where the food costs much more than the Army has to pay for it.

Mr. HICKS. And there is also the question of spoilage. Mr. BLANTON. Yes. And everything they eat on a ship, and even drink, costs more than on land.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is not there the same chance of spoilage

Mr. BLANTON. They do not have to buy so much and do not have to keep it so long. They have to buy sometimes a different kind of food for ships than that which they use in camps on land. There is every reason why it should cost more. I can see plainly why the Navy ration costs more. But the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] says we should not starve our boys by cutting down this appropriation. There is no danger of starving them. This is one item upon which by law the Army has a right to create a deficiency if the Congress does not appropriate sufficient money. If we fail to appropriate sufficient money to feed the Army, we have not caused any injury to the Army, because the Quartermaster General can go, without the authority of Congress, and buy food sufficient to feed the Army, and then it is forced upon Congress to provide money to meet such deficiency. But, on the other hand, I will state to the gentleman from Wyoming whatever sums we ap-propriate, if too large, we can almost feel sure that the Army is going to find some way, somehow, under the law or otherwise, to spend the money.

It is much better, I assure my colleague, to follow the plan of the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina, even if he is a Democrat; to follow his suggestion of economy and save the money which is shown to be unnecessary. I want to say that ever since I have been in this House every move that has been suggested by a colleague, if it is good, I vote for, whether the move is proposed by a colleague on this side of the aisle or on the other side. Whether Republican or Democrat, I do not care. I do not look to his politics to find out whether I should vote for his proposition. I look to the merits of the proposition. The gentleman from South Carolina has very clearly disclosed here that it is unnecessary to appropriate at least two or three million dollars of the sum that we are providing in this bill. Well, if it is unnecessary, I am sure that you will accord to him good judgment on these matters. I am sure that you will accord to him a spirit of fairness, and I am sure that you will accord him good judgment on this question, and of the fact that he has given study and investigation of all subjects. If his idea is good, then you friends of ours on the other side of the aisle have no excuse for not following him and acting upon his suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that the figures given by the gentleman from South Carolina may be approximately correct for 150,000 enlisted men in the Regular Army. But when you take into consideration the fact that this appropriation covers subsistence for a good many other men outside of the 150,000, it is found that the amount is not excessive. This covers subsistence for general prisoners, of which we have three or four thousand, and it covers the subsistence allowance of $1.08 per day for the cadets at West Point, which runs at about $500,000 a year. It also covers the subsistence for Indian guides and scouts, and for the subsistence of masters and officers and crews of transports, and employees of the vessels of the Army, of which there is a large number, which runs into rather large money. It also covers commutation of meals, including hot coffee and rations, to those men who are traveling and entitled to them under Army regulations. The very large sum of $7,000,000 is estimated by the War Department for these The troops are constantly traveling, and they have to secure meals en route when they are away from their barracks, and that all runs into a large sum of money. It also includes items of meals for recruits, which usually runs into a large sum, although it is not expected that we shall have many recruits this year. But we have allowed for all these.

Mr. KAHN. What is the commutation allowance per man?

Mr. ANTHONY. The cost of the ration is 42 cents.

Mr. KAHN. That is much less than it was formerly?

Mr. ANTHONY. Very much less Mr. KAHN. It is coming down? Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. Very much less.

food than the boys in the Army.

Now, I understand that such is not the fact. I can see a real reason why the Navy ration should cost more than that ferred to. The estimate for the cadets at the United States Military Academy is $512,460. The estimate for the Philippine Scouts is $906,883. But all of those items, embracing altogether 10 items, only make a total in the revised estimates of $3,741,-423, which I have added in my figures.

Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The CHARMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 68.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Jones of Texas: Page 24, line 9, insert as a new paragraph:

"The War Department is hereby directed to cancel and abandon the claim against the State of Texas in the sum of $18,583.44, for United States property issued to the National Guard of Texas and lost, damaged, and destroyed during and immediately after the storm and flood at Corpus Christi, Tex., and surrounding country, September, 1919, the property having been furnished for the relief of the civilian population."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold that?

No. I will make it. Mr. MONDELL.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems clearly subject to a point of order.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I concede, Mr. Chairman, that it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. CONNALLLY of Texas rose,

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony] a question. What is meant by the language, on lines 9 and 10 of page 25, "For sale to officers, and including also fuel and engine supplies required in the operation of modern batteries and established posts"? What does that mean? It is the sale of what? What is the committee talking about?

Mr. ANTHONY. "Sales to officers, and including also fuel and engine supplies required in the operation of modern batteries at established posts." Well, it is for sale of these supplies to officers.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. What supplies?

Mr. ANTHONY. Of the supplies covered in this item. The supplies are sold to officers and enlisted men.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. That is the law now. You do not require any new legislation for that, do you?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is evidently carried in the bill for that purpose

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. This is an appropriation bill. Do you carry on the appropriation to carry on the sale?

Mr. ANTHONY. This is to cover the expenses of such sales to officers, and the sums realized from such sales are, of course covered back into the Treasury.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does it mean automobile batteries? What are you talking about?

Mr. ANTHONY. It may mean a variety of things. The commissaries all over the country sell to officers and enlisted men and to the large number of employees. They probably buy any things from a spool of silk to a piece of machinery, for all I

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Hill: Page 34, line 10, after the word "purposes," insert "And provided further, That none of the funds appropriated or made available under this act shall be used for the maintenance or operation by the War Department of any barge line or freight service between Baltimore, Md., and New Bern, N. C., carrying freight as a public carrier in competition with common carriers operated by private enterprise maintaining regular service."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas reserves a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, there is a barge line being run between Baltimore and the point named. This amendment will save about $60,000 or more a year.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order. Let us have the point of order disposed of.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then I withdraw the point of order.
Mr. BLANTON. I renew the point of order—that it is new legislation on an appropriation bill, unauthorized by law, and that it is not germane.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, it is not new legislation. It will save $60,000 or more a year to the Government by preventing expenditures

Mr. BLANTON. There is nothing on its face to show that it comes within the Holman Rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it not a limitation? It simply provides that none of the funds herein appropriated shall be available for certain purposes. It seems to the Chair that it limits an appropriation which is being made here. If it does anything further, the Chair will examine and see if there is any positive legislation in it.

Mr. BLANTON. From the reading as I caught it I think it goes further.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will examine it. Does the gentleman from Maryland wish to be heard on his point of order?

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent. in lieu of remarks, to print letters from the Merchants' & Manufacturers Association of Baltimore City, the Baltimore Chamber of Commerce, the Export and Import Board of Trade of Baltimore City, and Wathen & Co., vessel and barge owners, of Baltimore, and a table showing approximate salaries and various expenses of the Inland & Coastwise Waterways Service, Intra-coastal Division, War Department.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order. Let us dispose of the point of order first. If it is in order, then the gentleman will have his opportunity to discuss it. I understood that the gentleman desired to expedite consideration of the bill, and for that reason I suggest that the point of order be disposed of first.

Then I ask unanimous consent, as I have indi-Mr. HILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, much as I regret it, I feel' impelled to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma objects. Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman briefly.

Mr. HILL. Is this on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. On the point of order. That is the only thing now in order. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a barge line is intended to provide a better mode of transportation-a cheaper mode-than the ordinary transportation in use, to wit, in most cases railroads. I take it that these letters which our colleague from Maryland has asked to put into the Record come from competitive business interests, if you please. I made no objection to printing them in the RECORD because I thought the gentleman ought to be permitted to put them in for whatever they were worth.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I do not see that this has anything to do with the point of order, and I make the point of order that the gentleman is not addressing himself to his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas on the point of order. The gentleman will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. My mind is not as alert and brilliant as that of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh], but, according to its own light and the methods by which it does work, the remarks I was making did appear to me to be pertinent to the point of order, and I will try to confine the other remarks that I make to the point of order.

We have this barge line provided for to meet existing conditions. Certain methods for operating this barge line are provided for in this bill. The gentleman seeks to prevent any part of this appropriation from being spent on those barges. I take it that it must be competitive business interests only that do not want this barge line operated, the purpose of such barge line being to reduce freight charges and transportation rates in the interest of the whole people. On the face of it—

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine himself to the point of order. The merits of the question are not now up for consideration. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order, pure and simple.

Mr. BLANTON. I submit that the amendment is not merely a limitation but that it goes further and that it changes present The present law authorizes this appropriation.

amendment offered by the gentleman is a change of law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. It seems so clear to the Chair that the proposed amendment is purely a limitation that it hardly seems worth while to enlarge upon it; but the Chair will cite at least one decision almost exactly in point, which the Chair believes will satisfy even the gentleman from Texas. Does the gentleman wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the Chair yield for a question there?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.
Mr. ANTHONY. Would it affect the status of the point of order if it should prove that the money for the operation of this barge line is not appropriated under this item of transportation by water but that it is appropriated in another measure? My information is that the money for the operation of this barge line comes from the item of transportation facilities on inland and coastwise waterways carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The Chair assumes that the gentleman The CHAIRMAN. from Maryland would not attempt to do a futile thing. If there is no appropriation for this purpose carried in this bill then it would be a futile thing to offer this amendment here.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am not positive that none of the funds are carried in this item for transportation in the Army bill or that none of those funds are used in the operation of this barge line, but it is a fact that the sundry civil bill did carry an item of $4,000,000 for transportation facilities on inland and coastwise waterways under which the other barge lines and river routes are being operated by the War Department.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, under the provisions of the gentleman's amendment it applies to any section of this act, as I understand that it is the entire act that comes under the purview of the gentleman's amendment, and not this particular

The CHAIRMAN. It would appear to the Chair that if germane at all to this bill it would properly come at this place, and it seems to the Chair that it might be made to include within its scope other paragraphs as well as the one to which it is offered. The gentleman from Maryland offers an amend-ment providing that none of the funds appropriated or made available under this act shall be used for the maintenance or operation by the War Department of any barge line or freight service between Baltimore, Md., and New Bern, N. C., and so forth. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is new legislation. The Chair will simply cite one or two decisions.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, to save time I withdraw the point of order

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas withdraws his point of order and the gentleman from Maryland is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. REAVIS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REAVIS. Was there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland to insert the letters in the RECORD?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma objected to the insertion of the papers.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma withdraw his objection, and I will file the letters because I do not want to take up the time of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland renews his request to insert the papers in the RECORD. Is there objection? Mr. BANKHEAD. Reserving the right to object, I was not here to hear the preliminary statement of the gentleman from Maryland. I would like for my own information to know the source of the opposition to the continued operation of the barge line which he is seeking to eliminate.

Mr. HILL. The barge line was put in operation between Baltimore and New Bern, N. C. The gentleman from Texas was right in what he said. The protest against the barge line comes from the Merchants' & Manufacturers' Association of Baltimore, from the Baltimore Chamber of Commerce, the Exporters and Importers Board of Trade, and Wharton & Co., shipowners. It comes, of course, because the local freight boats object to the Government competition against them, reducing the freight rates at the cost of the War Department. where the protest comes from. What the gentleman from Texas says is quite true. In addition to that I am for this amendment, and should not move the amendment were it not for the fact that here is an opportunity to prune off one of the activities of the War Department which are not proper activities of that department.

I am heartily for this bill which the committee has presented for proper national defense, but I am not for the department spending money of the people of the United States to run an experimental barge line in competition with the private barge lines running under rates established by the Interstate Commerce Commission. So it is absolutely true, as the gentleman from Texas says, but here is a chance to save $60,000 a year, and I hope the House will adopt the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman spoke of the Government engaging in competition with the transportation facilities. want to call his attention to the fact that the War Department now maintains hundreds of big, heavy powered motor trucks that it uses for the transportation of material and men across the country. That in a way competes with common carriers. Is the gentleman against the Government using motor trucks?

Mr. HILL. No. There is this difference. I should make no objection to the Government using its own property and means of transportation for transporting different things that it owns, and using its trucks to transport war material and other Government materials, but if these trucks carry ordinary freight as ordinary common carriers I should object. I should like to object to the whole practice of barge lines, but I did not feel justified in doing anything except that which relates to my own district

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I want to ask the gentleman does this barge line carry freight for individuals indiscriminately along the route, or do they carry exclusively Government freight?

Mr. HILL. They carry for individuals along the route. Mr. KINCHELOE. How long have they been doing that? Mr. WARD of North Carolina. A little over 30 days.

Mr. HILL. I have all the information; if the gentleman will get me an extension of time I will read it.

Mr. KINCHELOE. That is rather an unusual situationbarge lines carrying freight of individuals in competition with other business.

Mr. HILL. I think it is a wrong situation. May I again ask unanimous consent to put these papers in the RECORD without reading them?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I think but very few know what is contained in those papers, and I think the gentleman can without doubt get an extension of time and give us the information.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman understand how the War Department got its authority to operate these barges as a common carrier?

Mr. HILL. I will read that information, if I may.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I quote from a letter from W. D. Connor, colonel of the Corps of Engineers, Chief Inland Coastwise Waterways Service:

wise Waterways Service:

Under a joint resolution approved February 28, 1921, the section above referred to was amended as follows:

"Resolved, etc, That at the end of 30 days after the passage of this resolution the authority conferred upon the Secretary of War under section 201 of the transportation act, 1920, to operate for commercial purposes boats, barges, tugs, or other transportation facilities upon the New York State Barge Canal shall cease, and thereafter there shall be no such operation by the Secretary of War or any other agency of the United States. The Secretary of War shall, as soon as is practicable, dispose of boats, barges, tugs, and other transportation facilities purchased or constructed for use upon said canal, and, pending final disposition, the Secretary of War may lease the same: Provided, That all the money obtained from the sale or lease of these boats, barges, and tugs shall be available until expended by the Inland and Coastwise Waterways Service of the War Department in the inauguration and development of other inland, canal, and coastwise waterways in accordance with the expressed desire of Congress in section 500 of the transportation act, 1920: Provided further, That not to exceed 25 per cent of the boats, barges, and tugs built or purchased for the United States herein authorized to be sold may be retained by the United States for the operation of other inland, canal, or coastwise routes of the United States until such equipment can be replaced by other equipment to be purchased from funds received from the sale prescribed above."

You will observe from this that the authority to operate is unquestioned, and further, the last provision of the joint resolution was inserted with the expressed purpose of using the barges, etc., in operation on the intracoastal line.

I now proceed with the letter from Col. Connor. I might

I now proceed with the letter from Col. Connor. I might say this is his reply to the objection to the authority of the War Department for conducting such a line:

This service is not inclined to develop waterways unless Congress sees fit to have it done. The matter of the installation of the intracoastal line between Baltimore, Md., and New Bern, N. C., was very carefully investigated and considered, and the result of the investigation laid before the then Secretary of War, Newton D. Baker, who indorsed the paper as follows:
"Approved. We should do everything we can to demonstrate the value of the service and this seems wise and helpful."
The primary reasons advanced by the leading citizens of North Carolina for the installation of this line was that the terminal rates enjoyed by certain cities in North Carolina on the Neuse River, Pamilico River, and Albemarle Sound were about to be lost due to the fact that there were no waier lines established with which the rallroad could make folir rates. The matter was brought to the attention of this service by Senator Simmons, of North Carolina, and a committee representing the business interests of North Carolina touching upon these waterways. A statement was made by them that the loss to that section of the country, due to the discontinuance of terminal rates, would aggregate approximately $1,000,000 per year. Senator Simmons and the committee placed forceably before this service the benefits to be derived from the establishment of such a line.

Upon investigation it was found that there was a good inland waterway connection, and the establishment of a barge line would be an experiment which, if successful, would aid largely in the development of water traffic between North Carolina, Virginia, and Maryland, and largely aid in the development of the commercial resources of these States.

At the time of the inauguration of this service under the authority of the Secretary of War, there were under construction at New Bern, N. C., and about ready for delivery, three self-propelled barges designed for use on the main section of the New York State Canal. In view of the fact that these barges would be completed too late to be of any service on the New York State Canal, which, in addition, had all the equipment necessary to move the traffic that would be offered, and the further fact that these barges would be illed or rented, it appeared to be a propitious moment to use these three vessels, together with six steel cargo barges, in the establishment of a branch barge line between New Bern and Baltimore. The New York Canal section, under the Raliroad Administration, operated as far south as Philadelphia, and this line was merely an extension of the New York Canal section at that time. It was under such authority that the original line was operated, and it is under the authority contained in the John tresolution approved

Was operated by the Government."

He objects to the policy of the Inland and Coastwise Waterways Sertice. Certainly the people of the United States are entitled to use water transportation if they can get any cheaper rates than all-rall transportation, and he is quarreling with the policy of Congress, not the policy of this service, when he objects to the efforts of the Government to prove that water transportation is more satisfactory and more economical than rail transportation for certain commodities.

Without entering into a controversy, it can be stated positively to you as a fact that since the inauguration of the barge line on the Mississippi River the freight rates from port to port on the Mississippi have considerably increased and the rates from city to city in the inland have decreased in proportion to the increase of rates on the river ports. Before the inauguration of this line it was the custom of rallroads to carry freight from river port to river port or to river teminal at such a low rate that private steamship companies or barge owners could not compete with them and the corresponding rate in the interior was several times higher.

"In other words, in order to make the railroad a paying investment, the people of the interior was a several times higher."

In other words, in order to make the railroad a paying investment, the people of the interior were paying excess rates and the people ong rivers were getting advantages at the expense of the taxpayers as a whole.

There was considerable opposition on the part of several concerns to our extending the line into Philadelphia. Upon an exposition of our aims and policy in the matter an amicable agreement was apparently reached with the protestants.

I trust that I have not been too prolix in my statements, but I desired to state our position and let you know that we feel we are doing what Congress intended us to do, and if Congress desires to change its policy the service will as faithfully and as loyally carry it out, as it is carrying out its present policy.

Very respectfully,

W. B. CONNOR, Colonel, Corps of Engineers, Chief Inland and Coastwise Waterways Service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for three minutes longer. I am very much interested in the matter; it is right at my door; it is getting near my home.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think there ought to be some limit to this discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. Mr. MADDEN and Mr. BANKHEAD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama was on his

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment. All the Members of the Congress who were Members when the Congress passed the transportation act of 1920 will recall after great deliberation provision was made in that bill for the inauguration under the supervision of the War Department of certain inland and coastwise water lines to be operated by the Government. That was done, Mr. Chairman, on the theory that it would be the start of at least some measure for the relief of the congested traffic of the railroads and more essentially for the purpose of providing competition and reducing the exorbitant transportation rates which were charged by the railroad companies. As I understood the letter of Col. Connor, as read by the gentleman from Maryland, the line of barges which he is seeking to destroy is one of the inland transportation lines that went into effect under the provisions and by the authority of that provision of the transportation act, and it seems to me, gentlemen of the committee, that it would be extremely unfortunate if we should discontinue any branch of that service which has now reached a stage where it begins to show practical and actual results, and that would be done if this amendment, without mature consideration by the proper authorities, without consideration by any committee having exclusive jurisdiction over this question of inland waterway transportation, should be adopted. That is the matter presented to the committee and ought to cause it to hesitate before favorably acting upon the proposed amendment.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will.

Mr. REAVIS. The statement was made by the gentleman from Maryland that these boats operate under the authority of the War Department and carry freight for a much less price than private concerns, and what I want to ask the gentleman is with reference to the element of fairness of one commission of the Government fixing a price for a private concern, the Inter-state Commerce Commission, and another bureau of the Government doing the same business for less money than the Government will permit the private concerns to do it for.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the gentleman in reply as a general proposition I do not believe in Government ownership of public utilities in competition with private business. The question asked points out the danger, I will say to the gentleman from Nebraska, of adopting this amendment at this time. We have only had an ex parte statement here that proceeds from the owners of these other steamboat companies. If the letter of Col. Connor had been concluded, it might have shown that down at the terminal in North Carolina there were no adequate steamship facilities for handling local coastwise trade. so that they afforded opportunity to have joint rail and water rates, the very purpose of this inland waterway system. If you are going to indorse a proposition like this to undermine and seek to destroy the whole purpose and effect of your inland waterway transportation system, it ought to be done after careful and very judicial consideration of all the facts on both sides of the question.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will

Mr. WALSH. Is there a barge line also in operation upon the Black Warrior River?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Exactly; and that is the very reason of knowledge of the value of this proposition, not only upon the Black Warrior River but, the gentleman should also remember, on the Mississippi River. The people along the great Mississippi Valley, as well as adjacent to the Black Warrior, are deeply interested in this question of competition in order to relieve the exorbitant freight charges of the railroads, and that service under Government operation in competition with the railroads paid a net profit of $50,000 during the month of April and at the same time helped to render the shippers and business men of that section of the country adequate facilities, especially along the Mississippi and Warrior Rivers, and at a saving of 20 per cent in freight rates for goods carried on those rivers.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BANKHEAD. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Would not the effect of this amendment, if adopted, repeal so much of this transportation act as affects this particular line, without any consideration—
Mr. BANKHEAD. Absolutely. I do not think the gentleman from Maryland would deny that proposition.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does the gentleman know how much the loss was on this transportation business of the Black Warrior River and the Mississippi last year?

Mr. BANKHEAD. They operated at a substantial loss, because of the inadequacy of the equipment and terminal facilities.

Mr. LINTHICUM. They lost

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would like an opportunity to answer the gentleman-of course, they lost money-it is not denied; but they are not losing money now; that is the proposition; because they had to build up this system from the ground up; they had to wait for months and months for equipment. They had to get their organization and their equipment, and get it framed upon a scientific business basis, and although it was in its experimental stage and they did lose money at first, it was in a position to render substantial service, especially to the public along the great Mississippi Valley and in Alabama and that important section of the country. Here is a proposition to take this benefit away from these people in this particular case; I do not know what the facts are; it might be that after a full hearing of the facts I might agree to the amendment.

But I say that it would be extremely unfortunate, and I think unfair, for this committee, without any consideration of the real facts from both sides of the case, to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Hill] without any notice to the friends of inland waterway and coastwise systems, without giving them an opportunity to present their case, and to have their day in court. I regard this amendment as the forcrunner of a wholesale attack on our inland waterway and barge systems. If so, we will be prepared to fight such an effort to the finish.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Alabama be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. ANTHONY. Reserving the right to object, I would like to make another unanimous-consent request, to the effect that all debate on the paragraph and pending amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to

Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas moves that all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REAVIS. There was a unanimous-consent request pending at the time the motion was made.

The CHAIRMAN. But the regular order was demanded.

Mr. WALSH. If necessary to get it, I will object.

Mr. REAVIS. The regular order, Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will pardon me, was my request that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] have an extension of two minutes. The CHAIRMAN. Whereupon the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] objected to it.

Mr. REAVIS. There was no objection to it, as I understand it.

Mr. MacGREGOR. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. Mr. MADDEN. I hope the gentleman from Kansas will withhold his motion.

Mr. ANTHONY. We have got to make progress. We want to get through the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr.

MACGREGOB] will submit his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I have an amendment to this paragraph at the Clerk's desk, which has not been read. Is that covered by the gentleman's request?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment would be in order, and unless the time for debate has expired the gentleman will have an opportunity to debate it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I will liberalize my motion by moving that all debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Hill] and amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas moves that all debate on the Hill amendment and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BARKLEY, I move to extend it for 40 minutes. This may involve the whole Government scheme of inland waterways. Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move as a substitute to make it 30 minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], modifying the time stated by the gentleman from Kansas. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden] moved a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute will come next. The noes have it, and the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky is not agreed to. The question is now on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The question was taken, and the substitute amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as amended by the substitute.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Man-

DEN] is recognized.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I sympathize with the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] and to some extent agree with him that competition by the Government ought not to exist as against private enterprise. But in the transportation act which we passed last year it was specifically provided that the Government should enter upon an experimental work of water transportation development. The Government did that because it was believed the time had come when we must correlate water transportation with the rail transportation of the country. Everybody realized that unless we could get joint rates between the railroads and water we would not be able to function in matters of transportation as we should. And it was realized that during the experimental stages the Government was bound to lose money on the experiment. The War Department was bound to lose money on the experiment. authorized to establish barge lines, because private capital could not be secured for that purpose. The War Department has entered upon the work, and they have constructed special classes of tugs that are peculiarly fitted for certain kinds of work in water transportation. Now comes the gentleman from Maryland with his proposition because, perchance, a resolution was passed by the Congress not long since modifying the transportation act to the extent of ordering the sale of the barge line operated by the Government on the New York Barge Canal. But there is quite a difference between the barge line on the Erie Canal and the proposal submitted by the gentleman from Maryland. The people of New York State built the barge canal out of their own pockets.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Will the gentleman tell us how extensive this is?

Mr. MADDEN. The people of New York State built that canal at their own expense, and they maintain it. All the citizens of New York State who are interested in water transportation were obliged to abandon their investments. But here is a different proposal. The Albemarle and the Intercoastal Canals were purchased by money out of the Treasury of the United States, and the United States maintains those water-ways. And if there is any place in the country where the Government has a right to engage in this sort of work it is on the waterway suggested by the gentleman from Maryland.

Now, as a general proposition, I am not in favor of the Government doing this sort of work. I want to leave it to private business and to private enterprise. But here is a case where we were unable to find men with capital who were willing to engage in the work we were about to try to develop.

It has been maintained for many years that the only way you could take advantage of all the transportation facilities, water and rail combined, was to have terminals at which the freight that goes by the waterways could be transferred on joint rates to the railroads, and vice versa. And we charge the War Department with the responsibility of functioning in this thing, and we have appropriated $4,000,000 to carry it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Illinois may have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been limited to 30 minutes altogether by vote of the committee.

Mr. REAVIS. Has the chairman a list of the gentlemen to whom this time will be given?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has a list, and the amounts are all written out. The Chair does not know how he can get out with it.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. I really wanted 10 minutes to explain what the situation is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated what the understanding is. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for two additional minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to object to the gentleman proceeding, but-

The CHAIRMAN. No objection is heard.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, if we permit the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Hill] to be adopted, it would destroy the very function which we have been imposing upon the War Department, and we would be doing it in a bill which has no relation whatever to the subject.

Yr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? .

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HILL. My colleague [Mr. Linthicum] is entirely right. This does not in any way interfere with the expenditures under the other bill. I wish by this amendment to provide that they can not expend any deficit under the other bill out of this bill for transportation.

Madden They could not do it anyway.

Mr. HILL. Because the general manager of this line receives $7,500 a year as salary, and the chief clerk receives $2,500, and the salaries for this little tiny line aggregate in all $27,000 a year.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I sympathize with what the gentleman is saying and with the position he takes, but has the gentleman information as to the activity of this barge line in charging a less rate than the competitive lines?

Mr. MADDEN. No; but I know the Government is losing money on their transportation activities, but I believe it is well spent, because it correlates with the development that the people of the country are hoping and praying for.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Lin-

THICUM] will be recognized.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, the question involved in the amendment offered to the Army appropriation bill by my colleague from Maryland [Mr. Hill] prohibiting the use of any funds therein for the operation of the inland and coast-wise waterways, especially as applied to the line operating between Baltimore and Norfolk, Va., and New Bern and Washington, N. C., is whether the Government should continue that service in competition with private interests which have been established for years and given satisfaction, and where keen competition already exists, when the Government does it by cutting rates and at a loss in actual dollars and cents to the

During the war, in order to facilitate transportation and to relieve the heavy burden upon the railroads, the National Government operated barges on the Mississippi and Warrior Rivers, and upon the canals of New York, and as far south as Philadelphia. In 1920, by the transportation act, the operation of these barges was, under section 201-A, transferred to the War Department to be operated upon lines then established and operated under Federal control, and were subsequently operated under the intracoastal canal section and inland and coastwise waterways service of that department. The competition in New York was so keenly felt and was so rapidly driving private business to the wall in that State that Congress on February 28, 1921, by resolution declared that at the expira-tion of 30 days after the passage of the resolution the authority conferred upon the Secretary of War under said section 201-A of the transportation act of 1920 to operate for commercial purposes boats, barges, tugs, or other transportation upon the New York Barge Canal should cease, and authorized disposal of the boats, the money to be used in inauguration and development of other inland canals or coastwise waterways, in accordance with section 500 of the transportation act of 1920.

This section 500 of the transportation act did not embody any provisions which would authorize the establishment of new routes or new service, but provided for the building, increasing, and developing inland waterway transportation, to investigate with a view to devising the types most appropriate for this location, to advise and cooperate, and to investigate the existing status of transportation upon inland waterways with a view to determining whether such waterways are being utilized to the extent of their capacity and whether they are interchanging traffic with the railroads, and to investigate any other matter that may tend to promote and encourage inland waterway transportation.

We contend, therefore, that the establishment of the lines from Baltimore which were not in operation during the war and established under Federal control was illegal and unauthorized; that it is against the policy of the Government to enter into direct competition with private enterprise, crippling and destroying the same, and either bankrupting or driving it to other sections of the country.

I can not say that many people would not welcome a very much reduced freight rate, even at the expense of governmental competition, but the fact of the matter is this, that it is not the intention of the Government to continue this competition but merely to demonstrate it, and if in a little while these Govern-ment boats are not withdrawn the local enterprise will have either been driven to other sections of the country or will have become bankrupt, and the city of Baltimore will find itself without transportation, which had been privately owned and had taken years with unlimited labor and capital to develop.

According to a statement just received from Col. Conner, of the War Department, this service from Baltimore south had a deficit in-

The service has been largely augmented, because when New York drove them out of its domains they brought their barges to Baltimore, increasing their service from two weeks' sailings to five days. It is also a fact that since the Government came here we have 100 local barges belonging to our own peof'e tied up in the harbor with nothing to do. I do not attribute all of this to the bringing of 22 Government barges here of 8,800 tonnage, but it is quite manifest that these private lines can not compete with the resources of the United States Treasury through lines run there at a great loss by the War Department. I am in receipt of copy of letter of April 21 last addressed to

Admiral William S. Benson, chairman of the Shipping Board, from the Northern Transportation Co., which calls attention to the fact that the Shipping Board has just leased some of its boats at a bare bottom charge of 50 cents per dead-weight ton to carry coal. This will enable the charterer of these boats to carry coal at 50 per cent of the actual cost to vessel owners. This coasting trade has already a large surplus tonnage for the work, and naturally this Government competition will seriously affect private operation. This company has 74,000 deadweight tons in barges and a steamer of which only 6,000 tons are now in operation. This placing of boats in competition at 50 cents per ton bare bottom charge will most likely drive this 6,000 tons off the sea and will not benefit the consumer but add profit to dealers and operators.

There is another unfair side to this matter. Private enterprise on the coastwise trade is governed by rates allowed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and while the Government files rates and professes to operate under the Interstate Commerce Commission regulations it is also true the Interstate Commerce Commission has no governmental control over them whatever or any rate they may charge, while the individual is absolutely submissive to their regulations. It can not be said by the Government that it is not in competition and cutting rates against private owners, because that fact was positively admitted by Mr. Morris, of the War Department, and of this service, at a meeting held in Philadelphia, 308 Walnut Street, when in answer to a question as to why he had made rates so low he said, "As I stated above, that it was on account of private interests quoting lower." The taxpayers are compelled to stand all losses. At that same meeting, on March 24, 1921, in Philadelphia, a very careful analysis was given showing that the Government was carrying lumber from New Bern, N. C., to Philadelphia at $4.50 per 1,000 feet, and as the steamer Orange carried 175,000 feet of lumber the total amount earned by the boat for the trip was $787.50; and an itemized statement showed that, according to the Government's admissions, the boat could not be operated for less than $7,000, including overhead charges and interest. I think this statement of sufficient interest to insert it at this point:

COST TO TAXPAYERS.

At the same meeting in Philadelphia on March 24, 1921, Mr. John J. Dempsey, of Dempsey & Sons, barge operators, of Philadelphia, stated as follows:

Mr. Dempsey. We understand the Government is carrying lumber from New Bern or Washington, N. C., to Philadelphia for $4.50 per 1,000 feet. The steamer carries 175.000 feet of lumber. The gross freight is about $787.50. It would cost the Government about $4.000 to earn that. The steamer Orange, 150 feet long, 12 feet draft, capacity 400 tons, valued at $100,000, wages of crew for—

Per month.

re	month
9 men Provisions for crew Fuel, about 696 gallons of oil, 30 days Port charges, about	360
Insurance, 9 per cent	800 100 500 400 would be the running expenses for a steamer to earn $1,000, two trips a month from Baltimore to Washington, N. C., and back. If the Government can make anything at $1.25 per ton with this expense I can not see it.

Mr. LLOTD. At what do you figure fuel oil?

Mr. Dempsey. At 7 cents a gallon.

Mr. LLOYD. You are a trifle high.

Mr. Dempsey. How much am I too high?

Mr. LLOYD. About $1,500. The other figures are correct, but you are $1,500 too high on fuel oil.

It would be indicated, even with this reduction, that the cost of operation of the steamer Orange would approximate $7,000 a month; and if this is to be taken as correct, as stated by Mr. Lloyd, who is apparently the chief of the engineering service, inland and coastwise waterways, it would appear that there is some reason for the deficits on the Mississippi and Warrior Rivers.

It is quite evident that the Government has not and can not operate this transportation service in competition with private enterprise except at a very heavy drain upon the United States Treasury. I do not contend that the Government should not even at a loss operate certain water transportation for the benefit of the people where there is no transportation facilities, or where it is necessary to reduce railroad rates, but I do contend that it is unfair, unjust, and unbusinesslike to operate at a loss this transportation service from Baltimore south when private interests have built up large transportation companies, have operated them successfully, and where lively competition already exists between several lines so owned.

As a further proof of what I say about governmental loss in these matters I desire to bring to the attention of the committee the report of the War Department, issued for the year 1920.

I do not mean to say some of these enterprises were not worth while and during the war highly essential, nor do I, to repeat what I have already said, contend that they should not be operated in certain places where exigencies arise, even at a loss to the United States Treasury, which may not, however, be a loss to the country generally by virtue of benefits, lowering of freight rates, and so forth. It is understood, of course, that wherever a railroad and water transportation reach the same place the railroad is allowed and does reduce its freight to meet the water competition. This is very beneficial in the reduction of freight, but the result usually is that the boat line is driven off by the competition and ceases to exist, freights go up, and no other boat company has the temerity to enter the contest.

It will be remembered that one of the first things President Harding said upon taking office was that he desired to eliminate the Government from private business. This same policy was manifested by Congress when it transferred to the owners the railroad companies of the country; when it provided for the continuation of certain inland waterways it was the intention that they should be operated where profitable and later dispose of these transportation facilities to private owners, thus eliminating the Government from private enterprise. It is certainly not the intention of the Government to continue in competition with private enterprise, and certainly not the desire of the taxpayers of the country to continue such operation at a tremendous loss to the United States Treasury.

I sincerely hope the amendment will be adopted: that the Government will only operate where it is essential, but will not compete with private parties where competition is already in existence and where rates are fair and reasonable. Certainly no one can say that Baltimore is not well supplied with water transportation. It has been abundantly supplied for years and the acceleration given to this line of business by the war has given it a superabundance of transportation facilities. Baltimore enjoys a cheap freight rate to the Central West; it is the gateway to the South and North; it has realized this fact for years and has built accordingly-water transportation, railroad transportation, docks; piers have been constructed-and we are thoroughly capable of taking care of everything which comes into our gates without loss to the United States Government and without its competition where competition already [Applause.]

MERCHANTS AND MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION OF BALTIMORE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, April 13, 1921.

Hon. John Philip Hill, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: At a meeting of the board of directors of this organiza-tion held this day attention was directed to the operation of a barge line by the Inland and Coastal Waterways Service of the War Depart-ment between Baltimore, Norfolk, New Bern, and Washington, N. C. The board placed itself on record as being opposed to the operation of this barge line by the Government, as there is adequate water transportation service between the points named being afforded by the water lines now in operation.

service between the points named being anotated in operation.

This reaffirms the position of this association, as indicated by its opposition to the bill introduced during the last session of Congress providing for the Government operation of the Muscle Shoals nitrate plant, as well as its action in connection with other legislation of this character, indicating that it is unalterably opposed to the Government entering into business in competition with private enterprise.

All of which I am sending to you for your information.

Yery truly, yours,

R. J. Beacham, Secretary.

Baltimore Chamber of Commerce, Office of the President, Baltimore, April 14, 1921,

Hon. JOHN PHILIP HILL,

Hon. John Philip Hill,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: The intracoastal division of the War Department has for some months past been operating a barge line between Baltimore, Md., and Norfolk, Va., Washington, N. C., and Newbern, N. C. As these points are adequately served by regularly established steamship lines, with railroad connections, furnishing daily service, we believe Government operation should cease. In our opinion, consideration should be shown those who have established these steamship lines and invested their capital in them, and it is neither fair nor just to them to be compelled to compete with the Government barge lines.

The Baltimore Chamber of Commerce therefore joins with the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, which has forcibly placed this question before you, in protesting against further operation of barge lines by the Government.

Very truly, yours.

George S. Jackson, President.

EXPORT AND IMPORT BOARD OF TRADE OF BALTIMORE (INC.), Baltimore, Md., May 2, 1921.

Hon. John P. Hill, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the board of directors of the Export and Import Board of Trade of Baltimore held Tuesday, April 26, 1921, it was unanimously resolved—

"That we protest against the inauguration and operation of inland steamship or barge line services for the carriage of merchandise for the general public by any bureau or department of the United States Government in competition with privately owned vessels of established common carriers whose rates, rules, and regulations are subject to control by the act to regulate commerce, the transportation act, the shipping act, the merchant marine act, the law of common carriers, and admiralty law; and "That the general manager of this organization be requested to coorganize with the officials of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of Baltimore and of the Baltimore Chamber of Commerce in the effort to have withdrawn such governmental undertakings of this nature as are now in operation; and "That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Representatives from the State of Maryland in both Houses of Congress."

This does not include the oil for running or fuel and repairs. There is an average of from 15 to 18 tons of freight on each trip at present. Each steam barge must carry 100 tons going south, also coming back to Baltimore, to meet expenses.

They now have six barges anchored in the stream. They have twe men on these barges at $100 per month each. There is a man on each one of these barges when running.

The rent at Broadway Pier for wharfage and storage is $300 per month. Salaries, office, $27,400 per year; salaries, three barges, $53,388 per year.

Beginning on the 1st day of May, 1921, when the line will operate from Pier No. 5, the annual rental will be $4,998 and in addition 125 per cent per annum upon the cost of the erection of the shed, said shed to cost about $12,000.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Congressman: We write these lines to see if you can not help the owners of inland vessels and barges and tugboats out. We people have boats tied up with nothing to do. The War Department has power tugboats and barges running at very low freights. They take stuff for about one-third cheaper than we could run for and are going in debt several thousand dollars per month, that we tug owners help to make good. We people bought Liberty bonds, and a great many of us more than we were able to buy, and now our Government almost puts us out of business.

Thanking you.

Very respectfully, yours,

Wathen & Co.

The CHAIRMAN The Chair will recognize the gentlement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS].

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Hill]. The reason why I am opposed to it is because it certainly would not be the part of wisdom to bring in an amendment on an appropriation bill which would cut off a part of the barge service.

I think it would not be wise to adopt the amendment. However, I am thoroughly in accord with the spirit of the amendment, because the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Hill] is opposed to competition by Government owned and operated boats with privately owned boats. I think this Congress in a short time ought to take up and consider the advisability of doing away with Government-owned barges and boats and with Government-owned transportation in any case where it comes in competition with private ownership.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does not the gentleman think it would be better for legislation on the subject to come from the committee that has jurisdiction of all of them, so that we will have proper and accurate information on the subject?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I am in accord with the gentle-man's suggestion. The whole matter ought to be taken up at one time. It ought to be given thorough consideration by a committee at a time when hearings can be had and the whole matter can be gone into thoroughly, and then it ought to be presented to the House as a whole.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts

Mr. WALSH. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the appropriation for all of this service has been made in the sundry civil bill, and that all this amendment will do will be to inhibit the use of any War Department money?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The appropriation for this service is not provided in this bill, so this amendment would have no effect whatever.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. If it would have no effect whatever, of course it is not a useful amendment and therefore ought not to be adopted. If it has any effect at all, its effect will be to destroy this particular barge service, which is one unit of the barge service that ought to be considered as a whole.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In connection with the statement of the gentleman allow me to say that the entire appropriation for the inland and coastwise waterways service is turned over to the War Department to administer.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. This amendment is a limitation upon the particular appropriation in this act.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not be adopted. Members of the House will recall that when the transportation act was passed the Government found itself in possession of a lot of barges, some of which had been completed and some of which were under construction. These barges had been purchased by the Government in order to put boats upon the inland waterways of the United States under Federal control, under the same Railway Administration that controlled the railroads. When we passed the act returning the railroads to their owners, Congress did not feel that the Government ought to disband its organization or stop its experiment in the building up of inland waterway transportation. Consequently the law provided that the Government should not only use the boats which had been purchased and those which were under construction, but that it should be able to buy more, and a revolving fund was created and an appropriation made for the use of the War Department under the jurisdiction of the Chief of Engineers. Now the Government has this service upon the Black Warrior River and upon the Mississippi River. did have it upon the New York Barge Canal, and only in the last session of Congress we authorized the Secretary of War to sell the Government boats on the New York Barge Canal or to use them in other parts of the United States in order to establish water transportation. About 30 or 40 days ago, I understand, the War Department brought some of these barges, that originally were on the New York Barge Canal, down to Baltimore to establish this service between Baltimore and New Bern, N. C. I do not care to go into the merits of ultimate Government operation of the transportation system. I think ultimately the Government will have to go out of the barge-line business. We are in it now not as a money-making scheme, not in order to compete with private enterprise, but in order to demonstrate that under favorable conditions water transportation can be carried on in the United States at a profit, and whenever the Government has demonstrated that fact to private industry, then it will be time for the Government to go out of the business and permit private industry to take it over.

Mr. LINTHICUM. What is to become of the interests of individual vessel and barge owners while the Government is demonstrating that?

Mr. BARKLEY. If there is any very great damage being done to private industry, certainly the proper committee ought to take it up and investigate it and bring in a bilt to relieve that condition; but if we can stop this line from Baltimore to New Bern by an amendment to the Army appropriation bill, then somebody who is interested in a private line on the Mississippi River can offer an amendment and have the barge line on the Mississippi River disbanded and somebody on the Black Warrior River can do the same thing there, and so by piecemeal we can destroy all these Government-owned lines, and the committee that has charge and jurisdiction of that legislation will have no opportunity to investigate it. What ought to be done is to vote this amendment down. It has no place on the Army appropriation bill at all. It is a matter of interstate commerce, but it was put in charge of the Chief of Engineers of the War Department because the Engineer force of the War Department has more knowledge of the inland waterways and conditions of transportation than any other particular branch of the Gov-For that reason it was put there.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARKLEY. Briefly.

Mr. HILL. As the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] pointed out, this does not cut off any existing appropriation made under any previous act, but simply provides that under this bill the War Department can not spend any money for general transportation on these losing projects.

Mr. BARKLEY. Placed on that basis it ought not to be adopted, because there is no information here except the protests of private boat lines against this line between Baltimore and these points below. Besides that, there is no evidence here that there is any private boat line that runs from Baltimore to New Bern. I understand that this service was put in very largely to bring about water competition that might result in a reduction of railroad rates to these points.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. And there is no other boat line between these points except this one.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman read the amendment?

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman explain to us what the effect of this amendment will be?

Mr. BARKLEY. The effect of the amendment will be that if there are any funds in this bill that provide for the operation of a barge line between Baltimore, Md., and New Bern, N. C., they can not be used for that purpose, and the Government would have to go out of business and sell these barges or tie them up somewhere or find some other place where they could be used

Mr. BUTLER. It is contended that there is no money appropriated in this bill for this barge line.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then the amendment ought not to be adopted on this bill. We have not the time to go back through the bill to find out whether there is some fund provided for such use.

WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that this amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland will not It may be true, as claimed, that the amendment would have no effect on the present effort of the Government, through the War Department and Chief of Engineers, to develop and establish transportation on some of our inland waterways. However, the course of the debate apparently justifies the fears expressed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], that it is in a way an attack upon the present effort of the Government to build up inland water transportation.

Congress gave its consent for the War Department to dispose of the barges and other equipment on the New York State Barge Canal and to return the use of the canal to the State of New York, because that was a State canal, built by the State. Therefore, Congress was justified in directing the War Department to release control to the State at its request

Now, the operation on the Mississippi and Black Warrior Rivers is entirely another proposition and relates to interstate This service has been going on for some two or three years and it is true, as the gentleman from Maryland says, that the service has been showing a deficit, but that was due to lack of proper equipment and the cost of interchange of freight on account of the want of adequate terminals at interchange points used by the barge line.

Only a short time ago in the sundry civil bill we provided an appropriation for $1,225,000 for the construction of terminals and for the cooperation by the Government with various points along the Mississippi and Warrior Rivers in order that terminal facilities may be provided which would make the service a success.

It was shown that 40 per cent of every dollar paid for freight on the barge lines was expended for transfer on account of inadequate terminals. I have in my possession a report made in the last month showing that on the Mississippi-Warrior River service there has been a net return of $50,000 to the Government.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And a reduction of freight rate amounting to 20 per cent.

Mr. WILSON. Yes; a reduction of freight rates all down the This is probably the last opportunity we may have for a proper demonstration showing this service to be a practical business proposition. We have appropriated about $10,000,000 in all—the last appropriation was $4,000,000 and an additional $1,225,000—for the construction of terminals. The city of Memphis has made provision for $500,000 to be spent in connection with the Government for terminals in that city. St. Louis $250,000, and other cities in large amounts. I think it very unfortunate at this period of development of that great service that anything should come up in the House that can be construed as an effort or desire to destroy it, as the debate on this amendment indicates

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WILSON. I will.
Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman think the business interests should have brought this matter before our committee? Mr. WILSON. That would have been the proper way

Mr. BLANTON. Instead of bringing it here on the floor by an amendment

Mr. WILSON. Yes. The waterways are our only hope of relieving the very exorbitant freight charges the people in this country are paying. We are going to be forced to utilize these waterways, and I think Congress should be very cautious about adopting any amendment that might be construed as an indirect attack on the present efforts of the War Department under the authority granted by Congress.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.
Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman says that the Warrior
River is making money. I hope the bookkeeping is better than is shown in this report. This shows that there was a net income of $2,332, when as a matter of fact they added the debit and the credit together and called it net income, when really there is a deficit of $1,999,000.

Mr. WILSON. I know that the last report sent out by the War Department shows a surplus on the Mississippi-Warrior

Mr. LINTHICUM. This is from the Inland Waterways Service.

Mr. WILSON. When was that report made?

Mr. LINTHICUM. In 1920, and the bookkeeping will show that there was a deficit of $1,999,000.

Oh, well, I was speaking of the report made in 1921. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment. This is too important a matter to take any chance upon its adoption at this time. Why place a measure of this magnitude as a rider on an appropriation bill? If the amendment is legal and is not subject to a point of order, at least it is not expedient. It is inimical to the best interests of this country. Permanent revival of business and commerce depends upon the development of water transportation. Prosperity can not come back to us in full measure and to stay unless we develop our waterways. In my judgment, the business prosperity of one year ago would be with us to-day and would have continued into the to-morrows of the coming months, and perhaps years, if it had not been for the break-down of our railroads and other existing methods of transportation. We must relieve our railroads when they are carrying the "peak load." How can that be done save by the sane development of the water highways? Mr. Chairman, I shall have more to say upon this subject at a future time. Committee of the Whole House will vote this amendment down and not thus delay the adoption by Congress of a progressive program for the development of water transportation that will mean a permanent solution for the exasperating problem of inadequate transportation that now confronts the country and which has resulted in business and commercial stagnation,

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I very much wish I had a little more time, because statements have been made in relation to this matter which are unintentionally incorrect. Impressions have been made by these statements that are damaging and greatly inac-curate. This line of barge transportation on the line between New Bern and Baltimore is yet incomplete. I have on my desk a letter received from the War Department this morning which I have not answered, indicating its incompleteness and touching the proposition of its coanecting at Elizabeth City. There never have been but two boats on the line; and the statement of the gentleman from Maryland that there have been great losses involved in the various lines referred to by him can have no direct application to this line.

Now I want to give you the reason for its origin.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to say to the gentleman— Mr. WARD of North Carolina. I can not yield to the gentleman; I have not the time.

There are two classes of railroad traffic rates authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission; one where a road parallels a water line, and another where there is no water-line competition. The latter, of course, is much higher, or was in the instance to which I refer. So complete was the absence of any water-line competition along the whole 200 miles betwee

New Bern and Norfolk, Va., that the Norfolk Southern Railroad Co., a road that runs parallel to the coast between Norfolk and New Bern, proposed and gave notice to raise its rates from the lower to the higher rate. The rate, already oppressive, was about to be raised until it would cost a farmer about $4, I think, to ship a bale of cotton over this road for a distance of from 150 to 200 miles. To meet this emergency and to avoid this great oppression the War Department was appealed to and a line of barges put on from New Bern to Baltimore, touching in the beginning at only one intermediate point before reaching Norfolk, to wit, the town of Washington, where I live. It is proposed that this line touch all other intermediate points, especially Elizabeth City, and this matter, as I have just stated, is pending with the department. The War Department therefore established this line upon the petition of these towns to avoid the excessive rates of transportation which the business could not stand. It is now in its incipiency. I beg of you gentlemen not to destroy it before it is fully born. I ask you gentlemen to let it go until we can see what the loss is, if there are I do not doubt it up to now, but there is no development there yet. At my own town they have not been stopping over 30 days, and expensive wharf investments have been made in contemplation of its development. They are shut out at New Bern and these intermediate points, although the water stretches all the way between New Bern and Norfolk, and at the mercy of one railroad company that has neither private water competition nor bowels of compassion, and the extraordinary condition exists of the United States Government owning a canal with both ends open and the middle closed up. extraordinary condition exists there, and they are shut off and at the mercy of the railroad that is threatening to raise their I am advised that the rate on a horse from Norfolk to Elizabeth City, a distance of 40 miles, is $3. They can not get out of the inlets and go on the ocean because of the dangers of the shoals of Hatteras. Gentlemen, I ask you, I appeal to you, not to destroy this wholesome project, given by the mercies of the Government, before it is fully born. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired;
all time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. HILL) there were—ayes 3, noes 75.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MacGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, strike out line 12, after the word "further" and down to and including the word "automobiles," in line 21, and insert in place thereof the following: "That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to sell forthwith at public auction or private sale all motor trucks, passenger-carrying automobiles, motor cycles, and trailers now in the possession of the War Department in excess of the requirements of an army of the strength provided for in this act, any provision of law to the contrary notwithstanding."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, or does the gentleman-

Mr. ANTHONY. I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee make the point of order?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. MacGREGOR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, for two years more or less I have been following the subject of the disposition of motor vehicles, and I think the country has followed the proposition without arriving anywhere. number of motor vehicles purchased by the War Department was 217,447. We shipped abroad 118,900. There remained in the United States October 23, 1919, 108,547 motor vehicles which the Motor Transport Corps had cognizance of. Afterwards they discovered that there were 2,000 which the Ordnance Department had which they had not accounted for, which made, April 1, 1920, 111,766 motor vehicles. We have under various acts provided for the distribution of motor vehicles to various departments of the Government. We have distributed to the Department of Agriculture for distribution to the States, in part, up to November 16, 1920, 26,285 motor vehicles. We have given to the Public Health Service 1,400; to the Post Office Department, 9,000; to the Vocational Training Department, 2,000; and sold to the public unserviceable vehicles to the extent of 12,000. Now, this bill provides that the Secretary of War shall have power to sell or dispose of by transfer—which continues the old proposition of transfer—10,000 motor trucks and 2,000 passenger-carrying automobiles. On the basis of an Army of 150,000 men there are no passenger-carrying vehicles left. In fact, there is a deficiency of 207. Upon this basis of 150,000 men the Army officials figure on 4,245 passenger-carrying vehicles, 19,612 trucks, 4,218 trailers, and 5,058 motor cycles. I think instead of permitting any more distribution to already overburdened States by the Agricultural Department that these motor vehicles should be sold and the money placed in the Treasury. It costs for operation of a motor vehicle, on the basis of the Government operation in the Army at present, $830 a year. It costs the States of the United States to operate motor vehicles turned over to the highway departments some $20,000,000 a year. We gave these motor vehicles to the States upon the theory that they would be retained by the States. I am credibly informed that the State of New Jersey has recently sold eight Pierce-Arrow trucks for $390 each, which they received from the Government, and which the purchaser said he would have paid for at Camp Holabird a thousand dollars apiece. I insert a statement as to motor-vehicle status as of April 23, 1921:

The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of The CHAIRMAN. Mr. ANTHONY. order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

Mr. ANTHONY. The bill has a provision permitting the War Department to sell a specific number of vehicles. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York would base the number to be sold upon a certain size of the Army, and it would be so indefinite there is no probability any would be sold, because they might decide they needed the entire amount.

Mr. MacGREGOR. Upon that theory, Mr. Chairman, the War Department has already fixed the basis of retention, and I have before me a statement of the War Department which has been furnished to me stating the number that is to be used upon a basis of 150,000 men.

Mr. ANTHONY. And the amendment also amends the existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the paragraph itself is legislation and clearly subject to a point of order, so the question of germaneness could not be raised.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not know that I care personally to press the point of order, but I think it is subject

Will the gentleman state his reasons? The CHAIRMAN.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It broadens the kind of vehicles that are dealt with. The only two characters of vehicle mentioned are motor trucks and passenger-carrying automobiles. The gentleman's amendment carries in addition trailers and motor cycles, I think-another class. It seems to me that that so broadens the amendment as to destroy its germaneness

The CHAIRMAN. There are at least two classes provided for in the paragraph as it stands, and the amendment adds other classes. Does not the gentleman think that under the practice of the House that can be done?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I know there are precedents, of course—that where two public buildings, for instance, are provided there can be more provided for. Whether that is exactly analogous to this case or not I do not know.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's point of order comes too late, for the reason that he did not either make or reserve the point of order on the paragraph but only reserved the point of order against the amendment, and the paragraph itself contains legislation and therefore is subject to amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is assuming that this is legislation and is discussing the question as to germaneness, which is perfectly proper.

Mr. BLANTON. The Chair did not get my point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman thoroughly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserved a

Mr. BLANTON.

Mr. BLANTON. As to the paragraph? Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. As to the amendment. Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the part of the bill to which this amendment is offered is clearly legislation of itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so stated.

Mr. BLANTON. And that no point of order having been made to that, it comes too late now to make a point of order against this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question of germaneness can be raised now, and that is what the point of order raises; and the only question raised is a question of germaneness to the legislation proposed to be carried in this paragraph. The gentleman from Tennessee is right.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will say very frankly that at the time the amendment was offered I overlooked the fact that there was in the provision carried in the bill an authorization and direction to sell. I was under the impression it was an authorization and direction merely to transfer to other departments. Had that been correct, manifestly, a direction to sell would not be in order. Of course, there are prece-tions are contained; others may be added. But I have considerable doubt as to whether that would apply to a situation of this sort

Mr. WALSH. 'Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman notice the item in the bill as to the authority and direction to sell under existing

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I had supposed by reason of the punctuation that it meant a transfer under existing law, and that the word "sell" is not involved in existing law. In other words, I notice there is a comma after "sell" and a comma after "law." So it seems to me that the provision of existing law would apply only to the transfer to other departments. Personally, I do not care to press the point of order.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. For just one suggestion. think when you come to consider the question of an amendment to legislation permitted to be left in an appropriation bill. the rule as to germaneness is a different rule from the rule when you are considering the question as to general legislation. I have not the authority just now, but there is a precedent which seems to me the clearest and most logical one on the subject. The decision holds that while you may amend legislative matter which is illegal under the rules if a point of order is made, still you can not offer an amendment which amounts to an added illegality. You can not increase the illegality. Now, this legislation here authorizes the selling of a certain sort of vehicle. I have no doubt that, inasmuch as we permitted the legislation to go in, the committee would have the right to amend that and to say how we would sell it, how many we ought to sell, or make it a less number than those enumerated, or to say we could sell them in some sections and not in others. But to say that because the committee includes legislation to permit certain vehicles to go in, that on the floor of the House we should permit the sale of other vehicles, like motor cycles, is stretching the matter too far. A decision was made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burron] years ago, in which he reviewed, as Chairman, some of the holdings with reference to points of order made to amendments to legislative matters put in an appropriation bill. And he laid down what seemed to me to be the most logical rule, and that is that it is not merely a question of whether it shall be germane, but the question is whether it is an added illegality, and if it is it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, following the line of argument suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Sanders], I recall that some years ago-and perhaps it may refresh the memory of the present occupant of the chair—a bill being under consideration in the Committee of the Whole providing for several designated kinds of articles and an amendment being offered that was generic in similarity, and yet, if I recall correctly, the Chair held that that was not germane to the bill or the item then under consideration. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the citation instanced by the Chair of a bill in which two States are admitted is not akin to the one under consideration.

Although I am in sympathy with the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR] and believe that trucks and passenger-carrying automobiles and motor cycles not required for the Army ought to be sold, nevertheless, for the sake of consistency with legislative precedents, I think the Chair can not say that just because there are precedents, that where in a bill two States are admitted it is in order to provide for the admission of an additional State, it would be in order to provide for the sale of an additional character of vehicle, as in this case. There the subject matter is a State, but here we are considering something different from that the committee has reported, namely, the sale and distribution of trucks and passenger-carrying automobiles. It is not the case, if the Chair please, of a general law being open for amendment, whereby you can present any germane amendment of the same class.

This paragraph must be considered as if a bill were brought into this House containing but this paragraph. The committee then would have considered the subject matter of two items, namely, motor trucks and passenger-carrying automobiles. It would not have been in order, if such a bill had been reported to this House for consideration in the House or in Committee of the Whole, to have added different kinds of vehicles, horse drawn, motor cycles, or even airships, although the latter might be an exaggerated instance. Still it would be a vehicle of transportation. I respectfully contend that the position taken dents that have been suggested, one as to where two proposi- by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Sanders], that the vice of the gentleman's amendment is in adding two other kinds of vehicles to that which is included in the amendment under consideration, fails because it is in violation of the rule of germaneness

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I have that de-

The CHAIRMAN. The decision referred to by the gentle-man is before the Chair. The pending Army appropriation bill contains a paragraph beginning on line 12 of page 33 which is clearly legislation, but to which the point of order was not made. Therefore, for the purpose of deciding this point of order, we may consider this paragraph as it stands as a bill being considered by the House. The paragraph provides

That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to sell, or to dispose of by transfer to the Department of Agriculture under existing laws, for its own use and the use of the several States in road work and maintenance of roads, not less than one-half by sale, so many motor trucks and passenger-carrying automobiles as will, in addition to such trucks and automobiles as have been sold or transferred since January 1, 1921, aggregate during the first six months of the calendar year 10,000 motor trucks and 2,000 passenger-carrying automobiles.

To this the gentleman from New York [Mr. MacGregor] offers an amendment providing that the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to sell forthwith at public auction or private sale, all motor trucks, passenger-carrying automobiles, motor cycles, and trailers now in the possession of the War Department, and so on. Against this amendment a point of order is made upon the ground that it is not germane to the original paragraph.

What is the subject of the original paragraph? To dispose of automotive vehicles, enumerating motor trucks and passenger automobiles; to dispose of them, first, by sale, and second, by transfer to the Department of Agriculture. It is clear that if the committee wished to do so it could strike out this part of the paragraph, "or by transfer to the Department of Agriculture," so that it would leave only the authority to sell. It is clear that the committee would have power to change the method of sale, and this the amendment attempts to do.

It is contended, however, that in the language, "motor cycles and trailers," which is different from the language carried in the original paragraph, the scope is so widened as to render the amendment not germane.

Upon an examination of the language it seems that there is only this difference: The original paragraph provided for motor trucks and passenger-carrying automobiles. The proposed amendment carries motor trucks, passenger-carrying automobiles, motor cycles, and trailers. It seems to the Chair that this change is not of such a character as to render the amendment not germane to the original paragraph. Therefore, the Chair overrules the point of order.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MacGREGOR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, there is not much more that I desire to say.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman begins on that question I would like to ask him a question for information.

Certainly. Mr. MACGREGOR.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Can the gentleman inform the committee how many trucks and motor cycles have been transferred to the Department of Agriculture in accordance with the existing law?

Mr. MacGREGOR. Twenty-six thousand two hundred and eighty-five motor vehicles.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is that the limit? Is that all that can be transferred under the terms of existing law?

Mr. MacGREGOR. No. As I understand it, under existing law they can take any motor vehicles on which they can lay their hands.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then, one effect of the gentleman's amendment, if it were adopted, would be to stop all transfers to the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. MacGREGOR. Yes. That, Mr. Chairman, I believe is wise. I appreciate the desire on the part of the highways departments of States to get a They are always willing to take something for nothing. Take my own State of New York. Here we have already pretty nearly 1,200 motor vehicles-20 to a county-and what in the world they are doing with them I do not know. I asked the commissioner of highways of the State of New York whether they needed any more, and he wrote me a letter in which he said they did not need any motor vehicles. Yet notwithstanding that the auditor of the highway department telegraphed or wrote down here for something like 61 more motor vehicles. I wrote to the Secretary of War in reference to the know how they got the word-the Public Roads Department down here telegraphed out to all the States and asked them whether they did not want any more motor vehicles. Of course, they came piling in here saying that they wanted more motor

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I remember, the State of New York adopted the policy of asking Federal cooperation. It relies entirely on the State funds, but asks Federal cooperation.

Mr. MacGREGOR. It does not ask any Federal coopera-tion. I think that is the condition.

As I stated before, according to the statistics of the War Department, the operation of an automobile costs $830 a year. The respective States are clamorously insisting that they want to cut down their State budgets, but their highway departments are asking for more motor vehicles and this puts upon them a larger expense for the operation of motor vehicles. stance, in the State of New York it would mean over $1,000,000 for operation of motor vehicles. I thought I had the number of passenger-carrying motor vehicles for New York, but I notice at least 135 Fords for the State. The same situation runs all through, and I think it is a burden that the people of the State ought to be relieved of.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MacGREGOR. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. Does not the amendment of the gentleman authorize the Secretary of War to dispose of these vehicles?

Mr. MacGREGOR. Yes; but it also takes out of the bill the provision with reference to transfer to the departments.

Mr. FESS. Is the gentleman under the same suspicion that I am that there is pressure not to dispose of them in order that some other department may get them?

Mr. MacGREGOR. Yes; there is always pressure in more than one direction. There is pressure from the automobile than one direction. There is pressure from the automobile manufacturers and there is pressure from these department heads down here and there is pressure from the outside-pressure from the various States.

Mr. FESS. I am not in possession of the facts, but I entertain that very strong suspicion, and I am inclined to vote with the gentleman for his amendment, although I do not have the facts. We criticized the recent administration very severely, and I would like to be consistent. If we are not disposing of these vehicles, and there is any reason why we are not, we ought in some way or other to remove that reason.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MacGREGOR. Certainly.
Mr. LANHAM. Can the gentleman inform us how many vehicles of these various classes would be disposed of and put upon the market if his amendment were adopted?

Mr. MacGREGOR. Does the gentleman mean to ask me to separate them?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes; how many automobile trucks, how many trailers, how many passenger-carrying vehicles, how many motor cycles?

Mr. MacGREGOR. Assuming that there are on hand only sufficient number for an army of 150,000, there are no passenger-carrying motor vehicles left.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MacGREGOR. May I have two minutes more? I would like to answer the question, if I can.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York have three minutes more. I want to ask him a question or two.

Mr. ANTHONY. How much time does the gentleman want? Mr. MacGREGOR. Three minutes.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MacGREGOR. I will be glad to listen to the gentleman's question as soon as I have answered the question of the gentleman from Texas. There would be available 10,875 trucks, 10,208 trailers, and 2,843 motor cycles.

Mr. LANHAM. Has the gentleman any information as to the number of cars of different makes?

Mr. MacGREGOR. No; not of those retained. I have the figures as to those already distributed to the departments.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MacGREGOR. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. The gentleman stated, I believe, that it would cost $20,000,000 to run these extra automobiles. Has matter of selling motor vehicles, and the Secretary of War agreed with me on the proposition, but immediately—I do not harmful to the road service than helpful to it to have these automobiles and that it leads to extravagance? Is that the gentleman's contention?

Mr. MacGREGOR. My contention is that it leads to extrava-gance, because there is a tendency on the part of the highway commissioners to ask the Government to turn over more vehicles than are absolutely necessary for road-building purposes.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. And the upkeep is very expensive? Mr. MacGREGOR. The upkeep is very extravagant. Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I am in sympathy with what the gentleman from New York [Mr. MacGregor] seeks to accomplish, and that is to force the War Department to dispose of these unnecessary trucks and automobiles, but the objection to the gentleman's amendment is its indefiniteness. I fear that under the wording of the amendment the War Department might construe that it needed every truck and every automobile it has on hand for an Army of 150,000 men. There is no fixed number of motorpropelled vehicles that goes with an Army of any size, and if the War Department desires to retain every truck and every automobile that they have on hand they can do so under the amendment of the gentleman from New York. Therefore I think there should be some fixed number ordered to be disposed of if we desire to accomplish any results. A vast number of vehicles have been disposed of by the War Department. There now remain on hand, according to the latest reports, a total of 30,000 vehicles. Of this number, 10,088 are designed for the equipment of tactical units, and 12,800 are at posts in camps in operation. The War Department is holding 7,074 for replacement or maintenance. Now, there are other thousands of trucks that have been disposed of in various ways that are still at the service of the department if it needs them. For instance, it announced that it was its intention to assign 6,000 trucks to the National Guard. The National Guard does not need any such number as that, and it would be an added expense if we had to maintain that number in the hands of the guard. think there are about 3,000 now in the hands of the guard, twice as many as are necessary, so that I think we can safely dispose of 10,000 of these vehicles and still leave plenty of them for any possible use of the War Department.

I agree with the opinion expressed here that it is unwise to allow the Department of Agriculture to distribute any more Many of the States have more of these of these vehicles. trucks and automobiles than they know what to do with. Some counties have 30 or 40, for which they have no use. are just rusting away, standing out in the open air all over the United States, and many counties are selling them and converting them into cash. This money ought to go into the Federal Treasury. So on account of its indefiniteness I oppose this amendment.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman opposes the recommendation that 6,000 be given to the National Guard. Will the gentleman state, also, if they do not need that number, that it rather reassures our suspicion that we have not definite information, and that we are not safe in acting on the recommendation of the authorities in charge of the War Department? What I want to know is, can not we as a Congress take the bull by the horns and dispose of this surplus?

Mr. ANTHONY. That is what we are trying to do, and I think it is safe to order them to dispose of 10,000. I think the amendment could be further improved if they are ordered sold and none distributed through the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman knows that there is intense feeling among members of the House on both sides of the aisle, and that we had criticism without limit in the last administration. I am wondering whether we are doing any better now. I think we ought to be consistent, and do this even if we have to use the meat ax.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. McKENZIE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kansas if he is not going too far in this amendment in saying how many trucks shall be disposed of in view of the fact that we have five different centers in this country under the War Department whose only activity is the repairing of automobiles and trucks? If the gentleman gets the number down too low, does he not think that there will not be much for these repair shops to do?

Mr. ANTHONY. I am afraid that it will put some of those establishments out of business

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 20, strike out "ten" and insert in lieu thereof "fif-teen"; strike out "two" and insert in lieu thereof "ten."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, as usual, I am with the committee chairman. I am against the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR] only for one reason, and that is he leaves it to the discretion of the War Department, and if that is done there will not be a single automobile or truck sold. Because it has been the continuing policy of the War Department not to sell against the express wish of Members on both sides of the aisle for over two years. I am glad to hear the committee chairman say that he is in favor of the purpose of the amendment of the gentleman from New York and that he believes that these automobiles ought to be sold or disposed of, and I am offering an amendment that will make them sell and dispose of them. Even if we get them into the hands of the Agricultural Department it is not going to be hog tied like the War Department has been for two years, with an agreement we all understand was made with the automobile manufacturers that they would not put these new vehicles on the market.

Mr. MacGREGOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I can not yield; the gentleman has had 10 minutes and I have not had any.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has had half an hour. Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] when he was here last had enough time to last him four years more. I am glad to see him take time, however, because he studies the question and I get information from him. We are glad that he is back on the floor again, because we all get lots of information from him.

Now, I want to say that right after the armistice was signed I went to San Antonio, Tex., and I saw new automobile after automobile rusting away, exposed to the weather. They were not discarded ones which they condemn and sell after they are worn out. They were new ones. They have not sold a new automobile since the armistice, and have only sold those condemned, that nobody would have. But there were dozens of new cars there that never had been used, and they let them sit out in the weather, in the mud, deteriorating, rusting, and spoiling. I saw at San Antonio new cars, new Cadillacs, out there in the mud without any cover over them. I went back there a year later and the very same identical automobiles were still standing there in the mud. Why did not they sell them? Merely to protect the automobile manufacturers, and against the interests of the people. I want to say that if they made any such agreement with the automobile manufacturers and I said the same thing under the Democratic administration—they were acting like fools. It was against the interest of the people. Now, they have held all over the United States thousands of these cars long enough, and they still have thousands of them, and I am in sympathy with the purpose of the committee's provision and the purpose of the gentleman from New York in putting in his amendment and in putting the bill in such shape by my own amendment that the War Department will be compelled to dispose of these cars. If we can get them into the hands of the Department of Agriculture, if it can not use them on the public roads, it will have the right to sell or dispose of them. What I want to do is to take it wholly out They have made a botch of of the War Department's hands. the business, and I want some Government agency to have a chance at it and see if they can not get these automobiles back into the avenues of trade, where the people of the United States can get some benefit from them.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think that there is considerable truth in what the gentleman from Texas says. If we intend to get the motor vehicles out of the War Department's hands we had better legislate. believe the gentleman from Ohio expressed my views when he said that Congress ought to take the matter into its own hands now. For four months I have been trying to get a light Dodge truck assigned to the Bureau of Mines in my district. We have a rescue training school and station there at Vincennes, Ind. They need a light truck and need it so badly that the Bureau of Mines will have to buy it, and as I say for four months I have been trying to get one of these trucks assigned to this station.

The Government admits that it has thousands of them, but there is some red tape or something in the way so that there is no power on earth that can get one of these trucks assigned I recently had a letter from the War Department to a station. I recently had a letter from the War Department saying that the knew of no way that the Agricultural Department could permit the Bureau of Mines to have this truck, even if the Agricultural Department had one of them. If legislation is at fault, then we are at fault. There ough: to be some means whereby the different departments at least could get the trucks they need.

Not long ago attention was called to the Agricultural Committee that the Agricultural Department was paying something like $3,000 for a truck to send up to New Jersey to use for the extermination of Japanese beetles. This followed close upon the distribution by the Agricultural Department of 100 trucks to the State of New Jersey. The Agricultural Department said that they could not change the order; that the New Jersey road department had the trucks but they would not give them over to the Agricultural Department, and therefore they would have to buy one and send it up there. It seems to me that the Government has ceased to function in connection with the proper exchange of these trucks. Are we going to permit the Agricultural Department and Bureau of Mines to buy new trucks when there are plenty of them at different camps in our country?

Is Congress going to say that it is helpless, fold its hands, and not give some kind of legislation that will relieve this distressing condition? Now I have given up any hope of getting a light truck for the Bureau of Mines without buying it with money appropriated by this Congress. It is the only way I know of, and I have worked on the proposition for four months, but the Secretary of War can tell me no way and the Secretary of Agriculture can tell me of no way of getting it, and the Bureau of Mines say "we are helpless in the matter and your truck can not be obtained."

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I will.

Mr. BLACK. I can suggest a way for the gentleman. If he will just offer an amendment directing the Secretary of War to transfer one of these trucks to the Bureau of Mines and the point of order is not made to it, the Bureau of Mines will get it.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. But the gentleman has several "ifs" in his statement. There are no doubt a number of Members who will make the point of order here. We have never been able to get legislation through this or the preceding Congress that will take care of this truck situation. I do not know why, and I would like to ask the chairman of this committee if there is any provision of this bill whereby the Bureau ef Mines can get one of these many thousands of trucks?

Mr. BLANTON. I suggest the gentleman suspend asking the question awhile until the chairman gets back.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I wish he were here. I would like to direct that inquiry to him when he returns.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

Upon a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there wereayes 17, noes 39.

So the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman— Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, before the question is put I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I stated in the gentleman's absence that I find it impossible, after working four months, to find any law or authority that entitled the Secretary of War or the Secretaries of Agriculture or Interior or the Burean of Mines to get the transfer of a truck from the War Department to the station at Vincennes of a light Dodge truck, although they have many thousands of them. Is there any provision in this bill whereby that condition may be remedied, and whereby this Bureau of Mines can obtain one of the Government-owned trucks without buying a new one?

Mr. ANTHONY. They have authority now under the law to transfer such a vehicle if it is declared surplus. The trouble with the War Department is that it refuses to declare these vehicles surplus.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I have their letter saying it has to be declared nonserviceable.

Mr. ANTHONY. Oh, no.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Any automobile transferred to the Agriculture Department has to be declared surplus before it gets there, but after it gets there the Agricultural Department has no power to transfer the truck to the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Bureau of Mines would have to pay

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Certainly. Either go out in the market and buy it, not buy it of the War Department, because they sent the Bureau of Mine's representative to New Albany, as they did the other day, and buy one of these tracks, and when they went to great expense and arrived there they found they were selling about 100 trucks of this make of cars, but they were out of service, condemned, perfectly worthless. They went over to New Jersey, and the same kind of condition ob-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to add to the observations which have been made here in reference to the handling of these surplus vehicles by the War Department. All over the country it is well understood that these vehicles have been stored out in the weather and permitted to deteriorate. They would not sell them. Now, I want to ask the chairman of this subcommittee if it is not possible in this bill or by some other legislation, in view of the fact that the War Department will not declare a surplus, for the Congress of the United States to institute some kind of an independent agency to do this thing? It is a national disgrace. The country knows and everybody knows that great depots have been established where these vehicles that have cost a tremendous amount of public funds have been permitted to deteriorate. People could not buy them. I think a thing of this sort ought to address itself to the determined purpose of the Congress to correct. That sort of thing has the worst possible effect upon the morale of the people of the country in respect to their confidence in the integrity of the public officials and of the Government, and I ask the chairman of this committee if it is not possible for the Congress, either in this bill or some other legislation, to remedy this matter, and do it now?

Mr. ANTHONY. It should be. Of course, that is a matter that should probably be brought forth by the legislative committee having that in charge. We tried to precipitate such action by putting an amendment in our Army appropriation bill. The House very generously allowed it to stay in the bill. The provision in force is the one agreed upon in conference, and in my opinion it should be further amended by striking out this transfer to the Department of Agriculture and surplus vehicles should be sold.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. There is another feature about this matter. I was in one of the national reserves this summer, and the superintendent told me that he very much needed a truck to do some work, and that the State in which that reserve was located had had assigned to it by the Government a number of these trucks, and that they were not in use at all, but were standing out in the weather, and that he could not get the privilege of using this truck. It seems to me, too, the Government should reserve the right to use all equipment donated, and that this surplus property should be shifted from one activity of the Government to the other when needed and not in use where assigned. Any department of the Government within reasonable limitations ought to be able to use Government property in any activity of the Government when the equipment is not otherwise in use. There is too much disposition of each of these departments to regard itself as an entity, as a sort of government of itself and unto itself. It is economically wasteful to have so much equipment assigned to this department and so much to that department, instead of recognizing that equipment is devoted to Government use, and when the Government does not need it at one particular place it ought to be shifted to another department or to another place instead of having a surplus not in use at one place and purchasing new equipment for another department.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I hope nobody will accuse me of partisanship if I inquire in all seriousness when this administration is going to start to function. You will remember that in the last Congress about once or twice a day some of the gentlemen on the Republican side would rear back on their hind feet and cuss out the War Department, and Mr. Baker in particular, because he would not get rid of these surplus trucks. And I see one gentleman sitting over there looking as solemn as an owl that used to indulge in that, but I have not heard him say anything about it since Secretary Weeks exercises the same contumacious stubbornness by not letting these trucks go. If you gentlemen can find some way of changing the leopard's spots of this War Department, we will join you.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Bland] is right. It is folly to say that the Bureau of Mines should go out and buy a new truck when to-day in storage there is every kind of truck they need and that the War Department has and does not need, and all on earth that is necessary is to declare it surplus and turn it over to them. And all that is needed in the War Department is horse sense in handling these trucks. I say that in no partisan spirit. Baker was guilty of the same thing and Weeks is guilty of the same thing, and I hope that four years will not go around until we can use some horse sense in disposing of the surplus trucks. The gentleman said they will not let them go unless they are worthless. Is that correct?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The situation is simply this, that they have no power to dispose of them to the public unless they are nonserviceable.

Mr. WINGO. That is my information. In other words, when they get ready to sell one of these trucks, it is not worth selling.

It must be "spoiled," just as you say they sold meat that was That was a remarkable statement made on Friday that this administration is selling spoiled meat. Well, it is a serious charge against the War Department that it is selling spoiled meat. Of course, it is not true. You say the Democratic Party is responsible for it. Well, I do not know which is worse, one that would hold the meat until it was spoiled or one that would unload spoiled stuff on the public. If that stuff was spoiled, it ought to have been dumped in the river. It ought not to be put out at any price for American people to eat. Let us get rid of the spoiled meat and the worn-out trucks; get rid of the surplus by letting it go where it ought to go,

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I would like to know what the facts are about these trucks and automobiles. Is it true that we have these thousands of automobiles and trucks that are out in the weather and deteriorating?

Mr. WYANT. Is it true that the contract to purchase prohibits the Government from selling these trucks in the open market at public sale?

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman possibly has more information than I have. I have heard that suggestion for two or three years, but I have not found anybody responsible with enough energy to find out whether it is true or not. They said it was true during Baker's time.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Was it true?

Mr. WINGO. I hear my Republican friends still charging it, but whether by force of habit or predicated upon known facts I can not say. Our Republican friends made that charge, and whether the momentum they thus acquired is spent on the present Secretary of War I can not say.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I have gone into the truck contracts somewhat, and I have not found any specific provision in any truck contract where the Government is not permitted to sell them on the market. But I have gone far enough to believe that there is an understanding that a truck will not be put on the market until it is worthless

Mr. WINGO. Have you made any headway with the present General Staff?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. As the gentleman suggested a moment ago, something seems to get into their heads when they get over there which causes them to cease to function for the public. I have not any criticism of Mr. Weeks so far, but if he is not able to afford relief there will be criticism of him.

Mr. WINGO. If you can not get such relief, who can? He is your dog, and you must pick the fleas or quit scratching.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I have heard for some time-for a year or two-and all of us have, that there are great numbers of automobiles and trucks that are out in the weather unprotected and being destroyed by the elements-thousands of them. I have never known whether that is true or not. It has always occurred to me if we had these thousands of automobiles there must be some good reason why the department did not dispose Surely the War Department would not keep the automobiles out there just for the fun of seeing them go to pieces and rot and thereby waste the public funds. There must be some good reason for it, if it is a fact.

I would like to ask somebody over there two questions: First, Is it a fact that we have this great number of automobiles and trucks out in the weather and going to ruin; and, if so, what reason does the department assign for it, without reference to whether it is a Democratic administration or Republican administration? I am not particularly interested in that, but I would like to know what the facts are about these automobiles.

Mr. ANTHONY. The facts are as the gentleman states. I think it is safe to say that at two depots in this country there are still automobiles in the original packing boxes, standing out in the open air. The only reason which is apparent to me as to why they have not been sold is based upon some kind of an understanding which it is said was had between the War Department and the manufacturers to not depress the industry. My experience here has been that every time I have introduced an amendment to sell automobiles or trucks-and on the last fortification bill I introduced an amendment to sell a number of tractors-great pressure was brought to bear, not only in this body, but more noticeably in the other body, to have those distributed through the Agricultural Department so as not to depress the price of the product.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Is there any objection on the part of these manufacturers, who seem to dominate the situation, to having these automobiles used by the Government in other departments?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think they are agreeable to any system that will keep them off the market. They do not object to loading down any department of the Government. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS. As I understand, further, there is need of these automobiles in other departments of the Government. Now, why is it that they have not been transferred to those departments? Has the War Department no authority to do it

Mr. ANTHONY. I think they have that authority.
Mr. HUMPHREYS. But they decline to turn them over to the other departments?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes. Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The gentleman says they have that authority. I would like to see that authority. I doubt it.

Mr. ANTHONY. They have authority to turn them over to the Department of Agriculture and to the Post Office Department.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. And there it stops.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Is there any objection to turning them over to other departments that need them?

Mr. ANTHONY. The only objection is that all the other departments are overloaded now, as I understand.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WALSH). The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. My amendment reads as follows: Page 34, at the end of line 10, insert the following-

And so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is an amendment already pending.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary in-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will it be in order when the other amendment is disposed of to offer that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks so. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. A division, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SNELL: Mr. Chairman, can we not have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR] will again be reported.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether the amendment he proposes to offer is an amendment similar to that of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. No. It is a separate amendment, covering a different territory.

Mr. MacGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to withdraw my

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment,

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, that can not be done under the circumstances. I make the point of order that the House was dividing on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. It can be done by unanimous con-

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?
Mr. MacGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may withdraw my amendment and offer in lieu thereof a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN, The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment and offer a substitute. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, if it is an amendment that is in order, that can be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair knows nothing about that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let us have it read for infor-

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Amendment offered by Mr. MacGregor: Page 33, line 13, strike out after the word "sell" all the balance of the line and lines 14, 15, and 16, down to and including the word "sale," in line 16.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I think that amendment is satisfactory

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I raise my voice against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR] desire to discuss his amendment?

Mr. MacGREGOR. No. I have no further discussion to

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recog-

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I have watched the disposition here with this House sitting in committee to say, rather than the Secretary of War and the War Department, as to what goods they shall keep on hand and what goods they shall sell. I respectfully protest that this House has no information as to what stock of automobiles should be kept on hand, not, perhaps, for the present Army, but in case of an emergency.

I desire likewise to say that it seems to be assumed in this House that an automobile, if left out in the open air, is spoiled in a short time. I went down to Panama in 1904 and I found locomotives-small locomotives-and machinery of all kinds that had stood in the open air in that damp climate for years, and when they came to use them again it was only a question of wiping off a little rust. They were not destroyed. Automobiles are made to stand the weather, and they do not deteriorate in the way that has been suggested.

But the point I wish to emphasize is that it is the business of the Secretary of War and of the War Department to determine what stock of arms and transportation facilities should be kept on hand for the needs of this Government, and it is not the right or the duty of this House to determine that question for the Secretary of War or to decide whether he should sell or not.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.
Mr. KNUTSON. Does not the gentleman think that we should either sell the automobiles or make an appropriation for a corps of wipers?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The gentleman is asking a question that I suppose is meant to be a little bit of a joke. I say that as to the amount of stock kept on hand it is a great deal cheaper to keep them than to sell it for nothing. great deal cheaper to keep than to buy again, and it is a great deal cheaper in case of necessity to have on hand the necessary war material than to have disposed of it. But what I insist on is that the Congress of the United States knows nothing on this subject, and the War Department ought to be trusted more than it seems to be the disposition on the part of the House to trust it.

Mr. WYANT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. WYANT. Does not the gentleman know that there are acres of these trucks and automobiles out on the swamp decaying?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recog-

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am in entire sympathy with the manifest disposition here to require the sale of these automobiles.

I have not very much information about it, but I assume that the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations which brought in this bill gave attention to this proposition and determined from the information before them that it would be safe to direct the sale to the extent provided, to wit, 10,000 motor trucks and 2,000 passenger-carrying automobiles, and I am following the committee, because I assume that the committee know more about it than I do. I should have been glad to vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Texas increasing the number which would be sold if I had been certain that we had sufficient information before us to know that that would be a safe thing to do.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. If I understand the amendment of the gentleman from New York it will require the War Department to sell rather than transfer to the Agricultural Department.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am just coming to that proposition. I do not know whether it is a wise thing virtually to repeal law which now authorizes transfers to the Agricultural Department or not, if his amendment will do that. I have no information as to the status of these transfers. I want to vote intelligently upon this matter.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think I can give the gentleman some information. The amendment of the gentleman from New York would compel the department to sell 10,000 trucks and 2,000 automobiles between January 1, 1921, and six months thereafter. Now, the figures show that between January 1, 1921, and March 31, 1921, they disposed of 3,354 vehicles, so under the language of the amendment as in now stands it will only force them to sell about 8,700 more vehicles, and there are 30,000 remaining.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The provision of the committee's bill will do that, will it not?

Mr. ANTHONY. Our bill would have required them either to sell them or to transfer them. The amendment of the gentleman from New York strikes out the transfer requirement.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman from Kansas understand that it would virtually repeal the existing law authorizing the transfer? Am I correct in that, or could they still transfer?

Mr. ANTHONY. It would not repeal any existing law. Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. They could still transfer vehicles to the Department of Agriculture, could they?

Mr. ANTHONY. If they were declared surplus.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Who declares them surplus?

Mr. ANTHONY. The General Staff.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Is there any way in which we can put through a proposition here that will prevent the War Department transferring automobiles to the Agricultural Department in such a way that they do not go to the public? If we leave it to them, they will transfer to the Agricultural Department, will they not?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think they will. Mr. McKENZIE. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this amendment is possibly more important than we might think at first blush. It involves, as was said by the gentleman from New Jersey, the question of having Congress undertake to determine the amount of surplus in the War Department; in other words, to take away from the Secretary of War and the men in charge of our Military Establishment the authority and power to fix the amount of surplus of a certain commodity or article now held by the War Department. I have always been one of those who believed that Congress should control the size of the Army, the enlisted personnel, and the commissioned personnel. I think that is a function of Congress. It is the duty of Congress in order to protect the people. The General Staff or the Secretary of War should never be clothed with the power of fixing the size of the Army; but the General Staff and the Secretary of War in all good faith, when they want, for instance, to increase the number of cannon that we have as armament, or the number of rifles, or the amount of cloth to be held in reserve, should come to Congress and get appropriations for that purpose. They have done that in the past. We have appropriated from time to time for armament, for ordnance, for all the things that go to take care of the Army in time of peace, and incidentally in an emergency. The World War came on and we gave them blanket authority. They went out and bought thousands and thousands of automobiles to be used in the Great War. The war ended. The War Department had on hand these thousands and tens of thousands of automobiles.

Now the question comes up, What are we going to do with them? Shall we let them stand out in the open air, as one gentleman says, to rot down, or shall they be transferred to some other departments or sold to the people? We have been fighting over that for a long time, but Congress has hesitated, and properly hesitated, in taking away from the Secretary of War the power to declare them surplus. But, as one gentleman has said here, this thing has become almost a national scandal, and Congress has determined in this particular instance to direct the War Department to sell some of these automobiles. But I hope, gentlemen of this committee and of the House, that this action will not be taken as a proper precedent for the control of surplus in the War Department in the future, because, in my judgment, you could wreck and ruin the Military Establishment of our country if the actions of this House in the last few days, in its desire to hit a head wherever it was shown that apparently belonged to the Army, should be indiscriminately followed. While I shall not object seriously to this amendment, I hope it will not be taken as a precedent.

Mr. WYANT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WYANT. What length of time ought it to take the War Department to determine what surplus we have? The armistice was signed two years and three months ago. How much time do you want the War Department to take?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say to the gentleman that the determination of that question involves both the present and the future. In the War Department they have contended on the one hand that we ought to prepare for nine divisions; that we ought to have a reserve on hand for nine divisions in case an emergency should arise. In peace time there is no practical need for an Army of nine divisions.

Mr. WYANT. Is it not true that the life of an automobile out in the swamp is only a couple of years?

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not know the exact length of time. Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee a question. As I understand it, the gentleman is in accord with the amendment of the gentleman from New York. I want to call attention to the fact that the amendment does not change the language in the bill requiring the sale during the first six months of the calendar year. If this bill does not become a law until the last week in June, which is possible, it would force the sale of seven or eight thousand auto-mobiles within a week, because in order to comply with the law they would have to be sold by July 1. Does not the gentleman think that it would be wise to extend the time 30 days?

Mr. ANTHONY. If the language were construed as strictly as the gentleman suggests, the time should be extended. Does not the gentleman think that if the order was given for the sale before July 1 that it would comply with the intent of the

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Your bill says:

That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to sell, or to dispose of by transfer to the Department of Agriculture under existing laws, for its own use and the use of the several States in road work and maintenance of roads, not less than one-half by sale, so many motor trucks and passenger-carrying automobiles as will, in addition to such trucks and automobiles as have been sold or transferred since January 1, 1921, aggregate during the first six months of the calendar year—

And so forth.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should have no objection to extending the

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I think the gentleman might suggest to the gentleman from New York some date that would enable us to sell the trucks.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman from New York advises me that he will offer such an amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last ord. The gentleman from Illinois suggested a moment ago that the justification for holding these surplus trucks seemed to be on the theory that they needed in reserve at all times sufficient trucks and automobiles for nine divisions. Does the gentleman think it practicable to keep in reserve these auto-Does the mobiles out in the open where they deteriorate, simply because they might need them in a future war?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; I think they ought to be sold, but I think they should fix the time within which they are to be sold.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from Arkansas yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are many automobile trucks stored at Camp Holabird that have been knocked down and placed in crates so that they can not deteriorate. I am not acquainted with the condition of trucks standing out in the open unless it refers to those crated suitable for shipment abroad.

Mr. WINGO. I have not seen them lately, but I have an idea now that the summer social season is open that all of these passenger-carrying vehicles will be in use.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that all serviceable automobiles have been put in commission for social purposes.

Mr. WINGO. It may be so; I have noticed that some of the cars used for midnight social functions bore indications of having been used some time and were not new.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman was at these midnight social functions?

Mr. WINGO. No. I frequently work late at night at my office and going home on the street car I behold the gentleman frequently, apparently going to or from a social function, sweeping by in a car. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 34, after line 10, add the following: "The Secretary of War is hereby directed to transfer to the Bureau of Mines one light Dodge automobile truck, in good condition, for use at the mine-rescue station at Vincennes, Ind."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman reserve it?

Mr. MONDELL. It is a specific provision amending a general provision.

Mr. MacGREGOR. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

Is not there an amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 19, strike out the word "six" and insert the word nine."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 34, line 10, insert: "The War Department within 30 days after the approval of this act shall transfer, without cost, to the Bureau of Mines, for use at the station at Vincennes, Ind., a serviceable light motor truck.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. Mr. MacGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

WATER AND SEWERS AT MILITARY POSTS.

For procuring and introducing water to buildings and premises at such military posts and stations as from their situations require to be brought from a distance; for the installation and extension of plumbing within buildings where the same is not specifically provided for in other appropriations; for the purchase and repair of fire apparatus, including fire-alarm systems; for the disposal of sewage, and expenses incident thereto; for repairs to water and sewer systems and plumbing; for hire of employees, $2,000,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for new construction work.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I do this for the purpose of inserting a letter which every Member here, I am sure, is interested in, and to enliven the occasion somewhat in view of the fact that it shows a growing interest in the Congress. I ask that the Clerk may

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

> OFFICE OF PAUL D. RANSO Atkinson, Ill., May 2, 1921.

COMMITTEE OF MANUFACTURERS AND MERCHANTS ON FEDERAL TAXATION. Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen: Responding to your circular letter, asking for our "very frank opinion" regarding certain statements you put forth about Federal taxation, also asking for a subscription to carry on the work of the committee.

We are giving our very frank opinion, but without the subscription, and you can take it for what it appears to be worth.

In the first place, we admit the necessity for studying taxation, both Federal and local, for it has assumed the proportions of a big brown bear that dogs us day and night; and, believe me, that business men who are paying taxes are studying the question. But the necessity of the "formation of a Nation-wide organization of business men" to study the question, and the publishing of another magazine for propaganda, we are not now prepared to admit. For it seems to us that it results in simply adding another burden to the business man; for you are already primed to "accept" anything from 50 cents to $100 per month more from the fellow you are so anxious about. We can not help but suspect that so soon as the contributions commenced to stream in, a comfortable suite of rooms in a high-priced office building would be the result, with the inevitable highly-paid organization, the inevitable expensive magazine with its inevitable place in the inevitable waste basket.

inevitable expensive magazine with its inevitable place in the inevitable waste basket.

Every few weeks we receive an earnest plea for funds from some organization that is trying to save the country. The American Forestry Association are anxious about saving trees and modestly ask for a $50 check. The American Defense Society are solicitous about the patriotism of the people and think if we would remit them $50 that it would hold off the "reds" quite a while. Another bunch are right on edgabout the income tax and would appreciate it very much if we would inclose our check for $50, and so it goes. We doubt not but that they "all be honorable men" with good intentions, but the tendency of the times to rush every new idea into an expensive organization and overorganization may become more of a menace than some of the things they are so anxious about.

At Washington we have bureau after bureau, and commissions and committees galore who are paid to investigate all questions under the sun; to say nothing about a President and Cabinet, who are men of affairs, and who are supposed to know everything and do everything for everybody, and a Congress composed of men and women who have been selected on account of their peculiar fitness to serve the people; they are studying and trying to work out the problems that all are thinking about, and they are paid to do it; why drag in something else? No, gentlemen, you can not have my money for what I consider a useless propaganda about taxation. I am sending all of my kicks about legislation or suggestions for reforms directly to my Congressman, or to our Senator, or even to my President; and if I happen to have an extra $50 or $100 I shall remit it directly to them, for they are not any too well paid for the work we expect them to do for us.

Thanking you for the opportunity for expression, I am

Yours, truly,

P. D. Ransom.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, as follows:

The provisions of the act of February 28, 1919, relating to the Issuance of uniforms to discharged enlisted men are hereby repealed: Provided, That such uniforms shall be issued in accordance with the provisions of said act to those enlisted men who served in the Army of the United States at any time between April 6, 1917, and January 1, 1920, whose applications therefor shall have been received at the War Department prior to June 1, 1921.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph that it is legislation on an appropriaorder against the paragraph that it is legislation on an appropriation bill unauthorized by existing law.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, of course the intent of the paragraph is to effect an economy. If the paragraph is out it means that the item of clothing will have to be increased $16,000,000 in order to take care of the probable demand under the act of February 28, 1919.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that the men have most all received it?

Mr. ANTHONY. By far the largest proportion of the men entitled to the clothing have asked for it and it was deemed advisable to have it closed up at this time, otherwise the War Department is compelled to maintain an aggregate of $16,000,000 worth of clothing to meet a possible demand.

But the demands are slackening off and evidently the men do not care to ask for it, so that it would be better to shut it off.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I would state that I would not object to a time limitation, but the trouble is in repealing the provision which authorizes the issuance you necessarily repeal the provision which permits the wearing, as that clause is tied to the clause in reference to the issuance.

Mr. ANTHONY. We have just repealed that relating to issuance.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The trouble is the clause authorizing the wearing of the uniform is tied onto the same sentence which authorizes the issuance in the original act. You could not repeal all of this paragraph without repealing the clause allowing the soldiers who have uniforms to wear them.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Here is the original act. The original act says:

Any person who served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the present war, may, upon honorable discharge and return to civil life, permanently retain one complete suit of outer uniform clothing, including the overcoat, and such articles of personal apparel and equipment as may be authorized, respectively, by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, and may wear such uniform clothing after such discharge.

Now, "and may wear" is a clause in the sentence authorizing the issuance. Now, if you repeal the sentence authorizing the issue of clothing, you necessarily repeal the clause authorizing them to wear, and they can only wear them for three months under the old law after issuance

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, what the gentleman has read has nothing to do with the issuing of the uniform. It is only that part of the same paragraph relating to the issuance that is repealed.

Mr. JONES of Texas. But it is all connected up in the same sentence.

Mr. WALSH. The portion of the paragraph repealed only relates to the issuance of the uniform.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not see how you are going to have an authorization in the form of a clause which would not be a complete sentence and which would have no meaning.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The authority to wear the uniform already issued can remain in the law.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It does not say so; that is the point I am making. I do not object to the time limitation. I think in repealing the law authorizing the issuance you necessarily repeal the law authorizing the wearing of the uniform, because of the way the two are tied together in the law.

Mr. MONDELL. This does not repeal the law relative to wear.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I think it does.

Mr. MONDELL. It repeals the provision with regard to the issuance, but there is no repeal that would affect the right to wear these uniforms. The repeal is simply of the provision relative to issuance.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I grant you that, but the clause authorizing the wearing is so tied up and interwoven with the clause authorizing the issuance that you can not repeal one without repealing the other. Otherwise it would leave it meaningless.

Mr. MONDELL. By no possible construction could this be held to be a repeal of the right to wear the uniform.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Would the gentleman think it would improve the language if we say, "That portion of the act of February 28," instead of "provision"?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I have drafted an amendment along that line, and I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw the point

Mr. JONES of Texas. No; I do not; but if the gentleman is going to offer a proper amendment, I will, if the chairman will offer the amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will do so.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Then I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, beginning at line 8, page 36, to change the language where it reads, "The provisions of the act of February 28," and so forth. Strike out the words "the provisions" and insert "that portion of the act."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 36, line 8, strike out the words "the provisions" and insert in lieu thereof the words "that portion."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Jones of Texas offers a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas: Page 36, line 8, strike out the words "the provisions" and insert in lieu thereof "section 1"; and, in line 9, strike out the word "are" and insert the word "is"; and, in line 10, strike out the word "repealed" and insert "amended by adding at the end of such section the following proviso."

Mr. ANTHONY. What is the effect of the amendment? What proviso is it?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I add the one in the bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman quote section 1 of the act, so we will know?

Mr. JONES of Texas. The one I read before:

That any person who served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the present war-

Mr. MONDELL. Has the gentleman offered an amendment? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offered an amendment by way of a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas

Mr. MONDELL. I reserve a point of order on the substitute. Mr. ANTHONY. Is not the amendment I have suggested the simplest way? Mr. JONES of Texas. I believe the gentleman's amendment accomplishes the same thing, and I will withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Texas withdraws his amendment.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment, at the end of line 9, page 36, to strike out the word "are" and insert the word "is

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. DALLINGER. I move to strike out the last word. do this in order to obtain some information from the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY]. I would like to ask him if, in connection with his duties as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, he knows whether or not there is anyone connected with the War Department whose duty it is to see that when supplies of clothing or other things are desired for the Army there is not on hand already in the possession of the department, left over from the late war, plenty of those particular commodities?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is the duty of the Quartermaster General.
Mr. DALLINGER. Now, Mr. Chairman, apparently whoever has charge of this has not functioned for some time. My attention has recently been called to the fact that the Quarter-master Department of the Army has recently sent out bids for certain kinds of new clothing cloth for use in the Army, while at the same time the Government is selling the same kind of clothing at a very low price, way below cost, in order to get rid of a surplus supply. It seems to me when there is this immense amount of material on hand that has been left over from the war there ought to be some inventory taken and there ought to be somebody in the War Department who knows what they have on hand, so that they will not be purchasing new goods of the same kind.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman is criticizing one bureau of the War Department. But does he take into consideration the fact that the General Staff has been operating ever since the war began, and that orders are still given from the General Staff without regard to what these bureaus desire to do? The bureaus receive direction to do things that in their opinion are probably unwise, but it is not fair to hold an individual bureau responsible for something for which they are not responsible under present conditions.

Mr. DALLINGER. Does not the gentleman think there ought to be some reorganization of the War Department so that this inexcusable waste may be stopped in the interest of the taxpayers?

Mr. ANTHONY. Undoubtedly. There is a law to the effect that the General Staff should not operate, but it does operate, and it does the same kind of thing the gentleman complains

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman if he can see the slightest change in the conduct of the War Department since the change of administration, in reference to these matters?

Mr. DALLINGER. I will say in reply to the gentleman from South Dakota that while there has not been any appreciable change as yet, it is only fair to say that the present administration has only recently taken charge and that one of the duties of this Congress and this administration is to reorganize the War Department and the other departments so that these abuses will not continue.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. And the gentleman hopes to see it improve very shortly?

Mr. DALLINGER. I do.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman know when it is going to begin?

Mr. DALLINGER. I do not know when it is going to begin, and that is the reason I asked the question of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony].

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order to the language on page 37, beginning in line 1 with the word "and" and covering the balance of that line, and all of lines 2, 3, and 4, and that part of line 5 down to and including the word "maintenance," which is legislation on an appropriation bill unauthorized by

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think that that part of the paragraph is subject to a point of order, because it clearly relates to the acquisition of horses for the Army, which we are authorized to do by law.

Mr. BLANTON. If there is any law that authorizes the War Department to go over the country and buy stallions and send them down to Texas and turn them over to ranchmen free of charge and let those ranchmen breed them for their private benefit free of charge, with no obligation on their part whatever to sell the progeny to the Government, and with no claim whatever on the progeny, I would like to know it. Is there any such law?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. When was it passed?

Mr. ANTHONY. The law is carried in the authority for the Army to acquire horses. This appropriation is made toward that end. Whether we go out in the open market and buy them or whether we buy stallions and mares and breed them, we are authorized to do it.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the old provisions, which were not authorized by law, the War Department forced these men who breed to these horses to obligate themselves to sell the progeny to the Government. But there is no such obligation here. The men may keep all of the progeny for their own use and private benefit if they see fit, and the Government will not profit in any way whatever by the transaction. I ask the gentleman to cite the Chair to any law that authorizes this Government to go into the business of horse raising, not for the benefit of the Army but for the benefit of private individuals. There is no such provision of law. I have the reports here and the statements from the Army officers, showing exactly what the purpose and intention of the appropriation is. I submit to the Chair that there is no such law authorizing any such business.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony] cite to the Chair authority for this?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think there is any specific law, Mr. Chairman. It is only under the general law authorizing us to appropriate for horses for the Army.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Chair please, the general law authorizing the War Department to acquire horses for cavalry purposes does not limit the War Department on the question whether they shall be purchased after they are grown or whether they shall be bred by the War Department. The appropriation which is carried in the current law, the appropriation act for 1921, is in practically the same language as that carried in the present bill.

Now, the War Department, for convenience, may purchase all the horses which it may need for remounts or for cavalry or for riding purposes, or it may under the law, without specific authority, breed them all if it could do so. This bill limits the use of this $150,000 to the encouragement of the breeding of horses suitable for the Army. There is nothing in the bill or in the general law that squints at letting these horses out for private benefit. They may incidentally be of private benefit to the people at large, but the primary purpose of this appropriation is for the breeding of horses throughout the country that are suitable for the Army and suitable for cavalry and riding purposes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. Mr. WALSH. What provision of law authorizes them to cooperate with the Bureau of Animal Industry?

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, the Bureau of Animal Industry in 1910 began the performance of this very duty. It was taken over by the War Department a couple of years ago, and last year, when this appropriation was made, it was under the authority of the appropriation contained in that bill that these horses that were formerly under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Animal Industry were taken over by the remount service of the War Department, and in cooperation with the Bureau of Animal Industry the remount service of the War Department is now performing this function.

Mr. WALSH, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman from Kentucky contend that the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture had supervision of the breeding of cavalry horses for the War Department?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; from 1910 to 1921 the Bureau of Animal Industry had charge of the breeding of these horses, and they had a contract with every owner of a colt that was the result of this breeding to the effect that at the age of 3 years it was to be sold to the Army for $150.

Mr. WALSH. How did they come to cease that work?

Mr. BARKLEY. Because the War Department thought they were better qualified to carry on the breeding of Army horses than the Department of Agriculture, and when this appropriation was made in the bill for 1921 for that purpose the Bureau of Animal Industry turned over its equipment to the remount service of the War Department, and that remount service is now carrying on the work previously conducted by the Bureau of Animal Industry.

Mr. WALSH. What does this language mean? Is it that they are going to give the Bureau of Animal Industry another

Mr. BARKLEY. No. It means that the Bureau of Animal Industry has outstanding certain contracts which it made when it had charge of this work. Most of these contracts have been canceled or have lapsed, but there are still outstanding certain contracts which have been made with private individuals, and to that extent this cooperation must go on.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair hear me just a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman. Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, to show how ridiculous this provision is and to show how it has been carried on without authority of law, I call the attention of the Chair to the previous appropriation in the last bill. Out of that appropriation $350 was used to buy a horse called Decameron, and it was turned over to my constituent, Mr. Ben V. Simons, at Paint Rock, Tex., in my district; and $600 was spent for a horse named John R. Clay and turned over to Mr. George Richardson, at San Angelo, Tex., in the district of my colleague from Texas. Mr. Hudspeth; and $1,000 was spent for a horse named Von Tromp, which was turned over to Mr. D. H. Snyder, jr., of Colorado, Tex., in the district of my colleague, Mr. Hudspeth; and $1,000 was spent for a horse named Mac and turned over to Mr. Fletcher Harper, of Paloduro, Tex., in the district of my colleague, Mr. Jones. And so on in the case of others. Only one little scrap of paper has been taken from these individuals showing that the horses belonged to the Government. They have been given to these individuals for their own use if they so desire, without any expense whatever to themselves, as they receive back from the Government all breeding fees they charge. There is not a single word in the present agreement that binds them, regardless of what has been in the agreements made in the past, to sell the progeny to the Government. Forunder the present agreement there is no arrangement that they will sell the progeny to the Government. In other words, these private individuals, all our friends in Texas, are getting the benefit of the expenditure of public money in the private horse business, to the detriment of the whole people of the United States.

I direct the attention of the Chair to the fact that there is no law authorizing any such private horse industry in this country.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I want to make just this suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman. Mr. WINGO. The only law that I recall authorizing the expenditure of money for horses is a law that contemplates horses for use, and there is a clear distinction between keeping a horse for breeding purposes and keeping a horse for use. In this matter I think we ought to be very careful. You see the jealousy that has already been raised over the distribution of free studs even in Texas [laughter], and if you make a precedent of it, every Member of Congress will want free studs distributed in his district, and it will become a public scandal. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman from Arkansas will not need any for his. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINGO. It may be that when I get into the condition of the gentleman from Kentucky I will have a personal interest in the matter. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I am afraid there is a good deal of jealousy already on the gentleman's part. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINGO. No. The jealousy exhibited between the gentlemen from Texas over the distribution in their districts causes me to fear for the safety of the Public Treasury. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I merely wanted to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that even if, down in the gentleman's district in Texas, the War Department turned over one of its horses to some private individual, it has nothing to do with the point of order. fact is all these animals are turned over to private individuals in the various States. The language to which the gentleman makes the point of order is the language from the word "including," on page 36, the words included in the parentheses, and those are, "including $50,000 for the purchase of remounts and $150,000 for the encouragement of the breeding of riding horses suitable for the Army." Now, that is a perfectly legitihorses suitable for the Army." Now, that is a perfectly legiti-mate appropriation under the law authorizing the War Department to acquire cavalry horses.

Then the remainder of the language provides-

And $150,000 for encouragement of the breeding of riding horses suitable for the Army, including cooperation with the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, and for the purchase of animals for breeding purposes and their maintenance,

They are authorized to purchase these animals. These horses are actually used eight months in the year at the remount stations to take the places of other horses that would be necessary, and they are only used for breeding purposes during about four months of the year. While I do not think that has anything to do with the point of order, it has as much to do with it as the facts recited by the gentleman from Texas. The question is whether the Army has the power under the present law to acquire, either by purchase or by breeding, horses suitable for the Army, either Cavalry horses or the draft horses which are needed by the department.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman from Kentucky

yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. Mr. JONES of Texas. Is there any obligation on the part of the person who grows one of these horses to sell it to the

Mr. BARKLEY. Not under the present arrangement; no.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Then could it be regarded as raising horses for the Army?

Mr. BARKLEY. It is for the purpose of creating a type of horse that will enable the Army to obtain what it wants when it needs it. When the Bureau of Animal Industry had charge of it they had a contract with the owner of the colt that was produced, requiring him to sell it to the Government for $150. That worked an injustice both to the owner and to the Government. The Government was obligated to buy it when it was years old, whether it needed the colt or not, and to pay 50 for it. On the other hand, the owner was obligated to $150 for it. sell it whether he wanted to or not. He might have been able to obtain $200 or $300 for it.
Mr. JONES of Texas. Under this provision the Government has no claim on the colt and the owner does not have to sell it.

Mr. BARKLEY. No. It is the general proposition, authormerly they agreed to sell the progeny to the Government, but | ized under the law, of creating a type of horses that the Government will be able to purchase whenever it needs cavalry or other horses for the Army.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The fact that the Government has acted wisely in one instance and sent two horses down into my district where they raise pure-blood stock, both men and horses, does not have anything to do with this point of order.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not think that has anything to do with it, and I do not think the fact that they have sent a couple of horses down into another district where they only breed jackasses has anything to do with it either. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Did the gentleman ever know of the Government getting any horses as the result of this expenditure?

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, yes. Fifty thousand dollars of this appropriation is for the purpose of carrying out contracts previously made for the purchase of these horses.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. This paragraph provides, among other things, for the procuring of horses for animal transportation and mounts for the Army. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] makes a point of order against the language on page 37, beginning in line 1-

And $150,000 for encouragement of the breeding of riding horses suitable for the Army.

It is clear that the constitutional authority to raise armies and properly equip them would authorize the procuring of horses for the Cavalry and for other necessary horse transportation. seems to the Chair that the breeding of riding horses suitable for the Army might be a proper method for securing them. Horses have been purchased for the use of the Army from the beginning of the Government, and for a number of years considerable sums of money have been appropriated for the breeding of Army horses. The only question which has caused the Chair to hesitate arises from the use of the words "for encouragement It is not entirely clear just what this language means, and such information as the Chair has received during the discussion on the point of order has not entirely clarified the matter, because most of the debate went to the merits of the proposition rather than to the point of order. It is urged that in order to make it possible for the Government to procure by purchase suitable horses for military purposes it is necessary to encourage in the way provided in the bill or otherwise the breeding of the type of horse required. The question is not free from doubt in the mind of the present occupant of the chair, but resolving the doubt in favor of the Army in case the necessity should exist as claimed, it seems to the Chair that under the authority for raising and equipping the Army it ought to be proper for Congress to appropriate not only for the purchase of horses but also to acquire horses by breeding them, or to encourage the breeding of such horses as might not be otherwise available. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Jounson of South Dakota: Page 36, after the figures "1921," in line 15-

Mr. BARKLEY. We have passed that,

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It is to strike out the whole of the next paragraph. It is to strike out the paragraph commencing with line 16, on page 36, down to and including line 11, on page 38. We have not passed that yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Johnson of South Dakota: Page 36, line 16, strike out the paragraph beginning with line 16, page 36, down to and including line 11, on page 38.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The amendment which I desire to offer is a perfecting amendment to the text.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be in order before voting on the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota,

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. There is no amendment that can be offered to this paragraph that will prevent my moving to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has an amendment to perfect the text. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BARKLEY: Page 37, line 1, strike out "$150,000" and insert in lieu thereof $250,000."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to offer an amendment which involves an increase in the appropriation carried in this bill, but in this particular instance I think the increase is instified.

I desire to call attention to some facts connected with the purposes for which this appropriation is intended. As I suggested a while ago during the discussion on the point of order, in 1910 the Congress provided that the Bureau of Animal Industry in the Department of Agriculture might engage in the encouragement of the propagation of proper horses throughout the country that would be suitable for the Cavalry of the United States Under the arrangement that was made between the Bureau of Animal Industry and the owners in the carrying out of this project, primarily for the purpose of aiding the War Department in the acquirement of suitable Cavalry horses, they had a contract with the owner of every mare that the product was to be sold to the Government at the age of 3 years for $150. arrangement has now ceased, although there are some overlapping contracts provided for in the $50,000 appropriation. It was found that that arrangement was neither just to the Government nor to the owner, because it obligated the Government to purchase the horse at 3 years of age whether the Government needed it or not, and it obligated the owner to sell the horse for $150, although he might be able to sell to others for a larger So now the arrangement which is carried out by the remount service of the Army, which has taken this over under the present appropriation of $250,000 in the current appropriation bill, may distribute these horses around over the country.

There are now about 150 of these horses distributed in various States of the Union—I think every State outside of two or three has all the way from 3 up to 15 horses. They are not distributed to private individuals for the purpose of serving private interests, as the gentleman from Texas suggested a while ago but they are turned even to the serving private interests. while ago, but they are turned over to some one who is skilled in the breeding and propagation of horses. The farmer obtains the use of a stallion at the nominal price of something like $10. That money is turned into the Treasury and the man who operates the horse is compensated for looking after them by an amount practically equal to the $10. The War Department has reported that since the appropriation of $250,000 was made in the appropriation bill of 1921 there have been some 500 requests from all over the United States for horses for breeding purposes. They now have 150 stallions. More than 60 have been donated to the War Department by private citizens of the United States who are interested in the propagation of suitable Cavalry horses for the Army of the United States. These horses that have been given to the Army are worth on an average about $5,000 apiece, so that the private interests, private, enterprising citizens interested in the improvement of the breeding of horses in the United States, have donated to the Government more than $300,000 worth of these horses in order that they may express their desire and confidence in and for the improvement in the breeding of our horses.

So that there is a demand for three times as many horses as are in existence. If this appropriation is cut to $150,000, as proposed in the bill, it means that much of the work that has been already done will be destroyed. It has only started since last year, because the appropriation was only available in the bill for 1921, and the work has just begun. Now, if you reduce the amount just as the remount service begins its work, just as the breeding starts on its first year after the appropriation is made, you will practically cripple the department and destroy the work that has already been done.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does not the gentleman from Kentucky think that the expense should be borne by the Department of Agriculture because it is more important for the interests of the farmer than it is for the military arm of the Government?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not; Congress took it away from the Agricultural Department after it had been in the Agricultural Department for 10 years. Now, gentlemen may ask why it is necessary that the Government should spend $250,000 to improve the breed of horses in the United States. As a matter of fact there is not now in the United States, to any very large extent, a cavalry type of horse. I see that the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Greene] nods his head in assent.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Does the gentleman think that in any war that we have had of late years cavalry horses were necessary?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do. When the war began in Europe up to the time when both armies dug in, the Cavalry performed a very high service in both the allied and the German Armies. Had it not been for the fact that the armies on both sides dug in and engaged in trench warfare the Cavalry would have performed as high a function as in any war of the world.

Mr. WYANT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.
Mr. WYANT. In view of the fact that we are advocating economy, does the gentleman think that the addition of $100,000 to this appropriation for the purpose of increasing the amount for the Army, increasing the number and type of cavalry horses,

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I favor the increase or I would not have offered the amendment. The result of the appropriation can not be felt by the Army or the country at large for three years, because it takes that long for a horse to be bred to the age when he is serviceable either to the Cavalry or to the farm.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BARKLEY. Certainly.
Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman might have answered the query by suggesting that the supply of horses is not relatively necessary to the number of enlisted men in the Army. There is a certain overhead that is necessary to be taken care of. It is the type, the strain, and the stock that we are looking

Mr. BARKLEY. It is the creation of all of the necessary horse life from which the War Department may take their Cavalry horses.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Has the gentleman ever seen a Cavalry horse or expect to see one operate against a tank, barbed wire, machine gun, poison gas, or high explosive such as we had in the last war and will have in every future war?

Mr. BARKLEY. The horse, perhaps, does not operate directly against the tank or poison gas. As a matter of fact, if the gentleman will look into the history of the late Civil War, he will see that there was 1 horse for every 33 men, and in the last war there was 1 horse for every 4 men in the Army.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. And there were seven or eight saddles for every horse also, but that is no criterion for the number of saddles necessary.

Mr. BARKLEY. We are not engaged in improving the breed of saddles. This provision relates to horses.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman knows that the best students of military science, basing their opinion on the study and observation of the recent war, are still of the mind that cavalry will play an important part in future wars.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true. Gen. Allenby, of the British Army performed one of the greatest cavalry feats ever performed by any cavalry in the world's history.

Is it not true that Pershing's column went into Mexico in 1916 on horses and those horses were absolutely necessary for the Cavalry of the United States?

Mr. BARKLEY. Absolutely. And furthermore if there is ever a war of large dimensions in the United States, our coast line is so extensive and our territory so broad that trench warfare will be found to be impractical, and we will revert to the old type of war where Infantry and Cavalry will continue to function as they have in the past.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. BARKLEY. I ask for five minutes more.
Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I will have to object. We are making no progress.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wanted to refer to the experience of the British Army in undertaking to get cavalry horses in this

Mr. ANTHONY. I object, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent to extend my re-

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am against this amendment for a good many reasons. In the first place, the purchase of these horses by the Federal Government simply means the shifting of their ownership and use from private to Federal ownership but private That is all there is about it. There is not a single horse that is going to be put into activity under this bill that would not be in private activity under private control. That is the first proposition. Now, the second proposition is this: If we want to raise horses in this country we must make it possible for the man who grows the colt to get some money out of it. The psychology of the farmer is exactly like the psychology of anybody else. Now, the whole plan of this item with reference to horses is wrong. In the first place, we take the people's money and we buy a stallion that is already in use; we withdraw him from his present use and remove him from his present locality and send him down to some individual. We do not directly pay that individual what he gets for the use of that horse, but we do. He collects about $10 per season for each colt sired, and that money is covered into the Treasury; then we pay him for the feeding and keeping of the horse an amount equal to what he collects for the service of the horse. That comes out of public funds. No wonder they have 500 applications for these horses. The keeper gets his service for nothing and something besides. When we come to purchase horses under this item, instead of buying the horses from the people who raise them, under the provisions of this bill they are to be bought from contractors. When the Federal Government wants some horses for use it advertises for bids, and one or more of these professional contractors respond. Then the contractor farms out his bid to a lot of subcontractors, who must have profits also; and on a horse that the Federal Government pays $175, for instance, the man who has put up the feed and the time to raise the horse will be lucky if he gets $100 for it. There is the vice of this whole system. The Government does a whole lot of things it ought not to do and fails to do the thing it ought to do, namely, to give the best price which the Government can pay to the individual who raises the colt. I was raised on a stock farm in middle Tennessee, and we had as fine saddle horses there as anywhere on earth, and we did not have to have the Federal Government acting as guardian and donator of stallions. They raised their own stallions, and just as long as the colt was worth the breeding and the care there was no dearth of horses in that country.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Briefly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the gentleman know that during the recent war when our Government and the British Government sought to obtain cavalry horses in the United States they both reported that there was no such kind of horses here, and that the only thing was to try and get a substitute

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I can not yield further, but let me ask the gentleman this question: Is there a single horse that will be purchased under the $100,000 increase of appropriations, if granted, that will not be in service this year? retire to the shades of private life because the Federal Government does not own them?

Mr. BARKLEY. Not at all.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. What are you going to take the people's money to buy these herses for? Now, you can not give them to each of the 500 applicants, and you are going to play favorites with the people's money; that is the proposition here in this bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Army remount service, of course, exercises its discretion in determining the communities in which these horses are to be located.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; it takes a horse out of use in a community and makes the people pay for it and ships it off somewhere else and gives its services free. The Government will pay for its feed, pay for its shipping back to the Army post in order to use him. You have to take this horse off the farm where it is loaned and take him away back to the station and put a second lieutenant riding him around and in the next eight months ship him out again, and it is absolutely foolish. I am in favor of the Government doing all it ought to do, but the Government has no business taking the people's money and putting it in an activity where the private citizen can properly function. Tell me that the private citizenship of this country can not raise good horses without the control of the Government-it is absurd.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not know about a suggestion. Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Then I will put it in the form

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate be now closed-

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have an amendment which is before the committee.

Mr. ANTHONY. On the pending amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have an amend-

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is closed only on this amendment. Mr. JONES of Texas. I am afraid if his amendment is voted up, mine will not be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can offer his amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I would like to have it pending, Mr.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Jones of Texas: Page 36, line 18, strike out the paragraph and insert:

"For the purchase of horses of ages, sex, and size as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, $50,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for polo ponies: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, accept donations of animals for breeding and donations of money or other property to be used as prizes or awards at agricultural fairs, horse shows, or similar exhibitions, in order to encourage the breeding of riding horses suitable for Army puposes."

The CHAIDMAN The question is on the amendment of the

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not a substitute for my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not offered as such.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I have an

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, my amendment will necessarily be voted on before the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Johnson].

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones].

The amendment was again read.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this, it seems to me, would protect all the Government might get by way of donations from anyone who might want to donate an animal such as has been under discussion here, for the use of the Army. At the same time the appropriation is sufficient to handle the proper distribution of the same and to take care of those now on hand. In so far as making an appropriation for the Army to go into the horse business, I think it is about as absurd a proposition as I ever heard of. If the Government is going into the horse business, which I think would be an unwise thing to do, it should either put it in the Bureau of Animal Industry or in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Those of you who followed the Army bill two and three years ago know that the Army came in here just after the war was over, when they had more than 200,000 horses, and asked for and received an appropriation of $3,000,000 to buy more horses. They gave as an excuse that they needed a certain type of horses, and said they probably would not need all the $3,000,000, but that what was not needed would be re-covered into the Treasury. But at the end of the year they had spent that $3,000,000, and in the meantime had sold 162,000 horses that cost them an average of $200 apiece for an average of $90 apiece. That is great business. Do you want to turn a business matter over to the Army when they handled that matter in such a way? They have never made a success financially of any proposition, and they are not to be blamed, for that is not their line of business. If you are going to raise horses, do you want to turn them over to an Army man or over to people who engage in the horse business as a private business?

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the gentleman know that these horses are put in the care of experienced horse raisers and breeders throughout the country, who look after them during the breeding season?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I certainly know that. They are put in the hands of individual people who do not have to sell a horse to the Army unless it a horse that is not wanted. The same man who is allowed this animal can breed 30 or 40 mares and keep all the horses he cares anything about and not sell any of them to the Government. Besides, the man engaged in the business of growing horses does not have a selection. The Army man goes off to some place else and takes a gift horse, which may or may not be worth much, or he purchases a horse and sends it down and the man uses it for his own use and benefit. The man who uses it may have no choice in the selection.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does not the gentleman from Texas understand, if this law is carried on, that at any time these stallion managers can come in and probably get commissions and the right of retirement for rendering a great service to the Military Establishment, and that they could not do that over at the Department of Agriculture? Mr. JONES of Texas. They might do that, but the trouble is this, that the Bureau of Animal Industry tried this proposition out and found that it was not a good business proposition. The only concern that can make any good business out of giving stallions away is an organization that does not know anything about business except the spending side. The Bureau of Animal Industry tried out the same proposition, except they had a contract by which the owner was forced to sell any of these animals that were grown as a result of the work of the stallion. Here you are going to turn a man loose without even a contract by which the Government can obtain these horses. This amendment reserves the gift appropriation, and if anybody wants to give an animal it will be something new under the sun.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr.

Johnson] has a preferential amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is it not necessary to dispose of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones] before that?

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, the gentleman from South Dakota has a preferential amendment to perfect the text, which ought to be acted upon first.

Mr. ANTHONY. I thought he wanted to strike out the entire

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say to the chairman of the committee that I have changed my amendment so as to make it preferential to the other motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Johnson of South Dakota: Page 36, line 15, after the figures "1921," strike out the paragraph down to and including the word "place" in line 24, page 37.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will say that if this amendment of mine happens to fail in the committee I shall heartily favor the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones], because it will accomplish part of the work that I think ought to be done. I have come to the conclusion that it is almost time the War Department and some of the Members of this House ought to be trying to cut down expenses, instead of continually adding to them. [Applause.] We had at the time of the armistice about 350,000 to 360,000 horses, which were purchased at an exorbitant price, and a great majority of them were practically given away.

Now, the War Department comes in and wants two or three hundred thousand dollars more, so that they may purchase stallions to give to certain preferred individuals in the United States for their own use. Why, we might as well have an appropriation brought in here to purchase jacks, so that we can improve the race of mules for Artillery purposes, or to purchase bulls, in order to improve the race of cattle so that we might get good milk for the Army. You might as well appropriate to buy Packard cars to improve Fords to haul the artillery. The whole thing is absurd. The fact that the chairman of the committee is compelled to have this kind of a provision, "That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for polo ponies except for West Point Military Academy, and such ponies shall not be used at any other place," is indicative of the way the War Department has used appropriations of this kind and of the way it would use them if it had the slightest opportunity. It is time, I say, that we retrench and commence to try to recover money back from the individuals who have robbed this Government during the war rather than spend more money at this time.

For instance, the War Department-and I presume that must mean the Secretary of War and the General Staff-have asked the chairman of this committee, a gentleman who believes in economy and lives up to his promises, for this appropriation of a few hundred thousand dollars, while at the same time, on April 6. the Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Daugherty, filed with the Secretary of War a request in writing, signed by two of his assistants, W. H. Herron, brother-in-law of President Taft, and E. B. Brewer, asking that the men who are responsible for the theft from the Government of millions of dollars in the purchase and sale of leather be indicted and prosecuted, asserting that the contract ought to be canceled at once, and that the men responsible should be tried and convicted; yet the Secretary of War has made no recommendation as to that particular kind of a case and has failed to prosecute. merely to show, as the records show, that the Secretary of War and the War Department, not only in the last administration but also in this administration, are apparently more intent on spending money than in trying to recover money back of which the Government was unlawfully deprived. [Applause.]
Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones].

I do not think there is any Member of this House more in favor of economy than I am. But the purpose of the expenditure of this $150,000 is misunderstood, I fear, by some of the Members of the House. The purpose of it is to have a higher standard of horses established throughout the country when war comes, if it does; a standard that is suitable for cavalry

Now, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Sumners] says it will not produce any more horses. Why will it not? The purpose of the War Department in furnishing these thoroughbred stallions to the various stockraisers throughout the country, placing the season of that stallion at only $10, will of itself induce owners of standard-bred mares, if you please, to take advantage of that cheap season and breed their mares to these thoroughbred stallions, and thus improve the breed of horses suitable for Army purposes, for if they bred their mares to the same breed of stallion owned by an individual it would cost at least $100 per mare. If you breed a thoroughbred stallion to what you might call a standard-bred or a cold-blooded marethat is, the dam that has the size and the sire that has the breeding—you obtain in that "get" a horse not only of size but also of stamina. It gets the stamina by reason of the thoroughbred sire, and you must not overlook the fact that with automobiles taking the place of horses throughout this country horses are fast disappearing from the farms. Of course, when a war comes, if you are satisfied with getting some of those rat-tail Montana mares for Army horses—they are about the only thing that is abundant now in horseflesh—this amendment ought to be defeated.

I have seen this experiment work when it was under the Bureau of Animal Industry in the Department of Agriculture. I saw one of these stallions in my district. There was not one thing that the Government ever did more to encourage the breeding of standard-bred good horses than that. The War Department does not send this stallion down to some influential fellow for his individual private use. It is for the use of the community in which this man lives, an experienced man, in order that he may sort, if you please, the mares that go to that stallion, so that the progeny may be of sufficient size, and the fact that the sire is of sufficient stamina makes the best yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Is it not true that the man who keeps the stallion gets it free?

horse in the world.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Oh, perhaps he does, but he has only on the average two mares, while, as a matter of fact, a stallion can serve 50 or 60 mares in a season.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky

has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I trust the committee will allow the language of the provision to stand as it is in the bill. In the first place, it is necessary that we appropriate $50.000 to buy the colts which the Government is obligated to take on contracts now in force. We will have to pay for them some time, and we might as well pay for them this year. In the next place, the $150,000 for the breeding of riding horses will not cost us one cent. At present the Army has 107 of these Under the present system the man who takes the stallion is allowed to charge a fee of $10 a season. That money is paid over to the Army officer and goes directly into the Treasury of the United States. Then at the end of the season the Army reimburses the man who has had the custody of this stallion, and pays him back $10 for each mare that has been served. Consequently the Government is out no money for all of this work and labor for the encouragement and breeding of horses.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; I yield. Mr. McKENZIE. Does the gentleman know what salary is paid to the managers of these horses?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know exactly.
Mr. McKENZIE. Undoubtedly they get a thousand dollars a

Mr. ANTHONY. But the statement is made that the income almost balances the outlay.

Mr. McKENZIE. If they get a thousand dollars a year, each stallion would have to serve 100 mares in order to pay the salary of the man. I think the gentleman is mistaken about his proposition.

Mr. ANTHONY. No; I am not mistaken. Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will t

Will the gentleman from Kansas yield for another question?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Does not the gentleman think the War Department has a lot of nerve to come up here and ask an appropriation for these stallions without giving the chairman of the committee the necessary information about them?

Mr. ANTHONY. We have had all that information, and I just stated to the House that the $150,000 for the expenditure for this purpose goes back into the Treasury at the end of the year. If this language remains in the bill it will allow the 107 stallions that the Army now has to go out into service in the country and improve the standards of horses. We have refused the $100,000 additional that the Army asked and that the horse breeders of the country asked.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Is it not a fact that this is the only way the Government can encourage the production of horses such as have been discussed here to-day, and is it not a fact that England, France, and other countries have proven that this is a meritorious method of producing horses of the character which is demanded for the use of the Army?

Mr. ANTHONY. What the gentleman says is true, and in the way in which it is being carried on by the Army it does not cost us a cent to do it.

Mr. BARKLEY. In addition to the use of these horses for breeding purposes, is it not true that for about eight months in the year they are back at the remount stations and Army camps and are there used in place of other horses that would have to be purchased for the use of the camps?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; they are given practical use.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. How much money is used to pay for the transportation of these horses?

Mr. ANTHONY. Undoubtedly it costs some money. Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment be now closed.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman allow me five minutes to answer some statements which have been made here?

Mr. ANTHONY. Then, at the end of five minutes I ask that all debate close on the pending amendment and amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that at the end of five minutes debate close on the pending amendment and amendments thereto. objection?

Mr. BARKLEY. Reserving the right to object, will not the gentleman add five minutes to that?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think we have had enough debate on this. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. By way of a substitute, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I had a talk with the major in the Quartermaster's Department who inaugurated this system, who started this business of the Government going into the horse industry. He told me that the main reason for it was that the horse breeders throughout the country were not able to import the horses that were needed and were not able to buy the kind of stallions that would produce the progeny the Government needed. Then I had him give me a list of the number he had sent into Texas-11 of them-and I asked him how many of those 11 had the Government imported, and not a single one had the Government imported, but everyone of those 11 horses had either been donated by some horse fancier or had been purchased by the Government in the State of Kansas or some other place—purchased from men who had bought them for breeding

Now, when this question was up here a year or so ago, my colleague [Mr. Jones of Texas] and my colleague [Mr. Hubs-PETH] and myself attacked this provision as a waste and an extravagance on the part of the Government; and much to my surprise, shortly after that attack was made we found that this department sent a fine horse down into my district to appease me and sent two fine horses down into the district of my colleague [Mr. HUDSPETH] to appease him and sent two fine horses down into the district of my colleague [Mr. Jones of Texas] to appease him; one of which that cost this Government $1,000, he sent up to the little place Paloduro, which is so small that even my colleague [Mr. Jones of Texas] has never yet been there, a little place up in the extreme northwest Panhandle of Texas. He sent two horses to the same man out there in that The man needs them in his business, as they save him buying two horses that he otherwise would likely have bought with his own money. I am against the Government going into this private business. If it was of any substantial value to the Government, I might be in favor of it, but when the Government says that private business will not import horses the Government is making a mistake, because everyone of these horses that was sent to Texas, if imported at all, had been imported by private individuals. I want to say that the distinguished horse breeder who died at Dallas, Tex., a few years ago, Col. Henry Exall, brought more fine horses into this country and produced more fine horses from his Electrite and Zola stallions than the War Department now owns or ever will own. He brought more fine horseflesh into the South than all this War Department will ever bring there. I say this is unnecessary. If we are going to get back to economy we can save this $150,000 right here on this item, and we will still have plenty of fine horses. This country will have plenty of fine horses whether the War Department raises them or not. If you are going to economize, you might as well begin here.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from South

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The question is next on the amendment of The CHAIRMAN. The question is next on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones] to strike out and insert. Mr. JONES of Texas. May we have that amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again read, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Jones of Texas: Page 36, line 18, strike out the paragraph and insert:

"For the purchase of horses of ages, sex, and size as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, $50,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for pole ponies: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, accept donations of animals for breeding and donations of money or other property to be used as prizes or awards at agricultural fairs, horse shows, and similar exhibitions, in order to encourage the breeding of riding horses suitable for Army purposes."

ment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Jones of Texas) there were-ayes 22, noes 35.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 42, at the end of line 4, add:
"The sum of $10,000 for the erection of a natatorium adjoining the Government base hospital at Fort Bliss, Tex., now in course of construction. The said natatorium to be a part of said plant."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment. I will reserve it. the amendment.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state that this appropriation is for the erection of a natatorium, or swimming pool, at the base hospital at Fort Bliss, near This hospital is now in the course of erection. It will be completed or supposed to be completed on the 15th day of this month. This appropriation that I am asking for is for the continuation of this building. As I understand it, under the rule of the House, in a ruling by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] at the last session to an amendment offered by my colleague from Texas [Mr. Bee] for the purchase of additional land at and adjoining the military post of Leon Spring, near San Antonio, it was held in order because it was a continuation of that work. Now, Mr. Chairman, this appropriation that I am asking for is a continuation of the base hospital at Fort Bliss for a natatorium and amounts to $10,000.

I want to say that I am in favor of economy and have been voting with the committee all of the time. This is a hospital for these unfortunate sick persons. You say you want to take care of the ex-service men and tubercular soldiers. understand from Gen. Brooks that 150 beds of this hospital can in all probability be given over to the Government for taking care of ex-service men.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think that a natatorium is any part of the needed or necessary facilities for taking care of tuberculous service men?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Absolutely; and if the gentleman was cognizant of the facts at this hospital, he would agree with me that a natatorium or swimming pool is necessary for sick soldiers that will be placed in the hospital. I want to say that this amendment is recommended by the Quartermaster General, They have no funds for this natatorium.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It strikes me that a natatorium at a tuberculous sanatorium is rather an unusual thing. Has it been suggested by any medical society?

Mr. HUDSPETH. It has been suggested both by the Quartermaster General and the Surgeon General, who stated to me that it was urgently needed for sick soldiers—not tuberculous. I want to say to the gentleman that this is not a tubercular hospital, but Col. Jones, who has been at the head of the War Risk Bureau, said that he was informed by Gen. Brooks that probably they would let them have 150 beds out of the 600 for tubercular soldiers in that high climate. The hospital is a base hospital for taking care of the sick soldiers up and down the border.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It strikes me that it would be dangerous to have a public swimming pool where tuberculous patients could go into it.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I understand from the medical authorities that there is no trouble about that, that they have a treatment whereby the danger heretofore existing will be remedied.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman state whether there is a natatorium at Walter Reed Hospital?

I do not know, but I will state that this Mr. HUDSPETH. is recommended by the Surgeon General and by the Quartermaster General.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I was thinking that this Walter Reed Hospital out here is so near the Capital and under the supervision of the Surgeon General that they would, in all probability, have everything of that kind that was required, and I did not know that there was a natatorium there.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I do not know myself, but I know that this is recommended by the Surgeon General of the Army. Now. out at this base hospital they have no running stream or natural bathing facilities, and it is needed, as I have been place besides tubercular cases?

Mr. HUDSPETH. The tubercular proposition has been injected into the matter just recently. It is a base hospital and was originally located to take care of the sick soldiers up and down the border for 300 miles, not tubercular soldiers.

It is for all classes of patients.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas makes the point of order. Will the gentleman from Texas inform the Chair whether this work is partially completed?

Mr. HUDSPETH. The work is almost completed on the base hospital. They have no funds for a natatorium.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I will call the Chair's attention to the fact that the amendment is offered under the item for hospital stewards. The amendment would change absolutely the purpose for which the appropriation is made. Mr. HUDSPETH. It is an original appropriation.

Mr. ANTHONY. But not germane to the appropriation for hospital stewards.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

VOCATIONAL TRAINING.

For the employment of the necessary civilian instructors in the most important trades, and for the payment of their traveling expenses, as authorized under existing law; for the purchase of carpenter's, machinist's, mason's, electrician's, and such other tools and equipment as may be required, including machines used in connection with the trades; for the purchase of materials, live stock (including fowls), and other supplies necessary for instruction and training purposes, and the construction, repair, or alteration of such buildings needed for vocational training in agriculture; for shops, storage, and shelter of machinery as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of section 27 of the act approved June 3, 1916, authorizing, in addition to the military training of soldiers while in the active service, means for securing an opportunity to study and receive instruction upon educational lines of such character as to increase their military efficiency and enable them to return to civil life better equipped for industrial, commercial, and general business occupations, part of this instruction to consist of vocational education either in agriculture or the mechanic arts, $1,200,

000: Provided, That whenever possible officers, warrant officers, non-commissioned officers, or other enlisted men shall be detailed as instructors: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for salaries of civilian instructors other than in technical branches: And provided further, That not more than $100,000 shall be expended for salaries and no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $3,000 per annum: And provided further, That farm products and the increase in live stock (including fowls) which accrue as incidental to vocational training in agriculture and animal husbandry shall be sold under such regulations as the deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 44, line 8, strike out "$100,000" and insert "$500,000," and after the word "salaries" strike out the words "and no person" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "not more than 10 persons," so that as amended the same shall read as follows:

"That not more than $500,000 shall be expended for salaries and not more than 10 persons shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $3,640."

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this provision is in conformity with section 27 of the national defense act of 1916, as amended June 5, 1920, and that provides this language:

That in addition to the military training soldiers while in the active service shall hereafter be given an opportunity to study and receive instructions upon vocational lines of such character as to increase their military efficiency and to enable them to return to civil life better equipped for industrial, commercial, and general business occupations.

I do not believe there is a man in this committee who does not believe that the provision of the national defense act is wise, that while we are training men they may be not only soldiers during their term of enlistment, they also may be trained to be better citizens, so that when they shall have served the periods of their enlistment of from one to three years they will go back to civil life better qualified to carry on the duties of a citizen in the Republic. My amendment, gentlemen, does not increase the proposed appropriation by one single, solitary cent, but simply proposes a different division and distribution of the fund. To this effect, that instead of $1,100,000 being applicable to the purchase of materials, like machinery and other things, to be worked up in a vocational school, that $700,000 shall be available for that purpose, and instead of only $100,000 being available to pay salaries of civilian teachers $500,000 shall be available for that purpose. Now, the national defense act contem-plated that there should be civilian instructors, and, gentlemen, we might as well be frank about it. Army officers are not by their training nor by their habits of life good instructors in the ordinary branches of education. We will yield to them the palm in the matter of instruction in military discipline and in military efficiency, but when it comes to teaching young men the rudiments of education or the elements of a vocational education they are deficient. There were employed during the current year 625 civilian instructors. No one receives as much as $6,000. The highest paid teacher or civilian instructor is $5,700, and only 20 receive more than $3,000.

My proposition is to leave 10 men there-not 20, as they have now—but to leave 10 men who may get more than $3,000. For this reason, gentlemen: You can not get a vocational expert, you can not get a man with experience enough nor grasp enough to handle the organization of vocational work of 150,000 men of this great Army for any $3,000. You can get men in the office who will do the instruction, but you can not get men to sit at some central point like Washington and plan a great instruction organization, see that these instructors do their work, make reports, see that the curriculum prescribed by them is carried out; and I propose to limit this to 10 men who can get more than $3,000. Now, at the present time they are training officers. A good many civilians have gone in the Regular Establishment, and they are being trained under civilian instructors. They are also training junior officers to be

I never heard of this thing until about a week ago. body suggested it to me-not a single man brought it up. experience alone suggested to me that the limitation of this clause would prove unwise. I find this record, gentlemen, that to-day the 20 men who are receiving more than $3,000 have organized the work, have trained these junior officers, and they are prepared to hand the work over gradually to the Regular Establishment; but if we cut it down by a single blow there will not be a single man left who can organize and plan the work for the entire Army, and the whole work of vocational training will be discredited and will be broken up, and the $100,000 will

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five additional

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Will the gentleman yield? Mr. PARRISH.

Mr. McSWAIN. I will. Mr. PARRISH. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the proviso in lines 5, 6, and 7 on page 44:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for salaries of civilian instructors other than in technical branches.

Does not the gentleman think that proviso would be a limitation that would defeat the purpose of his amendment if it remains in the bill?

Mr. McSWAIN. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the words "vocational training" imply necessarily a technical education. tional does not imply a literary education, it does not imply an education in geography nor in grammar. defense act contemplated vocational training alone, and I am basing my amendment upon the national defense act. We can not legislate anew. Now, I would like to rewrite in some respects the national defense act, and I expect my friend over there from Vermont [Mr. Greene] would; but we are here appropriating to carry out the national defense act.

Now, then, gentlemen, another thing: Under the present bill $1,100,000 is appropriated for material, and yet it is for vocational instruction, and I expect every member of this committee has heard it said a hundred times that the best university education any man ever got was Mark Hopkins on one end of a pine puncheon and a receptive and ambitious mind on the other. It is not the brick that makes the house; it is not the piles of books on the shelves that afford an education; it is the teacher. It is the man with zeal in his heart and with experience and training in his makeup that enables him to approach the minds of these boys. So many of them come into the service without the proper educational opportunities. explains the fact that there are so many in the service to-day, my friends, of boys who have not the educational equipment, vocational or otherwise, by which they can compete in the struggle for existence out in the world, and they come into the Army to take the $30 a month and have the Government furnish them shelter and board. And so these boys during that period of their lives from 18 to 21, and on up, are given an opportunity here to have civilian instructors, who go about it not with the severity and harshness of military discipline but to go about it, as I know they do now, with a sort of fraternal spirit and put their hands on the shoulders of the boy who is fresh from a country home, as a rule, and say, "Look here, my boy, do you not want to come down to our vocational school?" The officer can not do that, and we do not expect him to do it, but these men with zeal in their hearts can do it.

I want to say to you that since I have investigated this matter I have found that the head of this work being conducted in the War Department, the director in charge, is Dr. C. R. Mann, a relative of Horace Mann, of Massachusetts, a pioneer of education in this Republic, and he is giving his service to this Nation without one cent of compensation from the taxpayers. He is being paid by private beneficence that is not costing the Government a single cent.

I think we ought to leave 10 men in this establishment who can receive more than $3,000 and keep the work organized at the head. We ought have, instead of 625 civilian instructors that we have now, 250, because, as the chairman of the subcommittee will bear me out, each individual instructor costs about $2,000. And I say that that would be letting it down slowly enough. Let down this matter of civilian instructors in the Military Establishment slowly. And when we shall have done that we will keep our contract with the boys who came into the service under the pledge of this section 27 of the national defense act, that they would receive vocational educa-tion under civilian instructors. That is the pledge of this Government to these boys, and we should keep it. [Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, if it were the primary purpose of the Military Establishment toward the young men who deign to enlist-for it has gotten to be about that nowto give all the benefit of experience in expert vocational training, or what is almost the equivalent, perhaps, of a university course in the arts, then the speech made by my distinguished friend from South Carolina [Mr. McSwain] would find an echo in the hearts of a good many men who, like myself, just at present are not convinced by it.

But, as a matter of fact, if one will take pains to inquire into the history of this paragraph that was slipped into the national defense act of June 4, 1916, one will find that at no time in the arguments that were advanced for it in the committee or any where else was there any idea whatever that the thing would ever grow to the proportions that it has assumed since that day. Like many other little adventures that are suggested by people of enlightened imagination, and always with good intentions, it was the hope that some of the idle hours, or hours ordinarily devoted to recreation in a military post, perhaps, might be well employed by teaching such of the young men there as were disposed to go to the classes some of the useful arts, trades, and vocations that were particularly useful to the Army itself, incidentally benefiting the men themselves as a natural consequence. That was the nest egg of the thing.

Then, of course, like every other little proposition of that kind in government, it grew by what it fed upon, as they all do. They all start small, they all start modestly, they all start with the promise of "Cross my heart, hope to die, never shall we ask for anything more." And then pretty soon they begin to show you they have learned so well that they ought to be entitled to a little more appropriation to extend themselves a little farther.

So what has happened to-day is this, and it is little exaggeration, gentlemen: It is almost a question in the Army to-day of whether it is organized for the purpose of national defense or is a kindergarten, and it is pretty well-nigh a question in the Army to-day as to whether an officer, who is supposed to train men, is in command of the soldiers or whether the schoolmaster is running it.

And what we are doing here is the same old story and the same old experience over and over. Little by little this philanthropic, Utopian dream has gotten the better of the hard, practical situation, and we are undertaking to coddle young men with the belief that they can be good soldiers in the ranks by signing up to go to the schoolmaster of an afternoon and pretending to do a little typewriting. Every one of these civilians we take in there-honest gentlemen, unquestionably, and of the high purpose and ideals that schoolmasters usually have, but as schoolmasters frequently demonstrate, not keeping more than one foot on the ground at a time-little by little have begun to insinuate a huge, diversified system of advanced instruction into their curriculum; so that many military men are beside themselves in some places as to whether or not we are going to turn out of that mess, at some time or other, real, red-headed, fighting men, such as armies are supposed to have.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman see that I get an extension of time?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I will ask for it. Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Well, go ahead.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The advertisements that the Army puts out all over the country urging young men to enlist in the Army do accentuate and emphasize the fact that the boys are to get this training, and those advertisements are put out by the Army

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Exactly; I understand that.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. So that the Army officers have no right to get beside themselves, because this is the natural result of the Army propaganda.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes. Mr. DEMPSEY. That is entirely under the statute that the gentleman is condemning at the present time?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes. Mr. HUMPHREYS. It is in the Army?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

I am simply pointing out to you how a little, simple statute, that started with the most innocent-seeming intention in the world, has outgrown the nest that it was planted in and is now almost threatening to overshadow the military activities of the Military Establishment. And no matter what some theorist may tell you, it is seriously interfering with the morale and with the discipline and the general purpose of military

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question? I will certainly cooperate in getting him an extension of time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Vermont

has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. ANTHONY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in 10 minutes. Is there objec-

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. In the first place, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, if you were taken individually where you confessed things to yourselves, you and I know, and everyone of us would agree, that the purpose of giving a grammar-school education, or anything like it or beyond it, does not appertain to anything belonging to the constitutional functions of the Federal Government. We know it, and we know that our fathers would never have thought of such a thing.

Mr. MADDEN. Particularly through the Army.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Certainly. We know that that is the function of the States, and we know that by this means and otherwise we are gradually usurping the functions of the States and planting them down here in the bureaus of Washington. [Applause.] Some of us talk against it and pretend we are not doing it, but everything of this kind that comes up shows that we do do it.

Here is another suggestion: All throughout last week gentle-men got up on this floor, good-intentioned, patriotic, and highminded colleagues of mine-and I am not making personal allusions, and do not intend to-denounced the Army and the awful extravagance inseparable from militarism. For the last several years, whenever I got the floor, I have made a practice of trying to point out, as other gentlemen have done, the mistake that is being made in this respect. I have tried to make a study of this thing, and I find that the grand total cost of the Army, the expense of maintaining the Army, is swelled by just such things as my distinguished friend from South Carolina [Mr. McSwain] has advocated in his amendment.

The gentlemen divide the total expense of the Army by the number of soldiers in the Army and thus calculate that the per capita cost of the Army per soldier is such and such, whereas the legitimate cost of maintaining a capable army is not represented by the grand total of expense as we have it at all. Then gentlemen insist that the only way to obtain economy is to cut off the number of soldiers without looking to the numbers required for tactical formations or the plain, practical necessities of a training army. They would just slice off a few thousand soldiers at one end of the Army Establishment and let go unchallenged and unmolested at the other end all these extraneous and extravagant misplaced ideas of society that are harbored in the War Department. That is what you are do-[Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Can the gentleman give us any information as to the percentage of civilians in the Army in proportion to the percentage of real military people engaged in it?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not know what the percentages are, but I know that little by little, with these beautiful cambric-tea fashions that are now getting into vogue, this fluffy-duff, powder-puff conglomeration of fads and specialties, the red-headed, deep-chested, husky fighting man will be routed out of the Army

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. In a moment. organized for the purpose of training and fighting, not for the purpose of going to school. If the States and society do not give education to the youth of the land as they should, where it belongs, let us transfer the remedy to afflicted patients in places where the disease has been contracted and not make a great national educational hospital out of the Military Establishment. [Laughter.]

The Army has not been organized for the purpose of taking away the educational functions that belong to the States.

When you hear gentlemen exploiting their ideas of economy about the Army-many of which even a swaggering, swashbuckling militarist such as I am charged with being must approve-it is well to think that one can not stand up here and propose to cut off 2,000 or 20,000 men from the Army and say that is true economy, when all the while you can reach inside the organization of the establishment and pluck out some of these unnecessary and fanciful activities which are confused by some with what is called "militarism," but which are not militarism but just pure piffle. [Applause.] No reasonable man stands but just pure piffle. [Applause.] No reasonable man stands against the use of the spelling book and all the rest of it where they belong, and I know that you and I believe in the spelling book when it is in its place. But when war is on and a national defense proposition is up we do not run to the school-

You gentlemen may remember that in the war this same dilettante idea was originated of making a kind of a soldier who would not kill anybody. It was then called the Students' Army Training Corps. Well, in the midst of it I remember how, in discussing the Students' Army Training Corps, our old friend Abe Martin sent broadcast throughout the land this statement: "Lemmie Peters has been ketched in the draft, and will take rhetoric and botany." [Laughter.]

That is just exactly what we are breeding now.

Perhaps my language may seem to be a little bit extravagant. and I do not mean to characterize this business unfairly. But I still entertain the old-fashioned idea that the Army was organized principally to kill somebody, if awful necessity demanded, or to keep itself from being killed. And I still think that when we begin to cross these activities of Government, and more particularly-and this is the solemn side of it, neighbors-when we come in through one pretense or another trying to deceive ourselves at the time, taking out the activities in the States and putting them down here somewhere in this city, or else taking away the functions that the home governments ought to exercise for themselves and tucking them away here in a bureau in Washington, letting this Federal Government do for society what society ought to do for itself back home where it lives, then the dream of the founders of our Government that the Government should come from the people up is gone.

We are every day or so in this council Chamber picking up our Government or plucking it up by the roots to see if it has grown any yet. [Laughter.] By and by there will be no government growing back home, because everything has been moved down here, either at this end of the Avenue or at the

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman does not think we can improve the Army by the methods of the ouija board?
Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Vermont

has again expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee one question. How much is carried in this item as compared with what was carried in the bill that passed before?

Mr. ANTHONY. There was $1,500,000 appropriated for that purpose in the last bill. The department asked for $5,000,000. Mr. WALSH. Well, there is a reduction in the item below what the department asks.

Mr. ANTHONY. That was done on the recommendation of the Secretary of War, who felt he could still further reduce the $1,500,000 that we agreed on in conference to the amount carried in this bill, $1,200,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to know that there has been a reduction in this item. I have expressed myself rather vigorously on this matter when it has been up before, in opposition to our continuing this particular activity. informed by some of the boys who are the presumed beneficiaries of this training that it is called educational and recreational, and in the ranks they term it E. and R.—eat and rest. They are taught how to be tinkers and harness makers and typewriters and artists and various other activities under the guise of military training.

I think the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] on a previous occasion pointed out that in one or two of the camps the boys were particularly informed that their military instruction and duties would not in any way interfere with their educational work; that the officers would see to it that their educational and recreational work during the afternoon would not be at all interfered with. Now, when I have heard of the horrible condition in which some of these young men are, I have almost wondered how they ever managed to render such valiant service during the late war, and it is interesting to note the acclaim and the propaganda in behalf of these worthy civilian instructors, some of whom probably are on a par with the civilian instructors who undertook the administration of the activities of the Vocational Rehabilitation Bureau. Some of those broken-down antiquated instructors who were in need of some rehabilitation themselves are some of the men who are very much interested in this particular work; and I have no doubt that they would be glad if the salaries were increased and perhaps the number made fewer. But it seems to me that if we are to return to a normal basis in the Army, to prepare for another conflict, the first thing we ought to do is to get an Army together that will be prepared to wage war, and not encourage these men who get into the Army not to reenlist by fitting them to take up the work of some other activity, such as electrician or harness maker or something like that. If you fit them for that work, you can not expect them to reenlist in !

the Army and to help make up the rank of the Army and to become proficient and expert along military lines. I am very glad to receive the information from the chairman of the subcommittee that the appropriation has been reduced below the estimates. I wish they had made a greater reduction. I hope that the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSwain].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. Stafford having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Tilson, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the Army appropriation bill, H. R. 5010, had come to no resolution thereon.

REQUEST TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on post-office matters

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, what is the subject of the remarks which the gentleman desires to extend?

Mr. THOMPSON. It is a discussion of the question of presidential postmasters.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman propose in his extension of remarks to inform the House what the policy of the Post Office Department is going to be on that subject?

Mr. THOMPSON. The gentleman proposes to discuss it from his own standpoint and his own information.

Mr. WINGO. Unless the gentleman can give us a statement of the judgment of the department as to what it is going to do, I fear it might cause friction in the gentleman's party and cause discussion, and I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio objects.

Mr. THOMPSON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask for time to address the House to-morrow morning on this subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to address the House to-morrow after the reading of the Journal. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman should state what length of time he requests.

Mr. THOMPSON. About 20 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I shall have to object.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming objects.

PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in connection with my remarks of April 29 a copy of the resolution which I was then discussing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Maryland will be granted.

EMERGENCY TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2435) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, and to provide revenue; to regulate commerce with foreign countries; to prevent the dumping of foreign merchandise on the markets of the United States; to regulate the value of foreign money; and for other purposes.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, understanding that under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senate will vote to-morrow on the pending so-called emergency tariff bill, I wish to take this opportunity to make a very few observations concerning the bill and its supposed effect on the economic condition of the country. When a similar bill was before the Senate in the last Congress I voted against the measure and endeavored to make clear at that time on the floor of the Senate my reasons for that vote. I propose to vote for the pending measure, but I must say very frankly that I shall not do so with any great amount of enthusiasm, as I do not feel that the measure will be of the benefit that its sponsors hope it will be; neither do I believe that it is a proper method through which to approach a solution of the pending economic difficulties.

I shall vote for the measure because, as I say, it has been improved since I voted against it in the last Congress. One of the improvements, I might say in passing, is the fact that it will be in effect only 6 months, whereas the original measure provided for 10 months. In this case the proverpial inch is far better than the ell. More important, however, in my judgment, is the new feature known as the antidumping provision, which provides in some measure for a policy that I believe this Congress or some Congress in the very near future will necessarily adopt, and that is the policy of more or less bargaining in considering tariff impositions of a more or less elastic nature. For, in view of the situation that America is facing with reference to world trade to-day, no copper-riveted tariff measure can be made beneficial to America, or practical or practicable. Above all, I hope I may not be confronted later with a tariff bill of the "Chinese wall" nature.

Again, in balancing advantages against possible disadvantages I feel constrained to vote for the bill because of the provision of some meed of protection to American chemical and dye manufacturing industries. I believe that, irrespective of the opposition which I have read or heard voiced on the floor of the Senate against it, to be along the original line of protection to infant industries which, as I understand it, was the inception of a protective policy as the approved policy of the United States. The dye and chemical industry is certainly an infant industry, born of the necessities of the war, and now entitled, by the very fact of its birth and existence, to nourishment that will sustain it and stimulate its growth. Especially is it entitled to a very large measure of protection in view of the source of it greatest competition.

Again, as I view it, there is even in legislation something psychological, as it were. We have talked so much to the farmers and to others supposed to be benefited, about the emergency tariff bill, and it has been exploited so much in the public press, editorially and otherwise, that I believe a failure to pass the bill at this time might have a moral effect which might be even more disastrous than the conditions we are now facing.

So, taking it all in all I believe that, unattractive as the bill is from many standpoints, it is wisdom and the best policy, balancing all these viewpoints, to have it enacted into law.

What is writ is writ; would it were worthin.

What is writ is writ; would it were worthier.

With that general explanation—

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator from New Jersey has been a very consistent advocate of policies that would obtain foreign trade, and the bill which bears his name I think is calculated to expand the foreign commerce of the United States. The Senator does not desire to take a back track, does he, and see measures enacted which would nullify his bill and interfere with the United States obtaining trade and commerce, to that extent increasing the prosperity of the American manufacturer and the American people?

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will permit me, I am going to reach that very thought, and I will take great pleasure, I would tell the distinguished Senator from Utah, in explaining my viewpoint as to where the measures conflict. Having briefly summarized the reasons why I think even one who is convinced that the future prosperity of this country depends absolutely on developing foreign trade as well as domestic trade may vote for the pending bill, I want to take the time of the Senate for a brief space in stating what I think will be real, effective measures to remedy the condition which we are all facing in this country to-day. I never believe in offering criticism without at the same time suggesting a constructive remedy.

I believe, as I have said, that because of the shortness of the period of operation of the pending bill; because of the psychological effect, perhaps, of it becoming a law; because of its antidumping feature, which for the first time introduces somewhat elastic or bargain tariff, to the principle of which I absolutely adhere, and because of other features, the benefits to be derived from it may overbalance the disadvantages. I think I have made that clear. For that reason, and for that reason alone, I am going to vote for the bill to-morrow.

But, Mr. President, I am convinced that there is just one way to solve the difficulties facing not only America but the entire world to-day. It is time for us to emerge from emergencies and to recognize that after two and a half years following the World War a period has arrived when we should consider the enactment of permanent legislation, permanent relief, to meet conditions which we must know by a calm investigation of the situation are existing in business and on the farms to-day; to meet that situation as it exists and not try artificially to build structures which we can not think for one moment will actually solve the difficulty, for they will not.

I believe absolutely in a protective tariff system. I do not have to discuss that, I am sure, at this time. I believe in it from the standpoint of representing the difference between a proper cost and a proper profit to the American people in the production of goods here in competition with other parts of the world. I do not, however, believe in it from the standpoint of raising prices to the height of an embargo that keeps our goods entirely within our own country, raises prices to ourselves, and does not, as a matter of real results, increase the market of the producer abroad. I repeat, it is time for us to emerge from emergencies and try to devise and pass permanent legislation. I shall try to follow that thought very briefly, because I do not believe in discussing difficulties and conditions without at least suggesting what one thinks may be a remedy

We need, in my judgment, two things in order to bring about permanent relief-confidence at home and the extension of credit abroad. I think we have to some extent contributed toward bringing about credit abroad by the passage of the act to which the Senator from Utah [Mr. King] referred a short time ago, which will enable us to sell goods abroad.

Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Missouri? Mr. EDGE. I yield.

How about markets abroad? Mr. REED.

When I speak of credit abroad it carries with Mr. EDGE. it, of course, markets. I appreciate the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, because that is the word. When I say we must develop confidence at home and extend credit abroad, there is just one thing that is more important, in my judgment, than the railroad question, than the merchant-marine question, and all the other questions—for they are incidental to it—and that is markets. If we have a market abroad and a market at home, we shall settle our railroad difficulty; we shall settle our merchant-marine difficulty; we shall have goods to transport, because, of course, with a market we must produce goods and these goods must be transported.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. How does the Senator from New Jersey expect to improve our foreign market by the passage of the pending bill?

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I have already discussed the merits of this particular bill. I am now discussing what I believe will be a possible means of improving the markets here, and if the Senator from Ohio will permit me-I am delighted to see that he is interested, and I know his broad view of these matters-I will reach that point as rapidly as possible.

Confidence at home and markets abroad; yes. automatically settle most of the economic ills of the country today. How are we going to secure confidence at home? I do not think it is difficult to get markets abroad; I think we are on the proper path to do it. Confidence at home, in my judgment, will not be secured in any great measure by the passage of the pending bill, may I say to the Senator from Ohio. It may be helped; I hope it will be; but confidence at home will be brought about to a great extent by a revision of the present revenue and tax system of this country, and, as I see it, in no other way. In other words, one may talk about it all he wishes, he may discuss it from an academic and every other standpoint, but we can not pass legislation that will compel the man who has money, enterprise, energy, and brains to go out and do things unless he is going to reap a reasonable return for his energy and for the chances which he takes. I say without any hesitation that we must get at the root of the evil rather than pick about the branches and cut off one dead twig at a We must get at the foundation of this trouble rather than to tinker with the superstructure somewhere. The foundation, the root of the trouble to-day, is just that one thing lack of confidence on the part of the men who have done things in this country in the past, and who, in my judgment, would do them again if they could see a reasonable opportunity to make a proper profit on their energy and on the risk assumed.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey if there is not another element that goes to the root of the question, and whether or not that is not the wage question?

Mr. EDGE. I consider the wage question a very important part, a most important part, but even the wage question to a creat extent, I maintain, is not the crux of the situation. Wages are gradually coming down, as we ascertain from the newspapers and from the reports that come to us. The economic value of each individual must undergo deflation just as the value of the commodity he helps to produce must shrink in the process of deflation. The process of deflation has been a very painful and a very long process, and we can not in a way wonder at that, because men are naturally unwilling to give up advantages which they obtained in abnormal times. Each wants all prices to come down except the price of the commodity which he has himself for sale, whether it be diamonds or shoe laces or the labor of his hands. I agree with the Senator from South Dakota that the wage question is mighty important, but still I say that it is above the root and the foundation of the real question, which is national confidence. So long as we maintain a taxing system embracing, for instance, the excessprofits tax and a surtax reaching up to a maximum of 70 per cent, just so long will we discourage the average man from using his energy, his enterprise, and his capital, thus employing labor and radiating happiness and contentment throughout the land.

I know the question is immediately thought of, if not asked, "Do you believe that men who make money or who otherwise enjoy large incomes should not pay their full proportion of the running expenses of the Government?" I believe they should pay their full proportion of the running expenses of the Government, but there are other and better methods of taxation by which to make them pay. There is no reason in the world, in my opinion-and present conditions certainly bear me out-for charging one man, for instance, a 70 per cent surtax and then feel that you are not charging the average man, the workingman, so called, any tax, because the workingman, so called, today is not employed, as the Senator from South Dakota has indicated. It is very much better, it seems to me, to have a smaller surtax, so that the man who employs may feel that he can make a reasonable profit and thus to assure employment for labor of all kinds, for labor will be very much happier, even if it has to bear a small taxation, when it has money with which to pay than not to be employed and not to have any incomes with which to buy anything, which apparently is the situation we are to some extent facing to-day. For what shall it profit a man to have his tax bill reduced to a nickel if he has neither money nor employment on which to be taxed or with which to pay his taxes? So, while not favoring any proposition to relieve the man of wealth, the man of large income, of any proper part of his burden in contributing toward the running expenses of the Government, I believe to-day that it is absolutely essential, if we are going to solve the railroad question, which au fond is a matter of not having freight to transport; if we are going to solve the merchant-marine difficulty, which is a matter of not having cargoes to take across the seas; if we are going to solve the unemployment question, which is a matter of not having employment because we have not the market-and we can not, of course, encourage production if there is not a market for the goods produced-I believe to-day that if we are going to solve these problems we must encourage the American business man, the American farmer, the American producer, the ranchman, the cattleman-I do not care what his particular activity is-and give him the assurance that there is going to be an opportunity for him to develop his business without handicap and without penalty for his enterprise. In that event he will pay his taxes in the shape of a larger corporation tax, if you want, or of some other type of tax, but not under that insidious form of taxation such as the excess-profits tax, which discourages men from using the opportunities presented to them and which leaves them in doubt as to the possibilities of any enterprise into which they may enter.

That, in my judgment, is a question that this Congress should take up promptly, because we will not see a very decided return to business activity until some incentive is afforded the men representing every part of the country who have contributed so much to the welfare of the Nation. I do not mean alone men living in New York City or in New York State; I mean the ranchmen in the West, the small manufacturers, the manufacturers of machinery in the Middle West and New England, and men engaged in various industries who develop small businesses from which in the old days gradually grew larger businesses to help make America strong and prosperous, in the days before the war. We have got to return to that condition. That is the war. We have got to return to that condition. what normalcy means, in my judgment.

It should be a question to be considered by all of us—the Members of the Congress and the President. It should be not my program, but our program. In that way, the White House and the Congress, working together, and the happy results radiating throughout the country, we will find that labor troubles, we will find that railroad troubles, we will find that merchant marine troubles will adjust themselves just so soon as industry starts again throughout this great country of ours.

Of our merchant marine, over 600 steel ships to-day are tied at the docks and anchored in mud creeks in various parts of the coast line of the United States for want of cargoes. all very well for us to go around the country and talk about the American flag on the seven seas and of our tremendous merchant marine, representing, as it does, something like $4,000,000,000 of the American taxpayers' money, and losing to-day, as I understand, approximately $1,000,000 a day in operation. It is a great asset to be able to talk from the public stump and wave the flag and wag the eagle's tail about the wonderful merchant marine, with the American taxpayer paying a tribute of $1,000,000 a day for the great and glorious privilege and pleasure of having a merchant marine. I believe in the merchant marine and I believe the merchant marine can be made workable and payable, but I want it as an American asset and not simply a subject of American speeches and American pride. American pride is very necessary and very proper, but the American people are burdened with a type of taxation which they can not stand, and we can not improve the condition of affairs in the face of such a situation. With one big governmental agency, such as the merchant marine, show-ing the balance sheet it shows to-day, how can the situation be improved?

I said originally that we must have confidence at home and credit abroad. Statistics show that to be really prosperous this country must export 15 to 20 per cent, and some economists say more than that, of its surplus products. In other words, that 15 to 20 per cent represents the real cream, the real profit of American industry, and makes for prosperity throughout the country. That 15 to 20 per cent, in other words, means the profit. We make a profit on the other 80 per cent; of course we do, but it is the surplus that enables us to employ to the maximum. We get our best profit in the other fellow's dollar, be it the lira, the franc, or the pound.

We realize how our factories were developed because of war requirements, and so in peace times in order to enable them to employ a maximum of those who seek employment we must export from 15 to 20 per cent. We can not export that percentage to-day; we are not exporting it to-day principally because of credit conditions,

Two years ago the banner month showed exports of something over $900,000,000, while the last month for which we have a report shows exports amounting to about $300,000,000; in other words, the exports now are one-third of what they were two years ago, and yet the world wants our products to-day more than it ever wanted them.

I do believe that we have started in a direction whereby we can to some extent solve that problem through the incorpora-tion of banks with power to do a foreign business—in other words, to take over foreign securities. They have not very much gold abroad to send us. With what they have sent us, we apparently have more now than we really can use, according to the reports from the Federal Reserve Board. only way in which we can give them credit is to take over their securities; and they have securities. They own property, just as they always did, and they have value, of course, and their securities can be taken over by our banks with power to do an international banking business, and on those securities bonds and debentures can be issued to the American public, and in that way we can practically and profitably furnish credit for our export trade.

We all know that exporters and producers are very active in endeavoring to bring this about. Only last Friday night I attended a meeting that was most illuminating in the city of Cleveland, Ohio. It was a convention of the Foreign Trade Council, and there were men present representing not big business particularly but all classes of industry in practically every State in this Union. I have in mind one man particularly with whom I happened to engage in conversation. facturer of some kind of agricultural machinery device. He told me that he had a bona fide order representing a purchase price of about $250,000 from Rumania, and that all that it was necessary for him to do was to find some way to bank that $250,000 order. They were ready to give him Government bonds, they were ready to give him mortgages on their plant, they were ready to give him any securities that the ordinary banker would be glad to accept—that we would accept at any time in our domestic banking institutions. There was no There was no method, however, through which he could bank these securities. If he had been able to do so, he could have sold his $250,000 worth of machinery; he would have employed so many more men so much longer, and the result would have been that that would have added in great degree to the possibility of using this merchant marine and having it available to carry these cargoes to the various ports of the world.

So again, Mr. President, may I repeat that with this bill disposed of, as I hope it will be to-morrow so far as the Senate is concerned, I trust we shall recognize the absolute necessity of getting down to the fundamentals in order to bring about a feeling of confidence here, and as far as possible to extend this credit abroad. I do not think we can look for so-called good times until we do.

The American people deserve from this Congress a clearly defined policy as to what the future relationship between government and business will be, so far as it relates to taxationwhich is, of course, a very important part of it—and so far as it relates to the general regulation and supervision of the The people expect much from this Congress; the people demand much from this Congress; the people are entitled to much from this Congress. They must not be disappointed.

The buying power has not in any way changed. The necessities of man have not in any way changed. Just as soon as we inspire confidence that men with will and energy and determination and some means to back it up can be permitted to do business and develop their business and employ men in order to do it, just that moment you will see automatically a great resumption of business throughout this country, which, of course, means happiness and contentment everywhere.

So, Mr. President, I have taken advantage of this time, speaking briefly on the emergency tariff bill, which is now pending, to give simply my own personal view, from some contact with business throughout the country, as to what I believe will really furnish or help to furnish at least some relief, some solution to the problems we are facing. Two years and a half ago, when we came out of the war, there was not any nation in the world, and never a nation in history, that occupied the position we occupied, with the appreciation and thanks of all our allies in the war and even the respect of our enemies, the entire world practically at our feet waiting for us to lead the way. I am not going to discuss what happened in the two years interven-The Members of the Senate know it far better than I can possibly describe it. Differences of opinion existed, of course, but I think those were pretty well settled by the verdict of the American people last November, so that we can go on with that fresh in our minds, so far as international questions and contentions are concerned. But going back to business and industry and commerce, we have absolutely stood still, and in my judgment it is fundamentally and inherently and elementally the first responsibility of a Congress representing the activities of the people of the great country to protect and help develop the people of the Nation.

Thus, Mr. President, realizing that situation, I sincerely hope that the Senate will very promptly take up the subject of taxa-tion in order that the American business man, farmer, cattleman, or whatever he may be, will recognize that his Government is back of him and cooperating with him and will feel that he has a chance to go ahead, and that for his energy and his ability he will receive a fair proportion of profit, and then that he will pay his Government a full proportion of taxes, but in such a way that it will not stifle, as it does to-day, whatever you may say, the energy and the enterprise which we know and must admit is lacking.

Before I sit down, in talking of the tariff in addition to taxes—and of course we are discussing the tariff to-day—I want to say very frankly, so that I shall not be misunderstood in voting for this bill, that I should be very, very unhappy indeed to see this Congress ever pass a permanent tariff bill that was not in some way elastic, or that represented a range of duties that might be considered properly an embargo on imports. Again, if I must repeat it-and I hardly think it necessary-I believe absolutely in the policy of protection; but we must view the situation to-day as it exists to-day. Just as we can not talk about the horse-drawn vehicle of 20 years ago in developing the motor and automobile trade to-day, so we can not talk about the tariff bills of 15 or 18 years ago in the consideration of a tariff bill to-day. When we are the creditor nation of the world, with a $14,000,000,000 credit, four or five billions of which represent a difference in goods and the rest represent loans, we must recognize that that means a different situation when we compile a tariff bill, and that it means absolutely that business can not go on in one direction.

I am not making a free-trade speech, but I am making an address that counsels common sense, scientific investigation of a tariff before it is enacted into law, and that recognizes the fact that we must have certain types of imports if we are ever going to export this 15 or 20 per cent in the merchant marine that I have been discussing. You can not do business in one direction continually. It is against all the laws of supply and We must protect, and protect properly, American industry and American labor, but at the same time we must balance that with a thorough realization and admission on both sides of the Chamber that we must export goods, and we must have a market for goods on the other side as well as a market here if we are to have a full measure of prosperity in this great

Therefore, I simply put out this note of warning. We are not considering a tariff bill to-day; it is only an emergency bill which lasts six months, and which meets certain conditions. Very well; but for a regular policy in this country a Republican protectionist to-day must recognize that situation, and must recognize that an embargo with its possible retaliations would mean a stifling of foreign trade, and that would never be good for the industries of this country. I simply leave that note, without attempting to elucidate or go over it in great detail; but I consider it primarily important at this time when we are considering a tariff measure.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I do not purpose at this time to discuss the antidumping and foreigncurrency valuation provisions of this bill, for the objections to these provisions have been ably and fully set forth by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I shall therefore restrict my remarks to those sections that impose duties upon certain agricultural products.

One can not study the general and sharp decline in the prices of agricultural products throughout the country without a profound feeling of sympathy for the agricultural class. But the claim that the agriculturists alone have suffered from falling prices is not well founded. Every class in the country have been victims of sudden and heavy losses in their abnormal war-profit incomes, caused by the reaction which was inevitable, following the unnatural excessive and exorbitant prices that prevailed in all goods, wares, and merchandise during the war. The manufacturer, the jobber, the retailer, the laboring class have all experienced during recent months a substantial reduction in their incomes, and all are very naturally seeking to maintain the large and unusual profits which they received as a result of the exceptional demand for American products and labor during the war. The return from the battle fields to the farms and factories of Europe, of those engaged in fighting the recent war, has of necessity revived business and agricultural production so that there can not possibly be in the immediate future any such increased demand for Americanmade goods and products as we have experienced during recent years. No one class of our population has a right to turn to our Government for redress under conditions which are general and affect more or less all our people, to the further detriment and injury of any other class. The laboring class can not successfully appeal for governmental aid to maintain their wages; the investment class can not expect legislation to prevent them from bearing the losses that have come to them by the decline in value of their securities; the manufacturers and business men of the community have no just right to shift upon the farmer or any other element the burden of bearing the losses which have come to them by reason of the decreased value of their goods and stocks of raw materials through falling prices. All should assume and bear the burdens of readjustment equally. It is no time for the granting of special favors to any class. The readjustment we are passing through must be worked out along natural lines, and all our people must wait patiently for world and business conditions so to shape themselves that the business of our country and of the world may return speedily to normal standards.

We are confronted with a very striking and entirely new condition as a result of this war. We have become for the first time in our history a creditor Nation instead of a debtor Nation. As such we are now to be bound by the economic and commercial laws that govern creditor nations. We can not any longer merely sell and import specie in payment for our goods. Europe is indebted to us through government and private debts to about $15,000,000,000. This debt we all hope and expect will be met and paid in due time. It can be paid by the countries and people of Europe in one of two ways, either by sending us gold or by selling us goods and services. The countries of Europe are without gold; therefore if these debts are ever to be paid they must be paid in goods and services. For the first time, in considering tariff legislation we are confronted with the fact that we must not construct a tariff wall around our country which will prevent us from receiving the goods and services of Europe. We must bear in mind the importance of helping them to discharge their indebtedness. Heretofore in shaping protective tariff legislation we have had to consider only one element, namely, that of providing such tariff rates as would serve to protect the growing industries of our country in the home markets against the importation of commodities made by the cheap labor of Europe. Our home markets are no longer the sole market for our manufacturers, jobbers, and producers. We have, whether we will it or not, so entered into the markets of the world that our business of recent years has been developing and expanding upon the conviction that we were prepared to compete in the markets of the world and bring to America a substantial part of the export business of the world. To overlook this fact will result in leading us into a position where we may establish such tariff barriers as to confine practically our entire future business development to the now limited demand for our home markets. A tariff law which destroys or restricts our export business at the present time will be as injurious to home industries as it was claimed a few years ago the want of a protective tariff injured them.

The bill which is before us is called an emergency tariff bill. Its proponents are seeking by fixing tariff rates upon certain imports, particularly agricultural products, to keep out of the country, and out of competition with American producers, various commodities. It is the expressed theory of the proponents of this bill that by establishing high tariff rates the American producer of agricultural products will be able to obtain a higher price, and obtain from the American consumers sufficient money to offset in part the depreciation which he has experienced in prices for his products during recent months. No emergency tariff can be justified on any grounds unless it is clear that there is produced in this country a sufficient amount of the taxed product to take care of the needs of the country, and that the consumers should be charged with an increased price, so as to permit certain classes of producers to carry on their business at a profit. Clearly, if there is not produced in this country a sufficient volume of a given agricultural product to take care of the needs of this country, there is no occasion for an emergency tariff.

Mr. President, the only theory upon which a protective tariff of any kind, to say nothing at all of an emergency tariff, can be justified, is based upon a finding that a given product is being imported in such large volume as to penalize the producer of that article by making his business unprofitable and thereby destroy his business.

It seems to me certain factors should appear in order to justify an emergency tariff law: First, that the cost of the article produced in America has been driven to a price lower than the cost of production because of the unusual and excess of foreign importation of that article. Second, that the production of the given article in America is sufficient to meet the wants of the country. Neither of these factors can be established from an impartial analysis of the pending bill, and therefore a tariff can not be justified after such an examination of the specific items in this bill. In practically every instance it can be shown that there is either an overproduction and a large exportation from this country of the agricultural products named in this bill or the production is so limited and small that for the general prosperity and welfare of our people it is essential and necessary to permit importation without duty of these agricultural products.

An examination of statistics and well-known information in regard to some of these articles will prove, I believe, beyond question that this emergency tariff bill as framed will not meet the emergency claimed for it and will result in very serious losses to the American people as a whole and impair and injure materially the growing and expanding export business of the

I think I can justly claim that the information is bipartisan.

I think I can justly claim that the information is bipartisan and nonpartisan. Let us proceed to examine some of the items in this schedule of agricultural products that are to be protected by an emergency tariff.

FLAXSEED.

Flaxseed is used solely as a source of linseed oil, which is extensively consumed in paints, varnishes, and in linoleums and oilcloths.

Our production of flaxseed is wholly inadequate to our requirements; in fact, there has been a world shortage of this product. Substitute and adulterant oils have been imported in large and rapidly increasing quantities. Such substitutes are perilla, soya bean, tung, and china-wood oil.

The United States imports 60 per cent of its flaxseed, chiefly from the Argentine, and also from Canada. American requirements are about 30,000,000 bushels, and we import about 20,000,000 and produce about 10,000,000.

The import duty on flaxseed under the Underwood law is now 20 cents. It is proposed under the emergency tariff law to raise this to 30 cents. So we are confronted at the very outset with the proposition of making a substantial increase in the import tax upon this commodity, 60 per cent of which is imperative and necessary for our demands.

This is a tax upon the whole building industry. Even the farmers themselves will be the greatest sufferers by such an import duty to the extent that they are among the chief users of paints and varnishes. Only in a few States—that is, the Dakotas and Montana—can any benefit possibly accrue, and even in these States it will be offset by higher prices for paints and varnishes.

An increase of 10 cents will of necessity raise the price of the whole 30,000,000 bushels and will add at least $3,000,000 to the cost of paints and varnishes. In actual operation it would probably amount to more than $3,000,000, because such a tax tends greatly to increase through higher interest and handling

This is one phase of the situation; there is still another and more serious phase: The proponents of this measure have failed to make a proper readjustment of the duty upon linseed oil, which remains at the rate fixed in the Underwood law, the present law.

In view of the fact that most of our supply comes from abroad, the lack of adjustment between the duty upon oil and flaxseed will result in shutting down the great linseed-oil industry, which is located chiefly around the Great Lakes and in New York State. So this tax on flaxseed will greatly hinder if not shut down our linseed-oil industry and also limit the price which the farmer will get for his flaxseed, because the manufacturer of linseed oil will not be able to compete with imported linseed oil, on which there has been no increase in the tariff.

Mr. President, another element to consider in the imposition of this additional tariff tax on flaxseed is the effect it will have upon the sale of a very important by-product, namely, linseed-oil cake. Thirty-six pounds out of every 56-pound bushel of flaxseed goes out in the form of linseed-oil cake after the oil is extracted. This linseed-oil cake is exported in large quantities to Europe. It is a very important factor in the linseed-oil business. The effect of this increased tariff tax on flaxseed will result in an increase in the price of this linseed-oil cake, making the exportation price prohibitive. Consequently, it will probably paralyze temporarily if not ruin the linseed-oil industry.

Is it any wonder that the linseed oil manufacturers around the Great Lakes are protesting vigorously against the flaxseed provision of the pending emergency tariff bill? The situation which I have described in regard to flaxseed applies to almost every article named in this bill.

OTHER VEGETABLE OILS.

High, if not prohibitive, tariffs are proposed for cottonseed oil, coconut oil, and soya-bean oil. These oils are now free of duty. Cottonseed oil is made from cotton seed; coconut oil is made from copra, the dried meat of coconuts; and soya-bean oil is made from soya beans. All of these oils are more or less competitive, price being the determining factor as to the extent to which they are used. Their chief uses are in the manufacture of oleomargarine or butter substitutes (which compete with dairy products through the substitution of oleomargarine for butter) and in the manufacture of lard substitutes (which compete with the hog industry through the competition of lard substitutes with lard), and in the soap industry, where they compete with tallow and similar products.

In view of the fact that the framers of this bill have omitted to place a duty upon the raw materials of these oils—that is, upon copra, cotton seed, and soya beans, which now are free of duty—the proposed tariff can have no substantial operation. Furthermore, approximately 75 per cent of our coconut oil comes from the Philippines, with which we have free trade and which will not be affected by the proposed legislation. The Philippines, according to official statistics, have about 60,000,000 coconut palms, of which only 30,000,000 are in bearing. It is obvious, therefore, that the importation of coconut oil from the Philippines may be greatly increased; and, in view of the fact that all these oils are capable of substitution one for another, this free trade with the Philippines will nullify whatever effect the proposed duty might have.

Instead of protecting the domestic cotton-seed industry, domestic butter and hog industries, the only effect of this bill will be to greatly increase the profits of the domestic crushers of imported materials. These crushers, it is safe to say, it was not the purpose of this bill to protect.

WHEAT AND FLOUR.

At the present time the importing countries of the world depend upon the United States and Canada for fully 80 per cent of their imported wheat and flour. It is apparent, therefore, that so long as the international price level dominates the American markets a tariff can be of little practical significance, In point of fact a tariff upon wheat has only very uncertain advantages and many clear disadvantages. This aspect of the situation has been set forth by the United States Tariff Commission in one of its publications, in which it enumerates the things that can be said to the advantage of the tariff on wheat and the things that can be said to its disadvantage. I refer to the document known as Supplemental Information Concerning the Wheat and Flour Trade, particularly the discussion of this subject on pages 7 and 8.

West of the Rockies the wheat trade is quite distinct from that flowing eastward. The western wheat flows to Seattle and Portland, either for export or to meet the deficiencies of California. To this wheat, therefore, the tariff is of no significance, because the Canadian wheat does not enter into these markets, and it is entirely on an export basis. The tariff has been supposed to affect primarily the hard and spring wheat producing regions of the Northwest, the Dakotas and Minnesota, which produce the type of wheat that Canada exports almost entirely—the hard spring wheat. But a large and increasing proportion of the crop of those States consists of durum wheat. This wheat is used chiefly in the manufacture of macaroni, spaghetti, and similar edible pastes. Canada produces little or no durum wheat. Over half of this supply, upon an average, is exported, chiefly to the Mediterranean countries, so of the production of the Dakotas and Minnesota a very large part therefore may be exempted so far as Canadian competition is concerned.

East of the Mississippi the crop consists almost entirely of soft wheats, and this type constitutes a very considerable part of the crop of the States south of this hard spring wheat section. To a considerable extent the price level of soft wheat is independent of that for hard wheat. Soft wheats are used chiefly in the manufacture of biscuits, cakes, and similar pastries. It is true, to a limited extent, soft wheat so competes with the hard wheats, but it is fair to say that in a general way the markets are independent, so the greater part of the producing area may be in a sense exempted from the operation of the tariff.

What effect, therefore, has the tariff upon the hard spring wheat producing sections? It is in these sections that the milling industry has made most rapid progress. In the face of their increasing capacity the acreage in spring wheats has remained stationary. They have outgrown their domestic sources of supply of hard spring wheat. Their alternative, therefore, is either to take more of the southern hard winter wheats or to bring in Canadian wheat. In view of the fact that the southern wheat is upon an exporting basis indirectly, therefore, it influences the hard spring wheats, and they can not with profit go against the natural flow of wheat southward and eastward by bringing such wheat to the northern mills.

The situation is more clearly outlined by an examination of the trade during the current crop year. The American crop amounted to approximately 790,000,000 bushels and there was a carry-over from the preceding crop of approximately 151,000,000 Deducting a domestic consumption for food and seed of 630,000,000 bushels and an average carry-over of approximately 80,000,000 bushels (for it is not possible to scrape the bins before the arrival of the new crop), there remains an exportable surplus of 230,000,000 bushels. But during the nine months ending March 31, 1921, there has already been shipped out 277,000,000 bushels, and exports are still continuing. ports of Canadian wheat and flour amount to 49,000,000 bushels. It is clear, therefore, that Canadian wheat has been absorbed in the American markets. It has been reexported, chiefly in the form of flour, or it has released for export equivalent quantities of wheat from other sections. In addition, a considerable movement of wheat has been moved from Canada in bond through our ports. By reason of her transportation situation much of the Canadian flour must move through American ports. This is an asset which should not be cast aside.

After the wheat crop is harvested Canada has only about 70 days to export through Canadian ports before the close of navigation. The facilities at Halifax and St. John are totally inadequate for winter movements; the hazards of shipping on account of perils due to ice and the higher marine rates discourage shipments from those ports. Her alternative, therefore, is either to ship this wheat immediately or store it, incur storage and interest charges, and face the possibilities of the international price situation incident to later competition from the crops of Argentina and Australia, which are harvested in December and January, and the crop of British India, which is harvested in March and April.

Wheat is the chief asset of the Canadian farmer, and the mere carrying of this tremendous crop involves tremendous outlay. By shipping it to American ports, to the great primary markets of the South, this wheat is more easily absorbed. If the Canadian wheat were permitted to fall on the world's markets in November and October in volume exceeding the storage and absorbing capacities of Europe it would depress price levels, which in turn react on American prices. If they were permitted entry into the southern markets they would serve as a buffer and maintain our own prices upon more even scale. That this situation is generally recognized is indicated by the Russian Government's action in 1913, when she took measures to keep the Russian crop off the market until the Canadian flow had passed.

It might be well to note that the flour-milling industry is the third largest industry in the United States. Canadian wheat and flour has been rapidly displacing American wheat and flour in England, the great importing market of the world. While American millers have had access to high-grade Canadian hard spring wheat, they have met this competition and have been shipping in large quantities American flour, milled in America, to England.

The imposition of a tariff, which all agree is going to shut out Canadian wheat, will gradually diminish the exportation of flour to England.

It follows that if the expert market for flour declines the demand for our farmers' wheat on the part of American millers must of necessity decline and harmfully affect the price the producer is able to obtain.

Canada has shipped as much as $425,000,000 worth of wheat to foreign markets. The fact that the Canadian dollar is at a discount of approximately 15 per cent has tended to limit American shipments to Canada, at the same time as it has stimulated shipments from competing European sections, where Canadian money is at a premium. If the wheat were permitted to flow through our markets our opportunities for shipping other products would be greatly increased. Our exports to Canada are far in excess of imports, and this is true even of foodstuffs. We import raw materials from Canada and ship to her prepared foodstuffs. Such a trade should not be discouraged.

In view of these indisputable facts, how can the proponents of this measure successfully contend that the tariff rate upon wheat named in this bill will result in giving the producer in America a higher price for his wheat than he is now ob-Of course, there is no other claim made by the advocates of this bill. Especially there can be none in a tariff measure that is called an emergency measure. This bill must do either one of two things-it must reduce the price of wheat or it must result in giving the producer an advance in price over what he is now receiving; and if it is the latter, it means that every consumer in America must pay that advanced price.

Of course, if the producer does succeed in getting a higher price, this bill ought to be called "A bill to increase the cost of living to the American public," because most of the commodities dealt with in this bill are agricultural products, which are the basic necessities of life. If it does not result in an increased price to the producer, it clearly does result in serious and widespread disadvantages to the American people through (1) the lessening of the export of all manufactured and food products to Canada; (2) reduction in the volume of railroad transportation business from Canada to American ports, and a consequent reduction in the ocean traffic from American ports at the very time when we are seeking to build up a merchant marine; (3) the loss of mill feed, a valuable by-product of flour, which is greatly in demand by producers of milk and dairy products; (4) a loss by our distributing, elevating, and storage interests which would handle this great flood of Canadian wheat; and (5) an indirect loss to the American farmer through the effect of the Canadian flood upon international price levels, which would in turn react upon our domestic prices.

Still another factor requires consideration. The proposed tariff is so poorly framed as to leave loopholes for evading proposed duties; for instance, note the tax of 35 cents per pushes on wheat and 20 per cent ad valorem upon flour. It is a very unscientific provision, since the flour prices vary directly live animal. A somewhat similar condition obtains with respect to duties on sheep, lamb, and mutton.

the fluctuating duty upon the basis of ad valorem throws the markets entirely out of alignment.

If, for instance, wheat sells at $2, a tariff of 35 cents a bushel is, roughly, about 16 per cent, but the tariff on flour is 20 per cent, or with wheat at $1 the tariff of 35 cents a bushel is, roughly, 33 per cent, whereas the tariff on flour remains only 20 per cent.

Furthermore, the customs lawyers will wax fat in litigation over other phases of this rate. The present tariff (Underwood law) reads as follows:

Free list: Wheat, wheat flour, semolina, and wheat products, provided that there shall be levied a duty of 10 cents a bushel on wheat and 45 cents a barrel upon wheat flour and semolina and 10 per cent upon other wheat products, when from a country which imposes a duty on wheat, wheat flour, and semolina.

Now, if wheat be only slightly milled, it would be neither wheat, wheat flour, nor semolina, which is the product of durum wheat. If from Argentina, for instance, which has no duty on American wheat, partially milled wheat would be free of duty, and such wheat can be remilled into flour. A wheat product such as crushed or cracked wheat, for instance, would come in from Canada at 10 per cent. For illustration, if Canada should alter her present tariff law on wheat and flour, which is similar to our own, her shippers could avoid this whole emergency tariff by shipping into this country free of duty a product of wheat such as crushed or cracked wheat.

CATTLE.

Cattle, which are now under the free list, are dutiable at 30 per cent ad valorem under the proposed bill. Quarantine requirements limit shipment of live cattle to Canada and Mexico. At least half or more of the imports consist of feeder cattle. cattle which are shipped to the corn belt and to the Eastern States for fattening. Such imports are an asset rather than a liability. With the increase in homesteading on the western ranges the supply of cheap feeder cattle has been gradually diminished, and the imported stock enables us to utilize to greater advantage our increasing corn crop. The farmers themselves would be harmed by the tariff upon feeder cattle. Yet this proposed tax makes no distinction between feeder cattle and fat cattle. Of course, the proponents of this measure intended to provide an increased revenue for the producers of fat cattle by this bill, but apparently did not have in mind the effect of this legislation upon feeder cattle.

Section 15 provides that cattle and sheep and other stock imported for breeding purposes shall be admitted free of duty. The present tariff reads that only pure-bred registered stock shall be admitted free of duty, it being considered to the interest of the agricultural sections to permit the free entry of high-grade breeding stock. This hastily framed legislation merely reads "imported for breeding purposes." It would be extremely difficult to determine whether scrub cows or bulls imported into this country were for breeding purposes or for slaughter or for fattening, and in consequence the purpose of this provision would be extremely difficult to put into effect.

In other words, the provisions of this section can be circumvented by anybody setting up the claim that they were importing cattle for breeding purposes and bringing large numbers into the country, which they may temporarily put to grazing, and after a short period sell for slaughter. To make null and void this provision, which has been framed to advance the price of cattle to the cattle producers of the country, all that is necessary is to make a claim at port of entry that the cattle are for breeding purposes. How can a protective tariff, one so filled with inconsistencies and errors, be of any possible assistance to the farmers?

PRESH MEATS.

It should be noted, also, that the duties upon fresh beef, veal, mutton, and lamb are out of proportion to the duty on the live stock; that is, at the rates provided, it is more advantageous to bring in the product rather than the live animal. This means our slaughter and packing house industries will lose just that much business. The American packers control over 60 per cent of the exports of Argentina and Uruguay, sources from which a large part of the imported meats come. It hardly seems probable that American packers will bring in meats to compete with their own domestic product. In any event this tariff provision will tend to encourage them to bring in fresh meats rather than live cattle.

A steer averaging 1,000 pounds, at a market valuation of, say, $100, would under this bill pay a duty of $30. Assuming a dressed weight of 50 per cent, 500 pounds of beef from that

COTTON.

Cotton is now on the free list. The proposed duty upon cotton having a staple of 13 inches or more in length is 7 cents per pound. This provision, therefore, only deals with Egyptian cotton, which is produced in the Southwest. The United States produces nearly twice as much cotton as all the rest of the world combined, but over 88 per cent of this production consists of short staple. Long-staple cottons are essential for two purposes-the production of fine counts and the production of yarns of any kind where strength and superior wearing qualities are necessary. Egypt is virtually the only large source of long-staple cottons measuring 14 inches in length. Only a small proportion of our supply is produced in the United States, and it is improbable that any considerable proportion will be domestically raised in the near future. In recent years the sudden growth of the tire fabric industries has rendered the world shortage of long-staple cotton more acute. It appears, therefore, that a duty upon this cotton is sufficiently undesirable from any view, and especially indefensible from the viewpoint of emergency legislation. The result of this tax is certain to work injury to our automobile tire trade, to our textile industries, and especially to the textile industries which are most directly affected by foreign competition, in increasing the price of one of their chief raw materials.

Section 17 provides an offset duty of 7 cents per pound over the existing rates, to offset this duty upon raw material. In operation it appears almost impossible to carry this provision into effect. In manufacture there is considerable loss for which no provision is made, and furthermore it would be almost impossible to determine in any yarn the length of cotton which has been used in its manufacture.

WOOL

Wool is now on the free list. It is proposed to place a duty of 15 cents per pound upon unwashed wool, 30 cents on washed wool, and 45 cents on scoured wool. It is further provided that wool which has been sorted or increased in value by the rejection of any part of its original fleece shall carry a duty of 45 cents per pound.

In view of the fact that the wool of South America and Australia is so advanced by the process known as skirting the actual duty is 45 cents per pound. In testimony before the Senate Finance Committee it was brought out that there was nearly a 2-year supply of wool on hand. In view of this fact, what may be said for an emergency tariff upon wool?

If the markets of central Europe were to resume consumption of wool upon a prewar basis, it is doubtful if there would be a large, if any, world shortage of wool.

In view of this enormous available supply of wool it is very doubt'ul whether the tariff will increase the price of the farmers' wool to any considerable extent. But it is apparent that the increase of 45 cents per pound allowed to textile manufactures, as compensatory duty, is an additional duty upon the consumers of textile fabrics in this country.

An objection similar to the case of cotton appears in the compensatory duty of 45 cents a pound upon wool in the form of manufactured products. There is a considerable reduction in weight in the manufacturing process and it would be extremely difficult to determine accurately the compensatory duty on the textiles.

RICE.

The duty on rice has been doubled. The United States exports about ten times as much rice as it imports for consumption. So great has been the overproduction of rice, that no matter what the tariff a reduction in the domestic acreage is certain during the present year. The trade is largely in the hands of two growers' organizations—the Southern Rice Growers' Association and the Pacific Rice Growers' Association, which attempt to fix minimum prices and, it has been said, have sold American rice to foreign trade at lower prices than obtained in our home markets. No emergency can be claimed for rice. Within the last 20 years our rice production has quadrupled, part of it during the period of the Underwood tariff. This increase has been primarily due to the development since 1913 of rice cultivation in the Sacramento Valley. A large part of the California crop is produced by orientals. The chief benefit of the tariff would accrue to the land speculators who have profited largely by the rice development in A large part of the crop of that State is raised by Whatever justification there may be for a tariff, under no circumstances should it be used to promote land speculation or to enrich oriental labor in America; and the proposed tariff, if it will have any effect at all on rice, is bound to benefit chiefly these two classes.

LEMONS.

The tariff on lemons has been quadrupled, from one-half cent to 2 cents per pound. The present price of lemons in New York City is around $2 per box, a net weight of about 75 pounds to the box. Before any Sicilian lemons may be imported we must pay therefor approximately $1.50 for tariff, about 50 cents for packing and other material and an additional 50 cents for ocean freight, making a total of $2.50 in New York without a cent to the foreign producer. Such a protection therefore is overwhelming—a protection of 100 per cent at prevailing market prices.

Lemons are a household necessity. In this case it might be well to add that this tax will amount to a protection of 100 per cent to one organization which controls about 75 per cent of the American production. One hundred and ten million American people are to be taxed 100 per cent chiefly for the benefit of this one organization.

Upon Sicily virtually all of Europe is dependent for its supply of lemons and the Sicilian production has reached its maximum. It takes nearly a generation to develop a lemon-growing industry. So that without tariff the consumption of lemons in America and the world and the decreasing importation of Sicilian lemons would result in giving a progressively increasing market to the producers of America. At the present time the California crop, by reason of the increased freight rates, has virtually a monopoly of the markets west of the Mississippi and western Canada.

OLIVE OIL.

The duty on olive oil has been doubled, from 20 cents to 40 cents per gallon. Our production is only about 5 per cent of our olive oil requirements, 95 per cent coming from abroad, chiefly from Spain and Italy. There is a world shortage of olive oil, a shortage so great that in the countries of origin—where olive oil is extensively used as butter—export taxes and export embargoes have been in force. In view of the fact that 95 per cent of our supply comes from abroad and that it would take fully a generation to develop our industry, if it ever can be developed, to the point of meeting our requirements, no emergency may be claimed. Here again is a proposed tax on 110,000,000 of our people when 95 per cent of our supply is imported for the benefit of a few people in America engaged in the production of olive oil.

The United States produces approximately one-half of its sugar requirements. It is dependent upon Cuba for the remainder of its supply. In view of this condition no emergency mainder of its supply. In view of this condition no emergency may be claimed for the sugar provision of the proposed act. Furthermore, Cuba has become, under the preferential tariffs granted her, an important and rapidly increasing market for American goods. This tariff, therefore, is subject to question on many grounds which have been fully argued by other Senators opposing this bill.

DAIRY PRODUCTS.

Increases are provided for butter, oleomargarine, cheese, milk, and cream, but in 1920 our exports of dairy products were over five times as large as our imports. The exports amounted to $126,742,429, while the imports amounted to $21,842,886.

A very large part of the imports consisted of cheese of the types not produced to any large extent in this country. It is clear that here again it would be absurd to claim an emergency.

It is true that a considerable quantity of Danish butter has arrived in eastern markets, but this butter is of a very high grade and of a quality not produced in sufficient quantity in the United States. It sells for a slightly higher price than much of the American product.

much of the American product.

Milk and cream, now free of duty, are assessed at 2 cents a gallon for milk and 5 cents a gallon for cream. This trade is largely a border proposition. The imports go chiefly to the congested eastern centers. With the relatively limited shipping radius of fresh milk, it seems unfair further to tax the city dwellers of the East.

The taxing of these dairy products will simply result in higher prices to the consumers in the Eastern States and will be of no benefit to western farmers because the railroad hau is too long for shipments of fresh milk and cream.

Preserved and condensed milk, now free of duty, are assessed at 2 cents per pound. In 1920 our exports of such milk amounted to $204,000,000. Our imports to only $2,500,000. It is absurd to maintain that an emergency situation exists in a trade of this character.

I might add, the same hasty and faulty handling of the drafting of the tariff schedule is apparent in the milk schedule.

No provision has been made for preserved or condensed cream. In consequence such cream will enter free of duty, while the fresh cream will be taxed at 5 cents per gallon. It will merely mean that more cream will be imported in preserved form.

TOBACCO.

The tariff on unstemmed wrapper tobacco is increased from $1.85 to $2.35 per pound and on stemmed wrapper tobacco from $2.50 to $3.

Itelatively, only a limited region produces wrapper tobacco and the present protection amounts to over 150 per cent on an ad valorem basis. It is proposed to increase this further. No compensatory adjustment has been made for a duty upon cigars. What the effect of this faulty framing of the bill will be remains to be seen.

APPLES.

The apples duty affects chiefly the trade between Canada and the United States. The United States ships more apples to Canada than it receives from that country, and our exports of apples far outweigh the imports. No emergency can be claimed here. Our exports of apples in the year 1920 amounted to $3,155,094; our imports to only $748,566.

CORN.

Corn is now free of duty; a tariff of 15 cents per bushel is proposed. The United States produces more than twice as much corn as the rest of the world combined. Our crop amounts to around 3,000,000,000 bushels. Imports have never exceeded 15,000,000, while our average exports are at least double that amount. The indirect exports in the form of lard, tallow, beef products, and the products of animals to which corn is fed are far in excess of that amount.

The great bulk of the imported corn is used by the manufacturers of corn products near New York City. They export a large part of the products made from imported corn to Europe in the form of corn meal and cornstarch. It is apparent, therefore, that with an export trade of these dimensions and with the character of utilization of the imported corn that the duty is only a nominal one. Certainly no emergency can be claimed in the case of our corn production. In view of the overwhelming predominance of the United States in the production and exportation of corn, does it seem conceivable that a customhouse duty on this product would have an effect upon domestic prices?

Here again is manifested the hasty and faulty technical framing of the law. The status of corn products has not been affected. Corn meal, for instance, remains free of duty, and for some of the uses of the imported corn partially milled Argentine corn may serve.

BEANS.

The foreign competition in beans comes chiefly from Japan and Korea, but even during the period when the largest imports have been arriving larger exports were being shipped to European markets. Since the decline in the prices of beans virtually no imports for consumption have been entering domestic markets. No emergency may be claimed in the case of this commodity, just as it can not be claimed in the case of corn, wheat, flaxseed, the oils, and other products named in this bill.

POTATOES.

Rigid quarantine regulations virtually prohibit a substantial import of potatoes except from Canada. There is a considerable flow of domestic potatoes to Canada, and a larger flow of Canadian potatoes to our eastern markets. The supply of potatoes in the eastern markets is contributed chiefly by Maine and western New York, but these regions do not produce sufficient for the North Atlantic requirements.

The price of potatoes fluctuates tremendously from year to year, almost from month to month, according to climatic and harvest conditions. Prices at times rise to such levels as to cause distress in the congested urban centers of the manufacturing regions of the East. At other times, when there is an abundance of potatoes, prices fall below the cost of production. Under such conditions it would seem that a free movement north and south of the Canadian border is desirable. If a large crop is produced in the United States, then prices will not permit of large exportations, while if prices are high, due to a shortage, then it is to the public interest to admit imports from whatever sources they are available.

The chief demand for a duty on potatoes has come from one county in northern Maine. That county can not produce more than a small proportion of the potato requirement of our Eastern States, and to that county it is really of very little moment whether the additional supply be brought in from Canada or from the West. It is merely a readjustment of the source of the supply rather than a protection.

Mr. President, in conclusion, let me warn the majority party of the injury this legislation will do to a section of the United States that does not deserve from the Republican Party a bequest that amounts to an embargo on its future. It must be borne in mind that the Northeastern States, so far as the demand for food supplies is concerned, is the England of America. New England and the North Atlantic States must obtain food supplies from sections beyond the Canadian border line and the Allegheny Mountains. Any attempt to shut off the natural flow of food supplies from Canada is certain to result in serious detriment to the industrial progress and development of that section of the United States, because the increased cost of food supplies by reason of the long hauls will mean an increase in the cost of living that will prevent the steady progress and advancement of these States. Moreover, the increased cost of living will eventually react on the price of products of this section of the country, and the effect of the tariff would be to raise the level of prices without benefit to the farmer or con-

But I also urge you to reject this measure to prevent injury to the farmer whose welfare you are attempting-mistakenly, I believe-to promote. Of the general provisions of the act it may be said, first, that this duty has to be enforced during a period of six months; that is during part of the season when the American crops are moving to the markets. In view of the fact that these are temporary raises, and in view of the probable fact that the permanent raise may not be fixed at the same high level, instead of being a tariff favoring the producer, it will greatly hinder him through impeding a normal movement to the markets and have a tendency to restrict and limit greatly the purchase of these products by shippers and jobbers. Instead of aiding the farmer it will greatly injure him, for the reason that the wholesalers and dealers will be disinclined to pay the high prices which it is the purpose of this act to establish. The uncertainty of trade in piling up agriculture products with this temporary provision is apt to create still more harm.

Mr. President, it is evident from the foregoing analysis of different articles mentioned in this bill that tariffs upon agricultural commodities, except in a limited number of instances, may not have at all the effect of raising the general level of prices to the producer that the advocates of this measure claim. But to whatever extent it will raise the prices to the producer it will react in higher cost of living and in a higher cost for the things the farmer must buy. During the war, for instance, high prices for agricultural products were closely followed by an increase in prices for the things the farmer purchased, and the result was little net advantage to him. The chief result of a higher level of prices of agricultural products and the consequent increase in the level of all prices would be greatly to impair our export trade.

From every standpoint this bill is most objectionable. It will injure, not help. It is the beginning of the abandonment of our export trade. It is a serious blow to our manufacturing industries. It is an indefensible precedent.

Mr. President, the majority party of this body will make a very serious mistake if it enacts this measure into law. It will tend to shake the confidence if indeed it does not drive away from its support elements of citizenship of our country who have been the very backbone of the Republican Party in the last generation.

The view of the American people toward tariff legislation has changed, and changed materially. The change that has been wrought as a result of the war has made our people begin to appreciate that we now must keep in mind the necessity of cultivating an export business and that we must do an export business to keep our present industries active. Heretofore the only problem was the protection of home industries, the building up of home industries to supply the home markets. But we are beyond that stage. We are in the world markets, and when you come to deal with the tariff upon the old basis, of simply protecting the home markets, you are beginning to abandon the export business that has been so rapidly expanding during recent years.

I can not conceive of any substantial reason why the Republican majority in this Chamber would dare go before the country and seriously contend that this measure was not either class legislation or an attempt to extort dollars from a substantial majority of the American people to make up the discrepancies and losses of another group of our people. These are days of reconstruction. A terrible World War has shaken humanity as nothing else has in our day. Do you think business is going to escape without a scar, that human beings alone are to be bruised and bled? Every class has lost and every class is suffering. Of course the farmer has met with losses, and I sympathize with him and with our laboring people, our manufacturers, and the holders of investment securities. They have all met with heavy financial reverses. They are all suffering as a result of what has followed since the war. But human beings everywhere are also broken in spirit, their hopes dashed, and the future made gloomy and dark.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Bursum in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. And the leadership on the other side, headed by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], and the chairman of the Committee on Finance, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose], have stated that no amendments to this bill will be allowed.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I have heard that statement, but do not know of its correctness. It is very evident that it is the intention of the majority to pass this bill and make claim to the farmers of the country that they are now and in the future to enjoy the benefits of a protective tariff. But there can not be a protective tariff applied successfully to agricultural products, especially where those products are being exported in large volume, or in a country where the production of agricultural products is so small that to shut out such products will result in penalizing and punishing the great majority of the nonagriculturists.

This is a basic industry. If agriculture must be protected, then everything must be protected. The only theory of a protective tariff, as I have understood it, has been the necessity of stimulating home industries—small, growing industries, which were needed in America to produce the things for which we have been dependent upon Europe. That period has largely passed. Home markets alone will not keep our American business active and thriving to-day. We must keep in mind the necessity of doing a foreign export business, and this bill means the restriction, if not the end, of much of our export business. These tariffs upon agricultural products mean that we propose to build a wall around this country and shut out imports of raw materials, and that means that the other countries of the world will be forced to build walls around themselves to keep out our manufactured products.

Mr. President, these are my views upon this measure, and I want to repeat that I think this bill is a very serious mistake. I believe the country is bound to suffer, and I think the Republican Party, just now coming into power in the full flush of victory, is attempting to enact legislation which is indefensible. I do not know of a Republican journal in the eastern part of the country which has attempted to make a serious defense of this legislation. It is the beginning of the death knell. If such legislation is continued the Republican Party can not go before the consuming public of America and expect a favorable verdict. The American people will not support such one-sided class legis-

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President-

PARTICIPATION IN EUROPEAN COUNCILS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask leave to submit a resolution, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and to lie on the table for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

Mr. HARRISON. I would like to have the resolution read, if there is no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Wisconsin has asked to have the resolution printed in the RECORD. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Gooding] is seeking recognition to make a speech on the unfinished business, and as the Senator from Wisconsin has asked that the resolution be printed in the RECORD, I think that is sufficient.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent to have it read. It is very short.

Mr. CURTIS. Very well, if the Senator insists that it shall be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the resolution will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 74) as follows:

Whereas the President of the United States has accepted the invitation extended through the British ambassador to designate representatives to attend upon the sessions and participate in the deliberations of the supreme council and the reparations commission created to carry into effect and enforce the terms of the treaty of Versailles; and Whereas the treaty of Versailles is a crime born of blind revenge and insatiable greed and constitutes a betrayal of the solemn promises of this Government made to the world and formally accepted by the Allies as the basis of the peace terms; and

Whereas the Senate of the United States refused to ratify the treaty of Versailles or to give its sanction either to the League of Nations or to the unjust conditions of that treaty; and Whereas the people of the United States by an overwhelming majority in a great and solemn referendum indorsed the action of the Senate in rejecting the said treaty; and Whereas the Senate has by an overwhelming majority adopted a resolution declaring the war with Germany at an end; and Whereas our participation in the deliberations of the supreme council may be accepted as an indorsement by the Government of the United States of the imperialistic policies which the members of the supreme council are now pursuing in Europe, Africa, and Asia and as a sanction of the barbarous and uncivilized warfare which is now being waged against the people of Ireland in contravention of the laws of war as prescribed by The Hague convention and in violation of the pledges solemnly made during the war that the rights of small nations should be recognized: Now, therefore, be it *Resolved**, That it is the sense of the Senate that it is contrary to American ideals and traditions for the Government of the United States to participate in any manner in councils the purposes of which constitute a denial of freedom and self-government and thus sanction, or appear to sanction, the acts of oppression which are now being inflicted upon Ireland, India, and other subject nations, and that it is the sense of the Senate that the Government of the United States should not take part in any foreign councils except upon the express understanding that the purposes of such councils are to be the fulfillment of the pledges made by the responsible representatives of this country and the allied Governments during the war, foremost amongst which was the establishment throughout the world of government by consent of the governed. of the governed.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President— Mr. CURTIS. I shall have to object if there is to be any discussion of the resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. I am not going to discuss the resolution. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senate to something in this connection. I understood that the order had been made.

Mr. CURTIS. It has not been made, for if there is to be discussion, it is in the nature of an objection, when the regular order is demanded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is objection, the resolution goes to the table for printing.

Mr. HARRISON. There is no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Unanimous consent has been asked that it be printed and lie on the table. To that I have no objection, but I do object to any discussion of the resolution, and I shall demand the regular order.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The order was made before it was read that it should be received and lie on the table. The reading was called for afterwards. I did not ask to have the resolution read.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I asked in my own right that it be read. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississ ppi.

Mr. HARRISON. I am not going to discuss the resolution, but in connection with it I wish to state that there appeared in a morning paper a statement by one Will am Allen White, a very distinguished Republican, one who I understand was a member of the platform committee at the Chicago convention last year. It is true that he followed one wing of that party some years ago and was then styled a Bull Moose, but he has since come back into the fold and is now reckoned as being very close to the present administration, and no doubt his expressions carry great weight throughout the country. Any utterance touching the policies of the present admin strat on respecting foreign affairs and domestic policies would have great weight in the country and would be looked upon as coming from headquarters; but when it appears in one of the papers in the city of Washington that is dominated and controlled by one of the high Republican leaders of to-day, a member of the President's Cabinet, Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, of course it carries more significance, and part cularly when accompanying the statement of William Allen White there appears in Mr. Hoover's paper an editorial, as appeared this morning, entitled "President Wilson's Clothes," it carries still greater weight and more significance. I shall read just a few extracts:

The Democrats in Congress-

Says the editorial in the Herald-are being mighty decent. They are entitled to commendation for not trying merely to get in the way, to "ball things up," and to delay action.

That is a very splendid comment and very just. The editorial further says:

There is no reason to believe opposition to the complete foreign relations program will meet serious opposition from the larger body of Democratic Senators. It is more apt to come from a few dissenting

That is why I read it at this particular time, following the resolution offered by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

No one of them should object to the solace they get from saying that the Republicans have put on President Wilson's clothes. This has fully as much of truth as the claim of the Republican extreme irreconcilables that the vote of November 2 was a verdict against any slightest Wilsonian taint; that everything ever advocated by Mr. Wilson is unclean, and that no remnant of his program can be accepted; that the people then declared that nothing which by any stretch of the imagination could be credited to Mr. Wilson shall be even considered. * * * But in principle it was upheld by a majority of the last Senate.

That is, Mr. Wilson's foreign policy as a whole.

If Mr. Wilson had been content to get only the principle and had forgotten the details, the treaty would have been ratified with votes to spare.

The editorial further says:

The editorial further says:

It happens, also, that President Harding was one who voted for ratifying the treaty with reservations.

To accept no part of the principle claimed for Mr. Wilson would mean the complete isolation of the United States and a separate treaty of peace with Germany. This is as far from the real sentiment of the Republican Party as would be the adoption of the treaty of Versailles without change. When President Harding made Mr. Hughes his Secretary of State—no appointment he has made was and is more popular—he gave conclusive notice that he had not so radically changed his position as to be classed with either extreme. Somewhere there is a middle ground, and if the Democrats take comfort from the fact that the administration seems to be seeking it—well, it will take at least 10 Democratic votes in the Senate and maybe more to finally adopt any form of a foreign policy.

This is a very remarkable editorial, and appearing in the same issue of the paper that contained the interview with William Allen White, a member of the last Republican platform committee and, I believe, one of the advisers of the present administration, I ask that the William Allen White article be read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

[From the Washington Herald, Tuesday, May 10, 1921.]

HARDING KIND TO LEAGUE FOES, BUT PRESSES HIS OWN POLICY—WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE SAYS PRESIDENT'S COURSE WILL DISLODGE IRRECONCILABLES AND LAND AMERICA IN ASSOCIATION.

(By William Allen White.)

President Harding is having a sad time hushing the irreconcilables. Every day they are quieter than they were.

To-day they are stirring in their stupor because the joint resolution for a separate peace with Germany does not move out of the House of Representatives. They feel that the President is keeping the resolution there for his own purposes. And they fear that the President's purpose in delaying the peace resolution would be only to give him time to work out the plans of Hughes and others.

HOLD UP TARIFF MEASURE.

The plan of Highes is to get the United States into a league of nations. Possibly it will be an association of nations, possibly a world court. But league or association or court, the irreconcilables believe that it would be the Wilson covenant minus article 10, plus express stipulations that America would not be responsible for the enforcement of the Versailles treaty.

The reaction of the Senate leaders to the delay of the House in passing the joint resolution for peace with Germany is to hold up the passage of the emergency tarlif measure. This measure is near to the hearts of mid-western Congressmen, who are suspected of having a sneaking regard for the Hughes position. It is a question whether the threat of Senate delay on the emergency tarlif may not work.

LOVE OF LEAGUE ACADEMIC.

threat of Senate delay on the emergency tariff may not work.

LOVE OF LEAGUE ACADEMIC.

For the Representative's love of an intangible league of nations is more or less academic and platonic, while the way the Representative loves his job is passionate and substantial. And the emergency tariff bill in Congress is supposed to be one of the few things that will be done for the farmer who has the Representative's job to give. It is a nice bit of politics.

And the President, who is supposed by certain Senate leaders to be slowly moving toward an alliance with our European allies in an association to keep the world peace, may be using the delay in developing a European policy to give the American people time to forget the rancors of the campaign. With the education of the people away from a league of nations receding, the league becomes more and more probable. Every week sees some small wedge biting into the Senate's anti-Wilson policy. The appointment of the American "observers" at the conference of the Allies is a small wedge. And the fact that George Harvey, most irreconcilable of all the anti-Wilsonites, is to sit in that conference is a most deadly bit of diplomacy. For, sitting in the conference, George Harvey will be brought to see the wisdom of the conference and the need of more power to protect American interests in Europe. If Harvey is converted to the policy of further commitments for America, the Senate will follow.

This is the essence of the Harding victory. The President is no crusader. He will not be Rooseveltian in his clashes nor Wilsonian in his uncompromising position. He will not go over the heads of the Senate leaders to the people in a thunderclap.

Yet he realizes that the Senate intellectuals—Lodge, for instance, and Borah and Johnson—sometimes act as if they considered Harding not quite big enough for the job. He is in the act of "showing them," most politiely, even most affectionately, that he is big, really, enough for the Job. Hence his quite gesture of delay in matters relating to the will land America in whatever league, association, or court Republicans like Root, Hughes, Nicholas Murray Butler, Wickersham, and Lowell decide shall be established upon the débris in Europe. That big, fundamental fact is growing more obvious every day.

Harding has not ditched the irreconcilables. But he is letting them use an awful lot of gas while they stand at the curb and blow out their cylinders. They may run clear out of gas and have to be hauled in, Harding is a kind man. He will take care of them.

EMERGENCY TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2435) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, and to provide revenue; to regulate commerce with foreign countries; to prevent the dumping of foreign merchandise on the markets of the United States; to regulate the value of foreign money; and for other purposes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending bill and ask that it may be printed and lie on the table, with the other amendments to the bill, to be taken up at the proper time

Mr. Reed's amendment was ordered to be printed and to lie on the table, as follows:

Insert the following after section 202:

"Whenever it is established to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that merchandise upon which an import duty is levied by the United States is being commonly exported from the United States and is being commonly and generally sold in the countries to which exported at less than the same class or kind of merchandise is being sold or offered for sale in the United States, then the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue an order suspending and setting aside any import duty or tariff upon the importation of the same or similar articles of merchandise into the United States, said order to remain effective so long as the condition aforesaid exists."

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, the question before the Senate at the present time is, Shall the farmers and live-stock growers of America be given protection? The Democratic Party in the Underwood-Simmons bill gave protection to practically every manufacturing institution in this country. They made one exception. They put farming machinery on the free list, and they told the farmers they were putting it on the free list in order to give them cheaper farming machinery and recompense them for the losses which they sustained by having their products put on the free list. That was an insult to the intelligence of the American farmer, for the genius of the American farmer has led the whole world in improved farming machinery and we never have imported any foreign farming machinery. The question is, Shall the farmers be given protection the same as the manufacturers are receiving to-day at the hands of the Democratic Party under the Underwood-Simmons bill?

There is but very little difference in the discussion that has taken place on the floor of the Senate on the emergency tariff bill ir the last few days than that which the American people have istened to for more than a hundred years. For ever since the foundation of this Government men and parties have divided on this great question according to their viewpoint of life, or from political expediency, or their own selfish interests.

The protectionist believes that the prosperity and happiness of our country depend on protection; that this country can not reach its full greatness as a nation without protection to American labor and American institutions.

The free trader believes that the best interests of the country are served by a free-trade policy that throws our ports open to the trade of the world; or a tariff on what he calls the finished product, and free trade on the farm and range products of the country that he calls raw material.

The question of free trade and protection, Mr. President, has been responsible for more strife in this country than all other political questions combined. Next to slavery, it was more responsible for the Civil War than all other questions combined. For years the North and the South were at the breaking point over the right of the Government to collect duties on imports.

At the beginning of this Government the Democratic Party was the strong protective party of the Nation, but with the growth of slavery in the South it drifted toward free trade, and long before the Civil War it became a radical free-trade party. So bitter was the South against protection that when the Confederate constitution was drafted it provided that protection should be unconstitutional, so that if the South had succeeded in the Civil War the Confederate States would have been a freetrade country by constitutional provision. Section 8 of the Confederate constitution reads as follows:

SEC. 8. The congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises for revenue necessary to pay the debts, provide for the common defense, and carry on the government of the Confederate States; but no bounties shall be granted from the treasury, nor shall any duties or taxes on importations from foreign nations be paid to promote or foster any branch of industry, and all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the Confederate States.

It is not strange, Mr. President, that the South, with its slave labor, should have been opposed to protection, for the only excuse for protection in this country on any industry is the difference in the cost of production that is made up by the difference in the price paid for labor here and abroad. Give the manufacturers, the farmers, the miners of this country labor as cheap as it is in foreign countries and they will not need any protection, for they will be able to compete with the whole world. But few, if any, of our industries can exist long without protection if the American scale of labor is to be maintained. I am unable to understand the man who would be willing to see labor in this country forced to accept the measly pittance that is paid to labor in the Old World. Labor has always been paid a higher price in America than in any other country on earth, so it is not strange that the manufacturing industries of the North fought for protection while the South, with its slave labor, fought for free trade. Nor is it strange, Mr. President, with the slave interests dominating the South, that the contest between the North and the South over the question of free trade and slavery grew more bitter until we became involved in the greatest civil war the world has ever known.

There is no doubt, Mr. President, that protection wrought great hardships upon the people of the South with its slave labor. But free trade worked equally as great hardships upon the people of the North, that paid the highest price for its labor of any country on earth. And, as I read the history of our country, I am forced to the conclusion that after all the war between the North and the South was inevitable, and that we are a bigger and better country to-day because the differences between the North and the South were fought out on the battle fields.

The traditional free-trade policy of the Democratic Party is but a relic of slavery. It is not to be wondered at that more than half a century should have passed away before there was any radical change in the people of the South on the question of free trade and protection, for the Civil War left a condition in the South that was little better than slavery. But labor organizations, together with the World War, have brought about a change in the price paid for labor in many lines of industry in the South until to day the South line. dustry in the South until to-day the South, like the North and the West, is forced to fight for protection in order to save its industries from ruinous competition with foreign countries.

It was Henry Clay who said that the question of free trade and protection would never be settled until it was settled on the side of protection; but I am not predicting, Mr. President, that this country is any nearer a settlement of the great question of free trade and protection than it has been for the past hundred years.

But all the free trade this country has ever known the Southern States are responsible for, for it is the solid South that has dominated the Democratic Party and shaped its free-trade policy. That there is a growing sentiment in the South for protection I am sure must be admitted. But the bitter opposition of the Democratic Party in Congress to protection for the agricultural and live-stock interests at this time, when they are in the most deplorable condition that has ever existed in their history, is evidence that the leaders of that party are not going to accept any opposition to their traditional free-trade policy.

That there is a force, however, they must reckon with in the South is evident, Mr. President, from the activities of the Southern Tariff Association. At their convention in the city of Atlanta, Ga., January 27, 28, and 29, 1921, which President Harding and Vice President Coolidge were invited to attend, resolutions were unanimously adopted favoring the passage of the emergency tariff bill.

In speaking of that convention the Southern Tariff Advocate has this to say:

The invitation extended by 24 Southern governors and governors elect to attend the Southern Tariff Congress at Atlanta January 27, 28, and 29, which is reproduced in this issue of the Advocate, is a most unique document and historians of the future will record it as the prelude to the great movement to bridge the industrial chasm between the North and the South and to bring us in closer relationship with the executive and administrative branches of Government at Washington.

with the executive and administrative branches of Government at Washington.

The Southern Tariff Congress is perhaps the first movement in the history of the South that meets with the unanimous approval of all political, agricultural, industrial, and commercial factions, and it is predicted by those giving serious thought to the matter that the deliberations of that body will result in forging the link that will bind the interests of the industrial South with those of all other sections in such a manner that tariff legislation of the future will be levied without discrimination to any class of industry and that its burdens and benefits may be equally shared by all.

Mr. President in my indement the congress held at Atlanta.

Mr. President, in my judgment, the congress held at Atlanta, Ga., in January of this year by the Southern Tariff Association, which President-elect Harding and Vice President-elect Coolidge were invited to attend, marks an epoch in the history of America on the tariff question. In order that the activities of the Southern Tariff Association may be preserved in the records of the Government, I ask that the invitation to President Harding and Vice President Coolidge, and the double page of the Southern Tariff Advocate containing the names of the 24 governors and governors elect who signed that invitation be printed at this place in my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The invitation referred to is as follows:

SOUTHERN GOVERNORS URGE HARDING AND COOLIDGE TO ACCEPT INVITATION TO SOUTHERN TARIFF CONGRESS.

Hon. Warren G. Harding,
President elect of the United States, Marion, Ohio:
Hon. Calvin Coolings,

Mr. GOODING. I also ask that the resolution unanimously passed by the Congress of the Southern Tariff Association and the telegram to Senators from the Southern States urging them to support the emergency tariff bill may be printed in the Rec-ORD following the invitation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The resolution and telegram are as follows:

The resolution and telegram are as follows:

The following resolutions were passed at the closing session of the congress:

Resolved, That we send the following message to President-elect Harding, the Congress of the United States, and the American people:

This convention, called by 16 southern governors and composed of delegates from 18 Southern States, represents every important southern industry, and truly reflects the thoughts and aspirations of the people of the South regarding the great economic questions now confronting the country. We express our profound appreciation for the generous recognition given this congress by President-elect Harding by his interview to the press, assuring us that the "incoming administration is highly sympathetic with the aspirations of the people of the South." We believe with him in "prospering America first," and in "protecting our home markets in such a way as to assure American standards of production and American standards of living." We foin with him in the hope and we express the belief that his administration will be in the interest of all the people, without favor to any class, section, or interest, and in so doing we believe that it will remove all cause for sectionalism and prejudice. We piedge ourselves and our association to cooperate in the achievement of this worthy purpose.

The visit of Vice President-elect Coolidge and his splendid address to us is a distinction never before shown a southern convention by a Republican Vice President we hope and believe that it will be productly of a better understanding and of a better service on the part of us all for our common country.

Due largely to foreign competition, all the southern industries represented in this convention are in a desperate condition, including agriculture, live stock, mining, manufacturing, and forest products. These industries are all essential to the prosperity of our country in peace and to its success in war. The producer has been encouraged to increase production in order to meet the world

We therefore petition the President and Congress:

To enact at the earliest date possible the emergency tariff law with the Senate amendments, and to enact a permanent tariff law that will afford both revenue to the Government and protection to agriculture and industry.

Resolved, That the following telegram be sent to Senators Underwood, Harrison, Simmons, and others:

The Southern Tariff Congress in session here, representing all Southern States and industries, believes that the prompt adoption of the emergency tariff bill with the Senate amendments will be of very great advantage to southern agriculture and industry. The convention has approved this measure by unanimous vote and directs me, as president of the congress, to request your support of the measure:

(Signed) John H. Kredy,

(Signed) JOHN H. Kraby, President Southern Tariff Association.

SENATORIAL FILIBUSTER.

Whereas it has come to the attention of the Southern Tariff Association in convention assembled that it has been charged by Senator ASHURST, Democrat, of Arizona, that certain southern Senators are seeking to defeat the Fordney emergency tariff bill by dilatory tactics; and
Whereas we regard the passage of this measure of vital necessity to save the producers of the South and West from financial distress and ruin: Now, therefore, be it and ruin: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by this convention. That we most earnestly beg to implore the Senators from the South and West to permit this bill to come to an immediate vote in the Senate: Be it further

Resolved, That we here now express our most solemn protest against any filibuster by either individual Senators or any party on this measure: Be it further

Resolved, That this association at once wire this resolution to all southern and western Senators.

ORGANIZATION PLAN.

Resolved, That the chairman appoint a committee of three persons for each State to secure indorsement of our declaration of principles and affiliation with our association by all organizations within their State.

That the chairman appoint a committee of three persons for each State of the chairman appoint a committee of three persons for each State.

That the chairman be further authorized to appoint a large delegation to appear before the proper congressional committees at Washington in the interest of southern welfare.

LIVE-STOCK INDUSTRY.

Whereas the live-stock industry of the South has suffered from foreign competition of sheep, goats, wool, mohair, cattle, frozen meats, hides and skins, dairy, and all other live-stock products, to the extent that the industry can no longer survive unless given recognition in tariff legislation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we urge the Ways and Means Committee of the Congress of the United States to include the above-mentioned products in the list of articles needing protection.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

We specifically urge the enactment of such tariff legislation as will adequately protect the following agricultural products from foreign competition: Vegetable oils, citrus fruits, tobacco, rice, sugar, peanuts, honey, Egyptian or long staple cotton, onlons, potatoes, grain, and all other products produced on the American farm which are affected by importations from foreign countries.

FOREST PRODUCTS.

We also favor adequate tariff schedules for all products of the forests, including lumber, naval stores, wood pulp, and other products affected by foreign competition. MANUFACTURES.

We believe in the fullest development of our manufacturing industries and favor such tariff schedules as will equalize the cost of production in this country with that of foreign countries where wages and standards of living are below our standards, and recommend that the following industries be considered in the next tariff bill of the Congress of the United States: Glass manufacturing, cotton manufactures, furniure, burlap, coal-tar dyes, flour milling, foundry and machine shops, fertilizer, creosote oil, and all other manufacturing industries whose progress and prosperity may be hampered by importations of competitive products from foreign countries.

Whereas the necessity and urgency of protection of American industry is now the paramount issue before the Congress of the United States; and whereas the mineral industry of this country is seriously jeopardized by the invasion of foreign minerals; and Whereas a subcommittee of the Southern Tariff Congress was appointed on January 26, 1921, for the purpose of reporting upon the needs of the mineral industry for protection, and the said committee having reported that the following minerals, among others, are urgently in need of protection from foreign competition: Antimony, pyrite and sulphur, potash, graphite, tungsten, filmt, tale, manganese, magnesite, lead, clay (kaolin), feldspar, whiting, marble, zinc, monazite sand, ferro-alloys, thorium, iron and steel, fuller's earth: Be it Resolved by the Southern Tariff Congress, in joint session assembled, That it lends its unqualitied indorsement to the protection now being sought by the mineral industries now seeking protection before the Ways and Means Committee of the Congress of the United States; and be it further Resolved by the Southern Tariff Congress, in joint session, That the Congress express its unqualified approval of such protection on all such minerals as will equalize the cost of production here and abroad, and pledges itself to lend its best efforts toward that end.

SOUTHERN TARIFF ADVOCATE.

Resolved. That we heartily commend and indorse the Southern Tariff Advocate, the official publication of the Southern Tariff Congress. Its circulation, which now includes all members of the United States Congress Tariff Commission, members of the legislatures of Southern States, and the industrial and economic leaders of the South, should be expanded. We urge all citizens, and especially industries interested in securing proper tariff racognition for the South, to liberally support it with advertising and subscription patronage. We especially commend the work of its editor, Mrs. Ida M. Darden, and extend the thanks of this convention for the valuable service she has rendered the South as director of publicity of the Southern Tariff Association.

MANUFACTURERS RECORD.

Resolved. That we express our appreciation to the Manufacturers Record and its editor, Col. Richard H. Edmonds, for the generous support given this organization and for the unselfish campaign they have consistently and unceasingly waged for the past 40 years in the interest of the producer and the wage earner.

THE PRESS.

Resolved, That we thank the press of the city of Atlanta and the press and magazines of the South for the recognition extended us, and thank the good citizens of Atlanta for their gracious hospitality.

INDUSTRIES SHOULD STATE TARIFF REQUIREMENTS.

Resolved, That the various organizations and committees, representing the agricultural, live-stock, mining, manufacturing, and forest-product industries be earnestly requested to file briefs and resolutions with the schedules committee of the Southern Tariff Association at its

Washington office, definitely and authoritatively stating their tariff requirements in order that a broad and comprehensive campaign of publicity may be carried on to better acquaint the political and economic leaders of the Nation with the problems of southern industry as especially relates to tariff matters. (Under authority of the foregoing resolution representatives of the glass, Egyptian-cotton, cotton-manufacturing, mica, zinc, and other industries submitted resolutions calling for specific tariff rates on their various commodities which were adopted by the congress and will be printed in pamphlet form at an early date for use of the House Ways and Means Committee, the Senate Finance Committee, and for the information of the individual Members of Congress in framing and disposing of the permanent tariff measures.) measures.)

COOPERATION OF INDUSTRIES.

SOUTHERN TARIFF ASSOCIATION,
JOHN H. KIRBY, President.
J. A. Arnold, Manager.

Mr. GOODING. I also ask that the memorial presented to the Ways and Means Committee by the Southern Tariff Association may be printed with my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The memorial referred to is as follows:

MEMORIAL PRESENTED TO WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE OF CONGRESS BY SOUTHERN TARIFF ASSOCIATION.

To the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives:

The Southern Tariff Association represents affiliated industries from Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louislana, Maryland, Mississippi, Missouri, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and West Virginia—18 Southern States. The number of these affiliated industries is 57, embracing virtually every line of activity in the States mentioned, as follows:

as southern States. The number of these affiliated industries is 57, embracing virtually every line of activity in the States mentioned, as follows:

Agricultural: Cottonseed and vegetable oils, cattle, sheep and wool, goats and mohair, Egyptian cotton, citrus fruits, honey and beeswax, onions, peanuts, grain, cane and sugar, rice, potatoes, hides and skins, tobacco, dairy products, lumber, naval stores, poultry.

Manufacturing: Cotton goods, flour milling, saddles and harness, chemical dyes, glass, burlap, penholders, haircloth, slaughtering and meat packing, pencil leads, epsom salts, macaroni, fertilizers, fish oil, furniture, foundry products, wood pulp, iron and steel, shoe manufacturing, potato flour, and starch.

Mineral: Asbestos, barium, barytes, bauxite, cement, clay, feldspar, ferro-alloys, gypsum, graphite, marble, monozite, manganese, mica, potash, pyrites, quicksilver, sulphur, taic, zinc.

These industries represent two-thirds of the wealth of the South and have directly dependent upon them two-thirds of all the inhabitants. Unless these industries function and prosper the 18 States in which they are situated must rest commercially stagnant, their business inert, and their progress definitely halted.

The whole southern territory is now in the throes of an economic disaster of unparalleled intensity. It has been in this condition for many months. Agriculture, the great basic industry, lies prostrate. The acres are among the most fertile on the earth, but the owners of them are besought by bankers and by merchants, by statesmen and by economists, to let lie fallow the lands that for a hundred years have clothed the world. With unanimity they are advised against the vast production of which they are capable. The wealth that can be created must not be created because there is an economic status which impoverishes a whole people as a penalty for thrift in the fields. Nor in the vast production of edibles is the situation different, since a flood of foreign and competing goods is pouring into the port foreign and competing goods is pouring into the ports, destroying markets and depriving agriculture of any possible profit. Equally stricken are the stock and wool industries, so vital to the sustenance of the Nation.

Not less alarming is the status of the manufacturing industry. The great textile establishments are either closed or are working on part time. The glass industry is not functioning. The dye industry, an essential element in the national defense, is threatened with paralysis, it would be difficult to decide which branch of manufacturing is in the worse condition.

The mineral industry is to all intents and purposes entirely inoperative. During the war the necessities of the conflict revealed hidden sources of essential minerals in southern territory, the development of which promised not only a substantial increase in the national wealth but sure elements of defense in the event of war, going far to determine the complete self-sustenance of the Nation. These industries are on the verge of extinction.

We can not wholly acquiesce in the conclusion that these alarming and ruinous conditions are wholly the result of natural laws, against which it would be folly to contend and to prevent the operation of which would be futile. On the contrary, we are convinced—and are prepared to prove—that the economic disaster is the consequence of forces the hardness of whose compact can and ought to be softened by the intervention of the Government, impartially made operative. Not only are we convinced that these forces have facilitated domestic trade paralysis, but it is our firm belief that unless they are controlled immediately conditions, if possible, will become progressively disastrous, with widespread bankruptry, unemployment, and civic restlessness. A flood of cheap imports is wrecking the markets.

We favor, therefore, the immediate enactment of such tariff schedules as will equalize the cost of production in this country with that of foreign countries, and that will take up the differentials, now favorable to foreigners, in exchange and transportation costs, so far as may be consistent with the public welfare, such schedules to be so placed as to distribute fairly the burdens and benefits among all industries without discriminating against any section, class, or product, to the end that there may be maintained American standards of living in every line of effort there may be maintained American standards of living in every line of effort.

We respectfully call the attention of your committee to the fact that there is an economic emergency comparable in its immediacy and potential destructiveness to any military exigency with which the Nation has been confronted. The World War has no more violently disturbed the geographical status of the world than it has changed the economic map. The wealth of countries has been swept away in great sections of the earth. This has resulted in a credit famine, which necessarily expresses itself in lower standards of living and reduced costs of production abroad. A decade ago there was hope that an equalization of production costs might be anticipated by higher standards of living in other nations, but the Great War has postponed that expectation and relief can be effected now only by the imposition of tariffs sufficiently high to afford real equalization. The competition of pauper production in its several degrees impoverishes those who attempt to meet it, and all alike, in such circumstances, are joined in promiscuous ruin.

This situation is aggravated and intensified by a breakdown in exchange. In several of the countries which are flooding or are threatening to flood this country with their cheap goods the purchasing power of their unit coin at home is three or four times as much as the cost of the same unit in international exchange. The effect is to give each of these countries a prohibitive protection against American products, while it serves as an actual bonus on exportations to America.

The South comes into competition agriculturally with the cheapest labor on earth. Her products are the products likewise of the Orient and semitropical nations, where living conditions are such that labor is the cheapest of all things. The South has been paying, and would like to continue to pay, an American wage to those who toll in the fields, as well as those who labor in the factories and mines, but it can not pay five or ten times the wag ns well as those who labor in the lateories and limites, but it can lot pay five or ten times the wage that is paid by foreign competitors and economically survive.

Each of the industries signing this memorandum is submitting to your committee severally and independently a specific statement of its condition, together with statistical tables which reveal the actual difference in cost of production in this country and in foreign countries. Those figures are based on actual market quotations and on other information which it has been possible to collect. The emergency has developed so rapidly that the investingating agencies of the Government, such as the United States Tariff Commission, have been unable to secure reliable statistics up to this time, nor is the Tariff Commission in a position, we are informed, to make an investigation within such time as is available. We respectfully suggest to your committee, however, that the figures which each of the affiliated industries is submitting is subject to substantiation either by witnesses which each particular industry can provide or by additional information now being procured. The schedules suggested represent in every case the minimum levies which practical men in the industries involved feel will permit them to do business on an equality with foreign producers, but with no advantage over them.

We regret that we can not visualize for your committee the wide-mum levies which practical men in the industries favolved feel will permit them to do business on an equality with foreign producers, but with no advantage over them.

We regret that we can not visualize for your committee the widespread devastation which has been spread over the South by the flood of imports. No words can paint the picture. The breakdown in the cottonseed market alone is known to have taken more than 25,000 children away from country schools. Additional thousands have been compelled to withdraw from other institutions of learning. Banks find their commodity collateral no longer sufficient to guarantee loans made. Scores of financial institutions, chiefly serving rural communities, have been forced to suspend operations. Thousands of farms have been abandoned. Others are so mortgaged that it will be years before they are released. Innumerable mines are shut down and tens of thousands of men are out of employment. Factories that thrilled with life a year ago are deserted, or nearly so. Thousands of cattle, essential to the national life, have been hurried to the slaughterhouse or are being trekked into foreign territory. It is as if an epidemic, contagious and infectious, paralyzing all enterprise, initiative, and progress, had swept over the land.

In these circumstances we urge upon your committee the necessity of immediate relief. The disaster is progressive. It will not do to stay it months hence. With all the emphasis of which we are capable we urge that relief be given now, at once. Our people are convinced that it is within your power, by the imposition of equalizing farifies, at once to control the catastrophe and restore economic virility. The unemployment is promoting social unrest. Even have men fear to go ahead, for they are ignorant of the conditions under which they must do business. They can not contract with assurance. They can not arrange for production while there still hovers over them the actuality or the probability that foreigners will meet them at their doors with similar essential information is already available, the minutiæ of detail can later be assembled.

In full appreciation of actual conditions, we pledge you that we can and will set the wheels of industry in the South to moving almost immediately following the granting by you of the relief we seek. Among our members are those who intend to become active at once. They are leaders in their respective industries. One man alone, who has been forced by economic necessity to send thousands of cattle to his Mexico-ranches, is prepared, on the enactment of suitable legislation, to invest not less than $500,060 promptly in the purchase of cattle. Others are prepared to open their closed glass factories, their shutdown mines, their silent factories of all kinds. Agricultural leaders also have yet time to prepare their fields for the harvests of this year. We pledge the committee that the turn of the industrial tide back toward normal will begin the revival of that which the imposition of the suggested schedules will assuredly induce.

We further put on record our intention to organize the entire South around an American tariff policy to equalize cost of production and maintain American standards of living, on economic grounds, irrespective of party. Our efforts will be educational along these lines, but the surest proof of the wisdom and enduring soundness of the policy we advocate will be found, we are confident, in the immediate and lasting effects which the operation of that policy will produce. The South asks only for equal treatment. Given that, she does not fear competition.

Respectfully submitted.

SOUTHERN TARIFF ASSOCIATION. JOHN H. KIRBY, President.

Mr. GOODING. I will read merely the introduction of the memorial presented to the Ways and Means Committee.

To the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives: The Southern Tariff Association represents affiliated industries from Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, Missouri, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessec, Texas, Virginia, and West Virginia, 18 Southern States. The number of these affiliated industries is 57, embracing virtually every line of activity in the States mentioned.

The 57 affiliated industries have signed the memorial through their presidents or secretaries.

Mr. President, we may not be any nearer a permanent settlement of the tariff question to-day than we have been for the past hundred years, but the activity of the people of the South gives me much encouragement, and if I am not mistaken the American people in every State in the Union are growing tired of having the business interests of this country made a political football to suit the whim of any party.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GOODING. I yield. Mr. HARRISON. The Senator was just discussing the congress of the Southern Tariff Association, as I understood him. They had numerous representatives before the Ways and Means Committee of the House, I understand. Did the Senator read the hearing of those representatives before the Ways and Means Committee of the House?

Mr. GOODING. I did not read from the hearings, but read the memorial sent by the association to the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. HARRISON. I am very reliably informed by a member of that committee that every representative of the Southern Tariff Congress who appeared before the Ways and Means Committee stated that he voted the Republican ticket at the last election. That qualifies them, I take it, to be protectionists. So far as my own State is concerned, the name of which was included in the list read by the Senator from Idaho, there is no sentiment in Mississippi for protection, especially such as is provided in this bill.

Mr. GOODING. I will let the Senator answer to his own people on that question.

Mr. HARRISON. I have done so.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

Mr. GOODING. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish the Senator would bear in mind that the membership of the Southern Tariff Association includes the governor of every Southern State elected by Demo-

Mr. GOODING. Its membership embraces every governor who was elected two years ago and all those who were elected last November. It is a very encouraging sign that the people of the South are changing their opinions in regard to protection, and that 24 of the great southern governors indorsed a resolution unanimously in favor of the emergency tariff bill. That is more encouragement than I thought we would receive.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I do not want to impose on the time of the Senator, but once before the Senator from North Dakota included such a list of governors of the Southern States as vice presidents of such an association. I have known, so far as the governor of my State is concerned—and his name was included—that he certainly does not favor any such measure as that now pending. I do not believe that he knew what the Southern Tariff Association congress stood for when he allowed the use of his name, and other governors, with a few exceptions, are in the same boat.

Mr. GOODING. Well, the South seem to be satisfied with their governors.

But then, again, Mr. President, I am not unmindful that there is a new force behind the Democratic Party to-day that is fighting against protection for the farmer and the live-stock grower. I refer to the international bankers of the country, who have had on a propoganda ever since the emergency tariff bill was introduced opposing the measure and emphasizing the importance of our foreign trade, and it must be admitted, Mr. President, that the international bankers of the country are a mighty force to-day, for they represent billions, not millions, and they have been able to fill the newspapers of the whole country with their opposition to the emergency tariff bill, and at the same time have accentuated the importance of our foreign trade. It is easy to understand why the leaders of the Democratic Party are fighting so bitterly against protection to the agricultural and live-stock growers at this time, for they are receiving much encouragement from the international bankers of the country, who they know will be a mighty factor in the coming campaign in the interests of free trade on farm and range products.

No one doubts the importance of our foreign trade to the life of the Nation, but it is not necessary to sacrifice any of our foreign trade to maintain a healthy condition in the exchange of trade with foreign countries. The Democratic Party has always been ready to sacrifice the agricultural and live-stock interests of the country; they have never been a friend to the farmer; they have always called the farmer's products raw material, and one of their arguments has been that they were putting all raw material on the free list to give the manufacturer cheaper raw material. There is no such thing as raw material in farm and range products. When the farmer's products are ready for market they are his finished product and they are just as much a finished product as the products of the mills. All require labor to produce, and all should be treated alike by this Government. If the manufacturers of this country are to be protected from the cheap labor of foreign countries, then the farmers have a right to demand the same protection. The principle of protection is either right or wrong. If it is right to protect the manufacturers to save them from ruinous competition with foreign countries, then it is right to protect the American farmers.

The principle of protection can not live in America with one half of the industries protected and the other half on the free list, any more than slavery could have existed with this country half slave and half free. If the manufacturers want protection they had better get busy and fight for it as a principle, for if they are going to be protected the farmer is going to be protected, and the laborer who works in these mills must realize that if his labor is to be protected from foreign competition then the laborer who works upon the farm has a right to demand protection for his labor. There is going to be protection for all in this country or protection for none.

Then, again, there are some manufacturers who are not big enough and broad enough to understand that the best market in the world and the best customer in the world is the American farmer and the American live-stock grower. Our foreign trade is less than 10 per cent of our domestic trade, and yet for their own selfish interests these international bankers, together with the speculators and a few of the manufacturers, like the Democratic Party, would destroy the great agricultural and live-stock industries for their own selfish ends.

industries for their own selfish ends.

It is not strange, Mr. President, that the whole industrial system of America is paralyzed and broken down—for free trade on the farm and range products of America has paralyzed and destroyed the purchasing power of the American farmer and live-stock grower. There is not a farmer in America to-day who can sell his products for what they cost to produce. He is without a market, without money, and without credit. When you break down and destroy the prosperity of the productive forces in America, who are the producers of practically the entire wealth of this country, you may expect ruin and disaster to follow along other lines. This country is never prosperous unless the farmers of the country are prosperous.

After all, it is not hard, Mr. President, to understand why the Democratic Party has always opposed protection to the American farmer, for they have had a class of labor in the South that up to a few years ago cost but very little. From

After all, it is not hard, Mr. President, to understand why the Democratic Party has always opposed protection to the American farmer, for they have had a class of labor in the South that up to a few years ago cost but very little. From their viewpoint, measured by conditions that have existed in the South in the past, the farmers do not need any protection. The whole story is told in the remarks of the senior Senator from Mississippi when the emergency tariff bill was under discussion at the last session, in which he said:

I can meet all comers in the cotton field with white men upon the quarter-deck and Negro laborers in the field, although paying them four times what is paid to the fellaheen of Egypt and six times what is paid to the peasants of India, and beat Egypt and India at their own game; but in order that I may do so I ask simply to be left unhampered and untaxed, except in so far as the Government shall levy a tax for revenue purposes alone for the payment of governmental necessities. This is all I ask, and if I ask more I ask something that I have no right to ask.

The Senator was perfectly safe in making that statement, because in India the coolie laborer works for the measly pittance of 10 cents a day. But the trouble is, Mr. President, that the nigger refuses to remain a nigger any longer. He is demanding the same right to live and the same pay for his hire as others receive for the same class of labor, and I hope we are passing that period in American history when labor, be it white or black, can be held in peonage in any State in the Union.

The senior Senator from Mississippi is a consistent free trader. He does not believe that the agricultural interests should be given protection. He stated upon the floor of the Senate time and again when the emergency tariff bill was under consideration that you can not make a wrong right by committing another wrong, which he holds we will do if we give protection to the agricultural interests of the country. It is my judgment the Senator from Mississippi is far nearer right on this question than those who would give the manufacturing interests protection and at the same time force the farmers and stock growers to sell their products in competition with the whole world.

It was Henry Clay who called protection the American policy and free trade the British or colonial policy. It is through that American policy, Mr. President, of protection to American labor and American industries that we have become the mightiest Nation on earth. Through protection we have built up an American standard of wages and an American standard of living that is not equaled in any other part of the world. And through this great principle of protection we have built up a standard of citizenship in this country that is the joy, the pride, and the admiration of every true American.

pride, and the admiration of every true American.

I am not unmindful, Mr. President, that the world is passing through a readjustment period following the greatest destruction civilization has ever known. And I am not holding the Democratic Party responsible for all the conditions that exist in this country to-day. But in a measure the Democratic Party is responsible for the serious conditions of the farmer and the live-stock grower, for they put the farm and range products of the country on the free list to make them cheap, and God knows it has made them cheap enough; for in one short year the farmers and live-stock growers have lost on their products more than $7,000,000,000. This is the greatest loss the agricultural and live-stock interests in this country have ever sustained; but it is no exception to the rule, Mr. President, for every time the Democratic Party has had an opportunity they have always put farm and range products of this country on the free list, and it has always broken down and wrecked the agricultural and live-stock industry and brought ruin and disaster to the country.

Go back and read the history of our country and you will find no exception to this rule. At times when we have had a free-trade measure on our statute books disaster has been averted for a time by war and great events, like the discovery of gold in California, but when there is nothing to interfere free trade has always brought ruin and disaster to the country. The following is what Henry Clay had to say to the American Congress in 1824, describing the industrial distress which prevailed as a result of a free-trade measure enacted into law April 27, 1816:

April 27, 1816:

The general distress which pervades the whole country is forced upon us by numerous facts of the most incontestable character. It is indicated by the diminished exports of native product, by the depressed and reduced state of our foreign navigation, by our diminished commerce, by successive ruthrashed crops of grain perishing in our barns for want of a market, by the alarming diminution of the circulating medium, by the universal complaint of the want of employment and a consequent reduction of wages of labor, and, above all, by the low and depressed state of the value of almost every description of property in the Nation, which has sunk 50 per cent. It is most painful to me to dwell on the gloom of this picture; but I have exaggerated nothing. Perfect fidelity to the original would have authorized me to throw deeper and darker hues.

In speaking of conditions which existed in the country in the late fifties, soon after the Democratic Party had passed one of their free-trade measures, Horace Greeley in an editorial in the New York Tribune had this to say:

Who's hungry? Go and see. You that are full fed and know not what it is to be hungry, perhaps never saw a hungry man, go and see. Go and see thousands of men and women, boys and girls, old and young, black and white, of all nations crowding and jostling each other, almost fighting for the first chance, acting more like hungry wolves than human beings in the land of plenty, waiting until food is ready for distribution. Such a scene may be seen every day between 11 and 2 o'clock around the corner of Orange and Chatham Streets, where charity gives a dinner to the poor.

The best example of what free trade and protection means in this country, in my judgment, is the two administrations of Grover Cleveland. During Grover Cleveland's first term the Republicans had control of Congress, so that he was forced to administer the Government with protective tariff laws. During his first term, when he administered the Government with protective tariff laws, he paid off $260,000,000 of the national indebtedness and we had good times. And then the people elected Grover Cleveland a second time and gave him a Democratic House and Democratic Senate, and he convened Congress in special session and repealed those protective tariff laws and passed a free trade measure known as the Wilson-Gorman bill.

No human tongue can tell the story of the misery and suffering of those four years when Grover Cleveland tried to administer the Government with free trade laws. Instead of paying off any of the national indebtedness, he was forced to borrow $230,000,000 to pay the running expenses of this Government. One hundred and seventy-seven railroads, with mileage enough to reach twice around the earth, could not meet their obligations and were forced into the hands of receivers. Those four years witnessed 60,000 commercial failures with liabilities amounting to $1,000,000,000. One hundred and seventy-five national banks closed their doors, and the balance of trade turned ruinously against us. If capital alone had suffered, it would have been bad enough; but the real suffering came to the army of unemployed in the great cities where free soup houses had to be established to prevent death from starvation.

And then, Mr. President, the Underwood-Simmons bill was passed on the 3d of October, 1913. I wonder if the leaders of the Democratic Party have forgotten the winter of 1914, when more than 3,000,000 men were thrown out of employment, and charity, in this land of plenty, was again forced to feed the poor. Free soup houses had to be established in the principal cities of the country, and, like Banquo's ghost, Coxey's army came back to remind us that free trade was again the law of the land. Then the Great War burst upon the world, and instead of being flooded with foreign importations we were called upon to feed the armies of Europe, and so we forgot all about free trade and hard times.

I have another editorial from the New York Tribune. This is dated August 12, 1920, and it says:

When the war came to Europe this country, as the business world generally recognized, was headed for an industrial crash. The Underwood tariff bill went into effect on October 3, 1913. In the beginning of 1914 its effect began to show. For six months the tide of imports rapidly rose, and incidentally American factories began to close. Is there doubt of what would have happened if Europe had not been compelled to turn to making war supplies? The tariff question is now little discussed, but men of foresight are making guesses as to what will happen here when Europe reaches the full production toward which she is swiftly moving.

Well, it has already happened, Mr. President, and Europe has only just made her beginning toward full production; yet every line of industry in this country is paralyzed. At this time I want to call the attention of the Senators on the other side of the Chamber especially to the serious conditions that exist in the live-stock industry in America, which has been brought about largely by excessive importation. For comparison I am using the year 1912, before the country was affected in any way by any free-trade measure, as compared with the years 1919 and 1920.

The total value of live animals imported into the United States in 1912 was $7,580,555; in 1919 and 1920, the total value of live animals imported into this country was $89,-559,584. I am unable to find where any fresh meats were imported into this country in 1912, but for the years 1919 and 1920 I find there were imported fresh meats to the total value of $42,108,624. Wool importations for the year 1912 amounted to 193,400,713 pounds, and in 1919 and 1920 I find that it had increased to a total of 705,510,475 pounds. If any Senator on this floor thinks there has been no dumping going on, let me read him the figures on the importation of wool for the first three months of the present year.

In January, 1921, there were imported 21,169,480 pounds of wool; in February, 1921, there were imported 42,885,968 pounds of wool, or a little more than twice as much as in January; in March there were imported 98,103,089 pounds of wool, almost five times as much wool in the month of March as in January. The total importation of wool for the first three months of 1921 amounted to 162,158,546 pounds. And it is estimated, Mr. President, that there are at the present time more than 100,000,000 pounds of wool on the way to America.

If this is not dumping, I do not know what you would call dumping. Every importer and speculator in the country has known for a long time that there has been more than a two years' supply of wool in America, without the importation of a single pound from foreign countries.

For more than a third of a century, Mr. President, my life's work in the West has been that of a farmer and live-stock I saw wool when it was on the free list, under Grover Cleveland's second administration, sell in the State of Idaho for an average of 7½ cents a pound. The common price for sheep in those days was $1 per head. At times fat sheep shipped to the eastern markets did not bring enough to pay the freight, and for four long years the live-stock industry had to fight for its existence. Many of the growers were thrown into bankruptcy and their sheep and cattle sent to the slaughtering pens.

But as destructive as those four years were to the live-stock industry in the West they do not compare with the conditions that exist to-day, for there is no market for wool to-day at any Thirty-five per cent of all the wool clip of 1919 is unsold, much of which is in the hands of the growers. estimated that 90 per cent of the clip of 1920 is unsold, the greater portion of which is still in the hands of the growers. The majority of the clip of 1921 is now shorn and ready for market, but can not be moved at any price. For some time fat sheep that have been shipped to market have not brought enough to pay the freight and the cost of feed for fattening, to say nothing of the original cost of the animal, which is all lost in many cases. Unless sheep are in prime condition when shipped many cases. Unless sneep are in prime condition when simpled to market in many cases they do not pay the freight.

There is no sadder thing in this life than to see those who have made a good fight for almost half a century and who have grown old in the pioneer work of the West become penniless in their old age by a public calamity that in a way might have been at least partially averted.

There is no thought any longer in the West of trying to save the men who are in the sheep business. A few will survive, but the vast majority of them must find some other occupation. The effort out West to-day is to save the industry and save the banking institutions, so that it will be possible some day, let us hope, for the live-stock industry of the West to be brought back to a prosperous condition.

Mr. President, I sometimes wonder if the American people realize the importance of live stock to the life of the Nation and to civilization. The first speech that I listened to after I had been given the privilege of the floor of the Senate was an address delivered by the minority leader, Mr. Underwood, on Muscle Shoals, in which he dwelt on the importance of the fertility of the soil. Let me read you a few lines of what he had to say about the importance of the fertility of the soil to the life of the Nation itself:

It has been said by the wisest statesmen that the overthrow of the great nations of the world can only come from two sources, one a conquering army and the other the depletion of the fertility of the soil. Of the two I am inclined to believe that the depletion of the fertility of the soil is a more certain death sentence to the life of a nation than to be overwhelmed by a conquering army, because with the conquering army the life and spirit of the nation may yet live, but with the depletion of the soil and the lack of food the only thing that can be expected is the downward trend of the national vigor and the national life until the national existence is snuffed out.

The fertility of the soil is not only a mighty factor in the life of the nation, but it has its influence upon the individual at all times. Show me a country, or any part of any country, where the fertility of the soil is exhausted and the farmer has to struggle to produce enough to sustain life and I will show you a community where the civilization, like the soil, has gone backward. For it is hard to be a good citizen in any country where a fight must be made to keep the wolf from the door.

The minority leader, Senator Underwood, is more responsible for free trade being forced upon the American farmer and livestock grower than any man in public life at this time, and yet he seems to understand the importance of the fertility of the soil. When it comes to Muscle Shoals, he is ready to spend $10,000,000 to build a nitrate plant, but he is not willing to give one penny of protection to the agricultural and live-stock interests of the Nation. The question, Mr. President, that the American people must answer very soon is this: Is the live-stock industry worth saving? For it can not go on as it has in the past, building itself up only to be torn down in a few years by a free-trade policy. Already in the last year more than 10,000,000 head of live stock from the breeding herds have been shipped to the slaughter pens. Unless something can be done to encourage the live-stock growers—and it must be something more than the emergency tariff bill—God only knows what is going to happen. The live-stock grower can not go on. His stock must be fed every day; they must be watched over and cared for, and he can do but little to reduce his expenses. There is only one way to stop the expense or reduce it to any extent, and that is by sending his stock to the slaughtering pen. In this way he can end it all. This is what they are doing to-day as fast as they can get their live stock ready for market, and if the breeding herds of this country are to be impaired much more it will take years before there can be much prosperity in America.

Out in the great West—and when I say the great West I include the Northwest and the Southwest and all the arid portions of our country-nature has given but very little humus Only two or three crops can be grown from the to the soil. raw soil before the fertility is exhausted, and then it becomes necessary to plant alfalfa or clover or some other crop that live stock consumes for a few years in order to build up the fertility of the soil. When this is done these arid lands become as rich as any farm lands in the whole world. This principle is true in every State in the Union, Mr. President. Live stock must either come in contact with the soil or the manure from the barnyard must be hauled out upon the field or there must be a rotation of crops that live stock consumes if the fertility of the soil is to be maintained.

Nature in its wisdom has fixed certain principles that if they are accepted and followed make possible the existence of civilization. It gave us live stock as nature's remedy for keeping up the fertility of the soil. Practically all the crops grown from the soil which the human race consumes exhaust the fertility of the soil at an alarming rate, while the vast majority of crops consumed by live stock are fertilizers—they feed the soil; they give it the nitrogen and humus it requires which makes possible, with proper rotation, the growing of those crops the human race requires to sustain life.

So it is not a question, Mr. President, of whether we will save the live-stock industry, it is a question of whether we will save the life of this Nation, because it can not live and retain its virile force, as the Senator from Alabama has well said, unless the fertility of the soil is maintained. It is true that in a small way commercial fertilizers can be used, but this has not proved a success in the Old World without live stock. In all the old countries no leases are entered into for farms without a provision requiring a certain number of animals to be kept upon the farm or a certain amount of barnyard manure to be used upon the farm. Experience has taught us that the tilling of the soil can not be maintained without nature's simple remedy that it has given for the use of mankind.

But instead of doing anything to help the live-stock industry in this country, the Democratic Party, as soon as it comes into power, proceeds to put the live-stock industry in free competition with the whole world, which has always brought ruin and disaster. I wonder, Mr. President, how long we are to go on and use the great industries of this country for a political foot-hall.

The live-stock industry can not exist in this country without protection, for live stock of all kinds can be produced in every country on earth cheaper than they can be grown here in America. Every other Government on earth, with the exception of our own, realizes the importance of the live-stock industry. Australia they lease land so cheap to flockmasters that the sheep are fed the year round for 7 cents a head and cattle for $1.25 a head. Over there it has been the custom of the Government to lend the live-stock grower money at a low rate of interest, and in some cases to build a part of the fences to protect the live stock. The Australian woolgrower is able to ship his wool from Portland, Seattle, or San Francisco to Boston to-day for $1.65 a hundred over our own railroads, while from the intermountain country the woolgrower must pay $3.25 to $3.46 a hundred pounds. The haul from Portland to Boston is 500 miles farther than it is from Idaho points, yet the Australian grower ships his wool to Boston for less than half the price the flockmaster in my State or any other of the intermountain States must pay.

Down in the Argentine sheep are fed the year round for 20 cents a head and cattle for $2.50 a head. There labor is paid the princely sum of from $15 to $20 a month. The freight rate from Argentina to Boston is from 90 cents to $1.40 a hundred—about 25 per cent of what the flockmasters of the intermountain States must pay.

From Africa, which has become one of the important woolgrowing countries of the world, the woolgrower can ship his wool to Boston for very much less than the price paid by the growers in the West. In Africa the flockmaster pays his labor the princely sum of from $1.75 to $5 a month. Almost every country on earth, with the exception of America, encourages its live-stock industry. They fully understand that without nature's remedy for keeping up the fertility of the soil it soon becomes exhausted, and the result that the Senator from Alabama so well described is the penalty every nation must pay that permits its soil to become exhausted.

When will we learn these great truths, Mr. President, and give the live-stock industry a chance to live, not for itself but that the development of this country may go on and the fer-tility of our soil be maintained and the vigor and the spirit of our national life guaranteed beyond the question of a doubt?

Mr. President, 20 of our great States can be properly called seaboard States; most of the great cities in these States can be reached by water transportation from foreign countries. The great city of Philadelphia can also be reached by ocean steamers. It is safe to say that the population of these cities that can be reached by water transportation from foreign countries is more than 30,000,000. I am going to make this statement, Mr. President, and I believe it is true, that there is not a farmer in any country in the Old World but who can ship his farm products into these great cities cheaper than many of the farmers l from adjoining States; that is especially true when you get as far west as Chicago. I want to make another statement—that when you get as far west as the Rocky Mountains there is not a farmer on earth, whether it be in the Old World or the New, but who can ship his products to the great cities of this country that can be reached by water transportation cheaper than the farmers west of the Rocky Mountains. I want to make another statement: There is not a farmer or live-stock grower on earth who does not employ his help for much less than what the farmers in America must pay. Take the average paid for farm labor in the Old World, and the American farmer and livestock grower is compelled to pay on an average ten times more for a day's work than the average farmer of the world.

Here are a few of the freight rates paid by foreign farmers and live-stock growers, and also the freight rates which our

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 10, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, O God, for the light and promise of the incoming morn. Teach us that there is no common day, that all time is sacred and all bread is sacrificial. Even in the darkest night there is a brightness which the pure in heart can see. As we are largely measured by the objects we pursue, may we case to do evil and learn to do well. Lead forward our higher and best natures and deepen our faith in things not seen. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REFERENCE OF PETITIONS.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, on page 1242 of the Record, right-hand column, I am reported as having introduced certain petitions of various posts of the American Legion, urging relief for disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines. Those various petitions were referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I indorsed upon them a reference to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman allow that to go over until to-morrow?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I will say that we have never handled that legislation. It is in the nature of a pension or compensation for disability incurred in service in the war. The Committee on Military Affairs provides for the Regular Establishment, ordinary maintenance and organization.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I was not a member of the House when the original legislation was enacted and knew nothing about the procedure. It seems to me that that sort of petition could not, under the rules, properly be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. MADDEN. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce reported the war-risk legislation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, the House should not continue a bad procedure.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it ought not to have originated in that committee, but it did; and since that time all such legislation relating to war risk has gone to that committee,

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It would not go to the Committee on Military Affairs in any event.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I notice also that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Hays] introduced a petition of citizens of Alva, Mo., urging the President to call a conference of the great powers to consider the question of disarmament, and that the petition was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. At first blush that would seem to be the proper committee.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, Disarmament includes much more than reducing the number of war vessels.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the reference being changed to the Committee on Foreign Affairs? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, John W. Rainey, Representative elect from the State of Illinois, has been detained at his home from the beginning of this session by a serious illness in his family. He is here, and I ask that the oath of office be administered to him.

Mr. John W. Rainey appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office prescribed by law.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the

H. J. Res. 52. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to furnish water to applicants and entrymen in arreas for more than one calendar year of payment for maintenance or construction charges, notwithstanding the provisions of section 6 of the act of August 13, 1914.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Wyoming a question before we go into Committee of the Whole? A great many Members have asked what the program for the balance of the week is going to be. Will the gentleman from Wyoming mind telling us what he proposes?

Mr. MONDELL. We hope to bring up immediately after this bill the bill regulating trading in futures reported by the Committee on Agriculture. After that a bill reported by the Interstate Commerce Committee having to do with the landing of cables.

Mr. GARNER. And that will probably take the balance of the week

Mr. MONDELL. It is possible that one other bill from the Committee on Agriculture, to be selected by that committee from bills reported by them, will be taken up.

Mr. GARNER. What about the deficiency bill; will that be considered this week?

Mr. MONDELL. That will be given the right of way, if possible, when it is ready. It may be ready on Friday. It was my hope that we could recess over Saturday if the business was in a condition to warrant it, but if the deficiency bill should come in on Friday and remain unfinished I am not sure that we would be justified in adjourning over Saturday. We might; that would depend on how the Members felt about it.

Mr. BRAND. Can the gentleman give us any information as to whether the Public Buildings Committee is going to be allowed to consider bills for post offices?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not pretend to control the action of the Public Buildings Committee, but I will say very frankly to the gentleman that while I had hoped that we might at this session take action whereby public-building construction might at least be authorized for cases of emergency, I am rather inclined to think that in view of the situation of the Treasury, the way matters stand generally throughout the country, the great demand for reduction of expenditures, I am rather inclined to the opinion that we should not report any publicbuilding bills.

Mr. BRAND. I ask the question because I read in a rural carrier paper published in this city and a local paper in my district, 600 miles away, that it had already been decided by the majority not to report out of the committee any public-building bill at this session.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know whether the committee has acted upon the matter or not. I have expressed my personal views to members of the committee who made inquiries of me as to my opinion.

Mr. BRAND. In a great many instances in the last three years post-office buildings have been condemned by the Government, and we are anxious to know if there is not going to be some relief in those cases.

Mr. MONDELL. There are some very trying situations in the country. There are situations that I am inclined to think ought to be relieved, and yet the gentleman realizes that as a practical matter in legislation of this kind it is difficult to say where the line should be drawn. Once we start, I think we would not stop short of a general public-building bill, probably a very big one.

While the people of my State in common with the constituencies of all of us are quite earnest in this matter, and properly so I think in many cases, while I sympathize with their view, and while I am not one of those who view proper publicbuilding programs as pork-barrel legislation or appropriations, I am inclined to believe that until the state of our finances is improved and we know a little more definitely how we stand and what the outlook is for the future we should not enter upon new construction or new authorizations.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropria-

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 5010, the Army appropriation bill, with Mr. Tilson in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5010, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5010) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

AUTOMATIC MACHINE RIFLES.

For the purchase, manufacture, test, repair, and maintenance of automatic machine rifles, or other automatic or semiautomatic guns, including their mounts, sights, and equipments, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture, to remain available until June 30, 1923, $375,000.

For the purchase, manufacture, test, maintenance, and repair of tanks and other self-propelled armored vehicles, to remain available until June 30, 1923, $450,000.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I note in the paragraph read just before this providing for automatic machine rifles and also in this for tanks it is provided that the fund shall remain available until June 30, 1923. I presume that is necessary because of the length of time that it takes to fill such contracts?

Mr. ANTHONY. My understanding is that the largest part of this money for automatic machine rifles will be used for the development of the larger calibers of machine rifles that are now in use; and, as the gentleman says, a good deal of it is in the way of experimentation and development, and therefore the money is asked to run over until the next fiscal year.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, And the same thing is true of tanks?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; and that is done with a number of manufacturing appropriations in the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking a question. I notice a provision in the bill which provides for the payment of claims for damages to and loss of private property incident to the training, practice, operation, and so forth. Is there any provision in the bill which provides for the payment to individuals for accident or loss of life incident to the training of the Army? Mr. ANTHONY. No; these claims are all small claims under a certain amount and the department is confined to the payment of these small items. Any larger claims they would be unable to pay. Mr. SNELL. What is the policy of the department in regard to the life or accident to individuals? Is there any provision anywhere relative to that?

Mr. ANTHONY. My opinion is it requires a special act of

Mr. SNELL. No matter how small?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman this. There are a large number of claims which were sent up by the War Department to this committee to be included in this bill, claims which have been disallowed in the accounts of the disbursing officers and other officers on account of technicalities and the amount taken out of the officer's pay merely, as I say, because of some technicality. We did not put them in this bill, because we felt the Committee on Claims had jurisdiction and the Committee on Claims should pass an omnibus bill clearing up 100 or more of these claims that have arisen because of the war, where the department has withheld pay of the officer on some technical ground.

Mr. SNELL. We are beginning to get some in the Committee on War Claims, and I wondered whether there was special policy in regard to this?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; claims of that nature are not paid under general authority in this bill.

Mr. SNELL. Every one comes under a special act?

Mr. ANTHONY. They are only small claims for damages taken care of.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For travel of Federal officers and noncommissioned officers in connection with the National Guard, $85,000.

Mr. SPEAKS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SPEAKS: Page 60, strikes out lines 12

Mr. SPEAKS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on this amendment, and I should like to know how much time I will be granted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five

Mr. SPEAKS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have sat here quietly during the past month deeply interested and carefully respecting all the traditions and customs of the House concerning new Members participating in the debates. This is the first word I have uttered in the Congress of the United States. I can not in five minutes more than outline what I have in mind when offering this amendment, and I anticipate that before I have proceeded very far it will involve a discussion which will consume considerable time. say, first, that the National Guard is a subject which is very near to my heart, one with which I have been closely identified for a period of 40 years. I trust you will pardon this personal reference, which seems necessary in order that you may understand my viewpoint. I served in the National Guard for a period of 40 years, passing through all of the grades from enlisted man to brigadier general. I commanded a battalion in Porto Rico during the Spanish-American War, a brigade on the Mexican border, and for eight months a brigade in the World War. I was not permitted to continue in that service, and if you will allow me to continue this discussion for a while you may get some idea as to why I was not permitted to go to France with my organization.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Go ahead. Mr. SPEAKS. I should like to present my ideas relative to our military system and organization, but unfortunately am reminded that the time will not permit. I am a believer in a small Army. [Applause.] I voted for an Army of 150,000 men. I voted for an Army of 150,000 men when that question was up simply because there was no amendment offered which proposed a smaller number.

I was really prepared to go down to 100,000 men, prompted by the fact that the National Guard is rapidly approaching its former strength and esprit de corps.

First, I think this question of great armaments to resist some imaginary foe is largely buncombe. I believe that to a considerable extent it is the propaganda of interests which profit by war and military activities in general.

I assume that we can all agree to the proposition that Germany is now, or under the terms of the peace treaty will be, effectively disarmed. Thus we find the leading exponent of the theory that great armies and armaments are necessary to promote economic progress and insure national security deprived of her powerful weapons, once her supreme pride and which was at the same time a constant menace to world peace. Every resource of that splendid country-material, intellectual, and even spiritual-was prostituted to the barbarous doctrine that might makes right and that the mailed hand was the final arbiter in the settlement of international questions and diffi-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 10 minutes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I object to an extension of 10 minutes. I would not object to five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I modify the request that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin modifies his request, that the time of the gentleman be extended five min-utes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman is recognized for five additional minutes.

Mr. SPEAKS. Now we find Germany completely disarmed, powerless to wage offensive warfare, and impotent to defend her borders from aggression against even inferior nations.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. SPEAKS. Not for a moment, because it will be pretty difficult for me to keep my line of thought, anyhow.

Yet I make the assertion that Germany to-day in her disarmed condition is far safer than she ever was at the very peak of her military preparedness. If Germany will scrupulously observe the terms of the peace treaty and deal justly and righteously with the world, she will have no occasion to fear attack from any quarter.

Gentlemen, I submit to your best judgment and sense of square deal this question: Would not the United States—and doubtless France and Belgium-throw their moral support in forceful manner to the side of Germany in the event that she were unjustly menaced or assailed?

Germany can now devote her energies, her resources, and her marvelous talents to peaceful pursuits and demonstrate that disarmament is not only practicable but also highly desirable. Germany can now peacefully occupy a place on the international side lines and observe the United States and other leading nations in the great world contest for supremacy in armament and military expenditure.

But I must hasten to the point I have in mind in connection with this bill. I have moved to strike out lines 12 and 13, which seek to appropriate $85,000 for travel of Federal officers and noncommissioned officers in connection with the National Guard.

Now, the regular military appropriations carry sums amply abundant to pay all of the expenses of the officers and men of the Army who may be called upon to perform any duty or service in connection with the National Guard. My chief purpose in offering this amendment is to have you preserve the line of demarcation between expenditures for the Army and those for the National Guard. Do not permit this constantly increasing and unjustified overhead expense, which you are all complaining about and have not the moral courage to prevent, from being saddled onto the National Guard.

We had on the 1st day of May upward of 90,000 National Guardsmen in the United States. The expectation is that on the 1st day of June it will number 100,000. I am saying that after some investigation of my own, and I note in the hearings before the Appropriations Committee that the Chief of the Militia Bureau at that time stated it was their hope that the guard would number 100,000 men by June 1, 1921. Now, there are many ways in which the money appropriated for military purposes is absolutely wasted, and I am anxious to keep the appropriations made for the Military Establishment entirely separate as it relates to the Army and the National Guard in order that we know just what each organization is costing the Nation.

Now, do not mistake my thought relative to having the National Guard under control of the regularly constituted military authorities. I understand the necessity, under the law, for Federal supervision and control.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Towner] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman wish to discuss his amendment?

Mr. SPEAKS. Yes, sir. Mr. ANTHONY. I have no objection.

Mr. SPEAKS. My purpose, as I stated before, is to prevent the unnecessary, the unjustifiable overhead charge relating to our general military system, and particularly to the Regular Army, being saddled upon the National Guard. The National Guard appropriation at the figures fixed is ample, and even for a guard of 125,000 or 150,000, which I think will soon be realized, the present appropriation will undoubtedly be sufficient. I give notice right now that I propose to offer a similar amendment on lines 17, 18, and 19.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SPEAKS Yes, sir.

Mr. McKENZIE. The item that the gentleman now desires to strike out is for pay of Regular Army officers, commissioned and noncommissioned, who are sent out into the country-their travel pay? Mr. SPEAKS.

Yes, sir.

Mr. McKENZIE. Travel pay for these Regular Army officers who are sent out into the various States to inspect the National Guard and look after the money appropriated for the National Guard?

Mr. SPEAKS. No; not to look after the expenditure of money. That is provided for. There is an officer in each State whose business it is to check that up.

Mr. McKENZIE. But does the gentleman object to the Federal Government having a sort of supervision over them?

Mr. SPEAKS. No. As a matter of fact, we encourage supervision. We have always invited that in the National Guard, and even now we encourage supervision carried to any degree in order that the War Department and Congress and everybody else may be fully informed as to the opinion of the War Department with respect to the guard. In the hearing before the Committee on Military Affairs on Army reorganization Gen. Pershing, on page 1509, spoke as follows:

The National Guard performed very excellent service, considering the limited opportunities which they had for training in the past. They never received, in my opinion, the whole-hearted support of the Regular Army. There was always more or less prejudice against them, and many of our Regular officers failed to perform their full duty as competent instructors, and often criticised where they should have instructed. The National Guard people resent this, and very preparity so

No, indeed; I have absolutely no objection to the Army supervising and, so far as they can, instructing the National Guard.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. SPEAKS. Yes

Mr. SPEAKS. Yes, sir. Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I did not hear all the gentleman's argument, because I came in only a short time ago. May I ask him if his amendment would not have the effect of doing away with all instruction of the National Guard by the Regular officers?

I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that it has absolutely no application to that. The thought I have is, I want the Federal Government—that is, the War Department-to give any instruction they think necessary, but I want the expense of that instruction taken out of the regular appropriation for the Army, and not saddled onto the National Guard.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Speaks]. If we are to have any Federal supervision at all of the National Guard, this item of $85,000 for travel is absolutely necessary, because under this item is paid the travel of the Federal officers who are assigned to the National Guard of the various States and of the noncommissioned officers, of whom there is a large number—several hundred of them. The National Guard has $50,000,000 worth of Federal property under the control of the National Guard.

This item permits Federal officers to inspect these organizations once or twice a year, traveling over all the States and into all the towns checking up the property and verifying the accounts of State officers having them in charge.

It also covers the travel pay of the tactical instructors of the National Guard. The other day I had four or five officers of the National Guard of Pennsylvania at my office strongly urging an increase in this very item of travel pay. They claim that in the State of Pennsylvania, for instance, there was one sergeant instructor assigned by the Regular Army to one town, and he also had under his supervision companies in four or five other towns. They said the force was so small and the appropriation so low that the instructors could visit these towns only once or twice a year, although the National Guard wanted them once or twice a year, atthough the National Guard Wained them to visit these companies frequently, or at least more frequently than they do. I agreed at that time that it would be wise to increase this amount, but we did not do it. They wanted $185,000, but we allowed them $85,000. It would be fatal to any supervision of the guard at all to strike this item out of the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for three minutes more.

want to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas may proceed for three minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not quite know what is meant by the term "Federal officers," because that might include civilians

Mr. ANTHONY. No. In this sense it means officers of the Federal Army

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. You could say "officers of the Regular Army." The term "Federal officers" would include civilians. Therefore I move to strike out the words "Federal officers" and insert "officers of the Regular Army."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield for that purpose?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield for that purpose. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "Federal officers and noncommissioned officers" and insert "officers and noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cooper of Wisconsin: Page 60, line 12, strike out "Federal officers and noncommissioned officers" and insert in lieu thereof "officers and noncommissioned officers of the Regular

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, is that an amendment to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. No. The other amendment is to strike out the section. In that sense it is a preferential amendment, The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Speaks].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does my amendment stand? The CHAIRMAN. Yes, It was agreed to. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses, sergeant instructors, $60,000.

Mr. SPEAKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out line 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SPEAKS. No; that is a mistake. It should be line 17. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Speaks: Page 60, line 17, strike out the line "For expenses, sergeant instructors, $60,000."

You can depend upon it that whenever there is any cr!ticism the officers of the Army take refuge in the statement, "Well, it millions of dollars' worth of Federal property in its custody. I is Congress that is doing it, and Congress evidently knows what suppose it would not be an exaggeration to say that there is it is undertaking to do."

There appears to be a thought in the minds of some Members that I am trying to discourage Federal supervision and Federal instruction of the National Guard. The thing that 1 am trying to do-and you will find later that it is important-is to prevent the placing of unjust overhead expenses connected with our Military Establishment on the guard. I do not know what I can say to impress you, but I am convinced as the result of my experience that the principle is right, and I know I am voicing the sentiment of National Guard officers generally. I agree with the statement of the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony], who states that sergeant instructors are desired. All I am asking you to do is to pay the expenses of these sergeant instructors who belong to the Regular Army from the Army appropriation, which should properly pay that expense, instead of having it charged to the National Guard.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPEAKS. I yield to the gentleman from California. Mr. LINEBERGER. Is it not a fact that these instructors are delegated to the National Guard for the particular interest of the National Guard, and is it not a fact that it is a mere matter of bookkeeping after all?

Mr. SPEAKS. Yes; but the gentleman does not grasp my

Mr. LINEBERGER. That is exactly what I am attempting to do, and it is for that reason that I rise to interrogate the gentleman.

I am trying to keep a line of demarcation be-Mr. SPEAKS. tween appropriations for the National Guard and appropriations for the regular service.

Mr. LINEBERGER. It is only a form of bookkeeping, and the money which is here appropriated, as I understand it, is essentially for the benefit of the National Guard. Why should it not be taken from the National Guard fund?

Mr. SPEAKS. I will tell the gentleman why. You will find that if you persist in that system you will have the National Guard saddled with an overhead charge that will not only make it a burden to the country but make the organization unpopular.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SPEAKS. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. ANTHONY. What we are trying to do is exactly what the gentleman says he wishes to do. We are trying to make a line of demarcation in these appropriations. Now, the salaries of these sergeant instructors, of whom there are 227, are paid out of the appropriations for the support of the Army, but this item of $60,000 will pay for their quarters and heat and light in the towns where they are detailed for duty with the National Guard.

Mr. SPEAKS. But the item is charged to the guard.

Mr. ANTHONY. So that is the reason for the separate appropriation.

Mr. SPEAKS. And the Army has abundant appropriations available to pay all these expenses.

Mr. ANTHONY. Oh, no; it has no appropriations whatever available to pay the expenses of a sergeant instructor in your

Mr. SPEAKS. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but although it may not be under this specific heading we all know that the amount of the Army appropriation is more than ample to pay all the sergeant instructors now detailed to the States or who may hereafter be so detailed.

The National Guard in the past has not been treated fairly by either Congress or the Army, and I propose to do everything within my power to prevent discrimination against it. Its record of accomplishment has never been properly appreciated by the Federal authorities, and only the inspiration of patriotism has encouraged officers and men to continue their sacrifices and efforts until the organization simply commands public confidence and respect. The experience in the World War which disclosed 11 National Guard divisions on the battle line in France, while the Regular Army numbered but 7 divisions, should certainly convince the most prejudiced and skeptical that the great organization of citizen soldiery is not only efficient but that the system is thoroughly practical for national defensive or offensive purposes

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 34—

Mr. ANTHONY. We should vote first on the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending to this paragraph.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. May we have it read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Speaks: Page 60, line 17, strike out "for expenses of sergeant instructors, $60,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment. The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 34 for the purpose of offering an amendment at the end of line 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to return to the page indicated for the purpose indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object to returning to the page. I understand the gentleman has an amendment. Can he not offer it here?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I think it should be offered at line 10, page 34.

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand the gentleman's amendment is out of order anyway, and he may offer it to any part of the bill to which he desires to offer it.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I do not think so. Does the gentleman object to returning to page 34?

Mr. ANTHONY. I dislike to return-

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I will ask the gentleman to withhold his objection and let me make a statement.

Mr. ANTHONY. I withhold the objection.
Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I have made some investigation of the truck situation since the matter was discussed yesterday. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman offer an amendment? Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I want to offer an amendment if it is in order

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not tell whether it is in order until it is offered.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I move to strike out the last two words. I want to offer an amendment at the end of line 10, page 34, where this proposition came up yesterday. The chairman of the committee says he will have to object to returning to it. I do not know if this amendment would fit in at the point in the bill where we are now. If so I propose to offer it.

I made an investigation yesterday and this morning with reference to the helplessness of some of the departments of the Government in trying to obtain any of the great number of trucks that are absolutely going to rack and ruin in the military depots under the charge and custody of the War Depart-I have a letter here from the Bureau of Mines that explains their difficulty in trying for four months to get six light trucks to be used at the different experimental and rescue stations of the country. I have also a letter here from Col. Hartshorn, who is the director of sales, and who is selling and disposing of the War Department material. In this letter he says:

I regret to inform you that I know of no means under existing law whereby vehicles may be transferred by the War Department to the Department of the Interior.

Leading Members of Congress this morning have expressed great surprise that this is a fact, and some of them think there is a law whereby these automobiles may be turned over to the Department of the Interior, but there is no law authorizing it, and unless the House takes the bit in its teeth there is not going to be any law. The other departments are entitled to these automobiles. Congress ought not to find itself helpless in this matter, but it should give directions that these motor vehicles be turned over, and the only way out that I know of is for Congress in this bill to say to the Secretary of War, "You are directed and authorized to turn over to the Department of Interior so many trucks in so many days." If you do not do so they will never get them. I want to propose that kind of an amendment. I think it would be proper to go back to page 34.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Has it not always been in order for Congress to pass a law authorizing the transfer of such trucks as the gentleman asked for, and is it not a matter that ought not to have escaped Congress so long?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I think the gentleman is right. Mr. BLANTON. The great trouble is that the War Department will not declare them surplus. If they would declare them surplus they could be turned over.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Oh, they have declared some of them surplus and they put them in the States, in the good roads department, where in many States they have more than they need and are deluged with them. Mr. BLANTON. I am with the gentleman in his proposition.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I think that Congress ought to give the authorty that the gentleman speaks of now.
Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I will yield to the gentleman from Alahama

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to state to the gentleman from Indiana that I offered an amendment yesterday to indicate to the gentleman on that side of the House that there would be no objection or any point of order raised on this side of the House to an amendment of that kind, and I trust that the gentleman can get his amendment adopted.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I can understand how the gentleman's amendment-and mine also-being directed to a specific community, failed. It was objectionable.

Mr. ANTHONY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it. Mr. ANTHONY. Can we go back to this item of the bill for a specific purpose only-that of the gentleman from Indiana offering his amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. If the committee so decides,

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 34 for the purpose of offering this

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to return to the item on page 34 for the purpose of offering a specific amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKENZIE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman, The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it. Mr. McKENZIE. If this amendment is now up for consideration, whether or not a similar amendment can be offered as an amendment to that amendment, and so on down the line.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has asked permission to return to page 34 for the purpose of offering a specific amendment to a particular paragraph, and permission was given by the committee. The gentleman has offered the amendment, which the Clerk will report,

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 34, line 10: The Secretary of War is hereby directed and authorized to transfer without charge, within 30 days after the approval of this act, to the Department of the Interior six serviceable, light, motor trucks.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I find in this Bureau of Mines letter to me a statement that they have traveled almost all over the Nation, following the War Department motor-car sales, in an effort to find cars suitable for their purpose and which they so much need. They went to New Albany, in my State, where there were hundreds of cars and trucks advertised for sale, but they found they were dilapidated old scrap iron, which they could not use. They traveled to New Jersey for the same purpose to an advertised sale and found they were nonserviceable and could not be used. A representative of the Bureau of Mines who has been there for many years came to my office this morning and told me they were absolutely helpless. I talked with the Assistant Secretary of War this morning in the absence of the Secretary of War, and he could suggest no remedy. There is no remedy unless Congress affords it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BLAND of Indians. Yes.
Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Would the gentleman have any objection in providing for the transfer of these automobiles from the War Department to the Department of the Interior, to accompanying it by a bookkeeping credit to the War Department for the value of the six automobiles?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. That would entail an appropriation to the bureau and a lot of misunderstanding about it. When the bureau comes to Congress for their appropriation they would be met by this item, and Congress has never been very lavish in its appropriations for the Bureau of Mines. The War Department has always had all that it wanted, or at least more than it needed.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. We have been wasting nearly a week trying to get a little money for them and have not got through with it yet. If you are going to howl about the cost of militarism, let us have some bookkeeping showing how much militarism has cost, and how much automobiles, and how much schools, and all that sort of thing have cost.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. How much bookkeeping did you have when the department turned them over to the Agricultural Department and they turned them over to the public roads? You have got nothing in the way of bookkeeping credit there;

why discriminate against the Interior Department?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am trying to do simple justice to one of them. These automobiles have been appropriated for and the appropriations charged to the War Department, and if they are required to turn them over to another department they ought to have credit for the same.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. They will have credit; it will be shown that they were turned over to the other department.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

For office rent, and so forth, inspector-instructors, $9,000.

Mr. SPEAKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 18 and 19, page 60.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SPEAKS: Page 60, strike out lines 18 and 19.

Mr. SPEAKS. Mr. Chairman, I do this merely for the purpose of again presenting to the Members of the House the desirability and necessity for making every item of this character a charge against the Regular Service instead of the National Guard. Also for the purpose of protecting the National Guard eventually against the charge of being an extravagant organi-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. SPEAKS. I ask permission that I may be permitted to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

The Chair hears none.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I regret to differ with the gen-tleman from Ohio [Mr. Speaks] on this important subject, but I feel that we can not do enough in the way of appropriating to provide Regular Army officers to help the guard in every conceivable way. In this bill we have before us we provide for two things—brains and materiel. We have provided for brains—that is, we have appropriated for a much larger number of Regular Army officers than is consistent with a force of 150,000 enlisted men. We already have the matériel left over from the war and have provided space and care for it. Now, what are you going to do with such a large number of Regular Army officers unless you lend them to the guard?

Mr. SPEAKS. Will the gentleman permit me to answer the question?

Mr. FISH. After I get through; I will be very brief. This is money that is coming out of the National Guard appropriation; the gentleman is quite right, but the work and time of the Regular Army officers are given to the guard for the benefit of the guard and should not be credited to the Regular Army. It is done to help develop the National Guard, and I think the gentleman and myself are agreed that the Federalized National Guard is going to be the hig defensive weapon of this country. In the last few months the Federalized National Guard has increased from 85,000 to 95,000. Some of us believe that by the end of the next fiscal year—June 30, 1922—we will have 150,000 in the Federalized National Guard, and we want that National Guard to be the most efficient force that Congress can make it, and if that means appropriating money in this bill to get Regular Army officers, who spend their whole time in military matters, to lend their help and their advice to the National Guard, we want to do it. It is not right to go to the Regular Army and say "loan us these men" and then ask them to pay their traveling expenses and subsistence. What the Members of this House want to know is who is getting the benefit, as it is obvious that the people who receive the benefit should pay for it. I submit that it is solely the National Guard that receives the benefit. Does not the gentleman agree to that?

Mr. SPEAKS. I agree with the gentleman that the National Guard eventually will be the great defensive reliance of the Nation. I agree with the gentleman that to a considerable degree we must depend upon the Army for the system and actual instruction. I do not agree with the gentleman, however, the pay for that service rendered by the officer and enlisted man of the Army while carrying the instructions, as the gentleman expresses it, to the National Guard should be taken from the National Guard appropriation.

Mr. FISH. I will yield no further. I think the committee understands the proposition, as they have already voted almost unanimously on it. How much time have I remaining, Mr.

Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes.

Mr. FISH. Following up the statement the gentleman advanced with reference to the record of the guard and what they did in the war, it is a matter of interest to everybody in the House, because the guard is going to be the great defensive weapon in this country. Out of 11 National Guard divisions which went to the other side, the National Guard units had bigger casualties in killed and wounded than the National Army or the Regular Army, and that shows that the National Guard when Federalized can be depended upon to do their part effectively. We can depend upon the National Guard, and therefore if we appropriate money to Federalize them the guard will be our first line of defense. You can not depend upon the Regular Army of 150,000 in war, because the 150,000 are not sufficient hardly for one day's battle. We have got to build up the guard, and within a few years' time it may be that the guard will amount to 400,000. Does not the gentleman agree with me as to that? There is no reason why the National Guard of this country in a few years from now, if Federalized and proper appropriations are made, should not amount to 400,000 trained men.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SPEAKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended five minutes.

Mr. FISH. I object.

Mr. SPEAKS. I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended one minute; I wish to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SPEAKS. Did not the National Guard, which the gentleman described so eloquently, go to France 90 per cent, at least, under instruction of their own officers?

Mr. FISH. Quite right.

Mr. SPEAKS. The point I am making is, was it the result of the instruction brought from the Army to the National Guard? The gentleman is putting too much stress and value upon the nature and extent of the instruction which the gentleman thinks the Army is carrying to the National Guard.

Mr. FISH. May I answer that question? Mr. SPEAKS. Yes.

Mr. FISH. This is my idea of what should be done by the Regular Army in order to bring about efficiency in the guard. You must admit that the guard officers are volunteers, they are only paid for their drills and a part of their time, while the Regular Army is paid for the whole of the day's work. I believe we should send to each guard regiment two or three officers, not one and two or three non coms. The non coms should check up all supplies and go to the captain of each company and say, "Captain, you have got enough of this or enough of that." The captain of a guard company can not do all of this work without giving up his business. I do not believe in sending one officer to a National Guard regiment, but sending three officers, one as assistant to the colonel, one as assistant to the adjutant, and one as an inspector.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I agree with the gentleman from New York, but following in line with what he has just concluded in reference to sending officers to a National Guard regiment, I am quite in sympathy with the gentleman's idea, but I invite his attention to this: If we provide in a bill for a reorganization of the Army, an unusual number of commissioned officers, more than it would seem should be supplied to an ordinary tactical organization, we are told that we have got a top-heavy Army, that we have more officers than we need, and Members will vote against it.

Mr. FISH. No; we have not voted against it. Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I understand.

Mr. FISH. We must have something to do with those officers if we have not got men. Why not send them to the guard?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am simply taking your thought for the text, which some of our brethren never seem to understand here. Some of our brethren never seem to understand why we want more officers than will supply the actual tactical And one of the reasons is given by the gentleman. necessities.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, in reply to the distinguished gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Greene], who seems to have not a personal grudge, but some other kind, against all colleagues who want a medium-sized Army, I want to say the 14,000 officers which he has insisted on providing for the Army are enough to care for the 400,000 National Guard, which number our friend from New York [Mr. Fish] says he hopes may be reached. But I want to say to the gentleman from New York and to the gentleman from Ohio that you never will increase the strength of the National Guard up to 400,000 or up to any number sufficient to provide the proper first-line protection to the country until you get out of their breast the present feeling in the heart of every single National Guard officer in the land to-day that he has not had a square deal from the Regular Army. You can not show me an officer in the National Guard anywhere in the United States to-day but who feels that he was discriminated against by the Regular Army.
Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Look at me. I am one of them. I do not feel that we were discriminated against by the Regular Army. There were officers we did not like. And I want to say to you that the Twenty-ninth Division was a National Guard division. Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is hardly a fair specimen. I do not want the gentleman to take all my time.

Mr. HILL. And I am going to stand by this bill. Mr. BLANTON. Whenever you send a man to the Congress of the United States he forgets a lot of things. Possibly if the balance of the National Guard officers were occupying the seat of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL], they, too, would forget the discrimination. But the feeling of discrimination is there, and you can not get rid of it. Write them and ask them

The feeling is in the heart of practically every single National Guard organization of this land that they did not get a square deal from the Regular Army during the war. If you want the National Guard to have the right sort of feeling, such as would make them readily respond for good service, give them to understand that in the future, at least, they are going to get a square deal from the Regular Army and also from the Congress of the United States.

The question is on the amendment of the The CHAIRMAN.

gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPEAKS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. The Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE EQUIPMENT FOR RIFLE RANGES FOR CIVILIAN INSTRUCTION.

For arms, ammunition, targets, and other accessories for target practice for issue and sale in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice and approved by the Secretary of War, in connection with the encouragement of rifle practice, in pursuance of the provisions of law,

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. O'CONNOR offers the following amendment: At the end of line 18, page 6, add: The Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to investigate the feasibility of establishing a national military park on the plains of Chalmette, below the city of New Orleans, where was fought on January 8, 1815, the Battle of New Orleans, and to prepare plans of such park and estimate of the cost therefor, and obtain such further information as may enable Congress to act upon the matter after being fully advised.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that on the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I will.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in all probability the amendment is subject to the point of order, but I believe that it is justifiable legislation on an appropriation bill. There are times and occasions when the point should not be pressed. I do not desire to criticize the rules or the precedents of the House. I know that both are the result of a growth and express the experience and wisdom of legislators since the very first page in our parliamentary history was written. But as valuable as rules and precedents are in maintaining this as a Government of law and not of men, I believe they should not be as inflexible as the laws of the Medes and Persians, but should possess a certain elasticity which would permit meritorious legislation to be passed expeditiously when unusual circumstances warrant it. The attenuated refinements of strict parliamentary procedure, the rigid application of rule and reverential invocation to precedents may defeat a most laudable legislative and national purpose. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] a few days ago in a remarkably felicitous and clear-cut manner showed the desirability of generously and liberally considering amendments that are meritorious, even when they are undeniably subject to the point of order. But back to my subject or amendment. If the point of order is not withdrawn, if I do not succeed in having the amendment adopted, I will have to press as well as I can a bill which I have introduced to effectuate my purpose of ultimately creating a national park on the plains of Chalmette. I am not optimistic about getting such a bill through. Bitter experience has taught me that a man may come here young and remain until his hair has whitened with the years and yet never accomplish his legislative purposes or hopes, however diligently he work, however tirelessly and assiduously he devote himself to the pursuit of his heart's desire.

Two years ago I came here filled with joy at the thought that would have the battle field of New Orleans surveyed as a preliminary step looking to the creation of a great military park on the Plains of Chalmette. The bill was favorably reported, but never was reached by the committee on any Calendar Wednesday when Military Affairs had the call. I had it placed on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, but the time was unpropitious, and though I tried on two occasions I could not secure the unanimous consent necessary for its consideration.

I feel that I am now confronted by the dangers of Charybdis and Scylla; though if I pass this point of order and the committee adopt my amendment, the legislative rocks and whirlpool will be left behind. May I succeed, for it is for a noble thing I would do. I would have you consecrate one of the great battle fields of our country. I have hoped and our people have dreamed of the day when the Nation would take the first step in the direction of not only creating a great national military park, commemorative of a glorious martial event in our history, by having a survey made of the field, but also in giving to the people of the United States a perpetual memorial and a shrine to which lovers of American valor, liberty, and freedom might point as one of the hallowed spots on the continent.

There are some events in the history that need no comment; some chapters that require no elaboration. There are some pictures that are unforgettable and teach a lesson more lasting than all the pages on the subject. Washington crossing the Delaware is impressed upon the memory of every American man and woman, because it is the picture that appealed powerfully to the childish imagination of school days.

The Battle of New Orleans needs no poet, no painter, no historian. God said, "Let there be light, and there was light," needs no elaboration. It would be a work of supererogation and destroy the wondrous picture the few words call up instantaneously to the soul of man. More than 106 years have passed away, fled into eternity, since that memorable day, January 8, 1815, when men, guided by the sense of direction, marched from Kentucky, Tennessee, and Mississippi to New They came over a wilderness without compass or guide; they came in rags, the clothes being almost torn from their backs as a result of marching through the wilderness; they came, they saw, they conquered. Those were the days when the Republic was young. There were no roads, no steam-boats, no locomotives, no electric lights to light them on their way at night, only the stars and moon. They came to preserve the mouth of the Mississippi River to the American people.

Whom did these backwoodsmen conquer? Troops that were the pride and glory of the Peninsular Wars, and who after-wards won distinction as the "Invincibles" under Wellington at Waterloo. Whom did they next drive to a disastrous defeat? Those that conquered Napoleon, and generously we say it, the bravest of the brave, gallant Packenham, and the followers who died with him on the day that should be a red-letter day in American history.

Mr. KNUTSON. What is the purpose of your amendment? Mr. O'CONNOR. To have a survey made of the battle field of New Orleans, on the Plains of Chalmette.

I think, gentlemen, we ought to order this survey. I believe the American people want to keep this event and spot green in the memory of every generation. They do not wish to forget Andrew Jackson's great victory. That was the only land battle of the War of 1812, that redeemed it from an almost unbroken series of calamities, catastrophes, and disasters,
Mr. GREENE of Vermont, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Certainly. Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Sharing with my good friend in his appreciation of all that is worthy of admiration and all that was gallant in the Battle of New Orleans, I do not want him to forget the Battle of Plattsburg, which was a decisive battle and broke up the British military organization in New England. It was both a land and a naval battle.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am glad to hear at all times of the victories of my countrymen and rejoice with him on our success at Plattsburg, though I am also glad to know they can look trial, defeat, and vicissitudes in the face dauntlessly and fearlessly. I am glad to say that I rejoice in the glories of Lake Eric, and I was and am glad that the Appropriation Committee inserted in the naval bill an appropriation of $10,000 to take care of, maintain, and use for educational purposes the Niagara, Perry's flagship, which was raised from the bottom of Lake Erie, where it had lain for many years.

The American people should ever keep before them their victorious fields; they should never lose sight of our defeats, with their heartaches. The tender chords of memory stretch out from every battle field inspiring respect, admiration, reverence, and a thrilling pride in the glory of those that are no more; the mystic influence of a noble past stretches out north, south, east, and west to every home and fireside where patriotism is enthroned and boys and girls exultingly read the chapters written in fadeless glory by those who are on fame's eternal camping ground and in the bivouac of the dead.

Gentlemen, I dislike to mention the cost when a great sentimentality is under discussion; it sounds sordid and almost unpatriotic. But, as a matter of fact, there will be no cost. To make a survey of the battle field of New Orleans would require only a negligible sum. The engineers are down at New Orleans. and they could make that survey at a cost, in all probability, not exceeding $500. Let us make the start. I believe that a provision of this kind eventually is inevitable. Why not start now? The Colonial Dames of America would be gladdened if we were to make a survey, and either the Colonial Dames or the Daughters of the American Revolution or the Daughters of 1812 or some other patriotic society, if not the Government, will take up the matter, and in the years to come we shall have at least a foundation upon which to build the superstructure, if I may use that phraseology in connection with the creation of a national park. I believe that battle field away down there on the banks of the Mississippi near the Gulf of Mexico would be sacred, holy ground to the Nation. I hope to see all the battle fields of the land memorials which will serve a splendid purpose, and that is to keep in the minds of the youth of this country the greatness of the past, the glory of our achievements, and the wonders that may still lie in the future to be wrought by heroic hearts of other generations. I would want, gentlemen, these memorials of battle fields and wonderful institutions and splendid pictures of our country to convey to the minds of our boys and girls the lessons of the past, "Lest we forget; lest we forget." For the past is the lamp of experience, and it is by its rays that we should guide our steps on the road we are traveling to-day.

Mr. Chairman, I have not discussed the Army bill or the Navy bill up to the present time. I know there is an overwhelming demand for economy, and particularly for a reduction of the Army. I wanted to hear from the Members of this House as to Army. I wanted to hear from the Members of this House as to what they thought on this all-important matter and ascertain whether our lay knowledge is equal to the information that was tendered to the committee. I have listened, but at no time have I heard a convincing voice raised in defense of a small Army. The constituency I represent stands with the rest of the country for a relief from burdensome taxation, and I am obligated to hear that cry for relief. But, personally, and not as a Representative, if I may express my attitude in those terms, I say, Keep the country in a state of preparedness.

[Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has again expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, may I have three minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Do not go too far in the reduction of the Army; but build ye a Navy! A nation that flatters itself that it can ignore preparedness is tottering to its destruction and fall. Strip the Army and Navy of the mollycoddle elements and secure the red-haired, deep-chested, red-blooded men that one gentleman yesterday said he would like to see our Army and Navy made of. It may sound like a brutal doctrine, but "Kingdoms by blood gained must be by blood maintained." To hold that you can secure greatness by force, through power, and then maintain it by diplomacy is illogical and not in conformity or in line with what history teaches. It is the folly of such an attitude that has brought every fallen nation finally to its knees and sunk it into its grave.

You can not acquire an empire of territory and create wealth vast as to defy comprehension by the iron hand and then when you have attained the heights of greatness and glory scorn the base degrees by which you did ascend. It is such complacency that invites the attack of the lesser breed without the law and brings ruin and oblivion to the Nation that in its own blind conceit believes it is invulnerable. [Applause.]

Thus runs the seroll of human destiny
Written in fire and blood and scalding tears,
Scrawled with wrecked hopes and blasted visions
The weary record of ten thousand years;
The weary tale of peoples and kings,
The glowing dreams of empire and race
That to the law that ruleth earthly things
In ruin yielded place.

Let us answer the cry of the country for economy, but let us warn our countrymen of the terrible dangers that lie in attempting to reduce the Army below the rock bottom of the Byrnes amendment. Let those who do not desire to remain with the service get out, for the soldier who does not feel the thrill and the joy of martial service is not a valuable unit of the Army. Let him depart.

On some other day I hope to devote myself to some length on this subject. I regret that the inexorable demand of the hour for strict, rigid economy and a reduction of the Army has been accentuated by the lack of judgment on the part of the solicitors for recruits, who have convinced the American people through posters and otherwise that instead of the Army being a fighting machine it is presently striving to justify its existence as a training school for trades, vocations, avocations, and professions.

But, Mr. Chairman, let us return—or, rather, let me return—to my mutton, to my amendment. I hope the point of order will not be pressed, will be withdrawn, and the amendment adopted by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana

has again expired.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, most regretfully I am obliged again to consult the rules of the House and make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Most regretfully the Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

PURCHASE OF ARTICLES MANUFACTURED AT GOVERNMENT ARSENALS.

No part of the moneys appropriated in this act shall be used or expended for the purchase or acquirement of any article or articles that at the time of the proposed acquirement can be manufactured or produced in each or any of the Government arsenals of the United States for a sum less than it can be purchased or procured otherwise.

Mr. KNIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out all of line 10 after the words "United States" and all of line 11.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KNIGHT: Page 64, line 10, after the words "United States," strike out "for a sum less than it can be purchased or procured otherwise."

Mr. KNIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the gentlemen of the committee and the press may not get their wires crossed on the position that I am assuming in this matter. I am not making war either upon preparedness or upon an adequate Army, but I am making war upon that profit which there is in war. If this amendment should be adopted, it would compel the Government, wherever possible, to expend the money appropriated in this act at Government factories. I offer this amendment in view of two pronouncements that have impressed me more than any others that I have read in a long time. One of them was a speech delivered by Col. Buckner of a great munition plant during the year 1918. In discussing with his salesmen the amount of money made by this gigantic corporation he said that after paying $2.000,000 to the Red Cross and $4,000,000 in war stamps and all of the taxes that were then incident to the doing of business the company made the sum of $129,000.000 that year. I submit, gentlemen, that so long as profit like that is inherent in any business it is not a safe business for any individual to engage in.
Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. KNIGHT. I do.

Mr. HULL. Does not the gentleman understand that the very purpose of this entire paragraph is to cut out the profit?

Mr. KNIGHT. It says that you shall not do it unless you can buy it for less; in other words, unless the Government can make it for less, you give it to the private contractor. Read your bill again.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman's idea is to give it to the arsenals in any case?

Mr. KNIGHT. My idea is to give it to the arsenals in any case if they can take care of the business; yes.

Mr. HULL. I would be very much in favor of the gentle-man's proposition; but if you can stop the profiteering and force into the arsenals the work that can be done there cheaper you are accomplishing a great deal right now.

Mr. KNIGHT. My amendment would give the work to the Government arsenals provided they could do it at the same figure that the other fellow would do it, but under your bill it specifically says not unless it can be procured for a less sum.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman that I secured the passage of this amendment several years ago, and that we placed it on the naval bill, but they are not paying very much attention to it at the present time, either in the Navy Department or in the War Department.

Mr. KNIGHT. They are not paying any attention to anything we do. Congress does not cut any figure whatever.

Mr. HULL. The reason the words the gentleman objects to were put in the bill was to make the provision in order. I the heart also.

favor the gentleman's idea, but without those words this provision would not be in order.

Mr. KNIGHT. I thank the gentleman. I say that the Army and Navy pay no attention to this House. We legislate here and they proceed to do as they please. I than't he gentleman for that idea, and at some future time I am going to pay my respects to them in no uncertain terms.

The other sentiment that I wish to express is this: The best thing the President of the United States ever said was in his inaugural address, and if you will indulge me briefly, I want to read one paragraph. He said:

I can vision the ideal republic, where every man and woman is called under the flag for assignment to duty for whatever service, military or civic, the individual is better fitted; where we may call to universal service every plant, agency, or facility, all in the sublime sacrifice for country, and not one penny of war profit shall have to the benefit of private individual, corporation, or combination, but all above the normal shall flow into the defense chest of the Nation.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield there?
Mr. KNIGHT. 1 will.
Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman's dream could come true, we should have an Army of 50,000 men, and instead of spending $330,000,000 in this bill we would probably get by with less than $30,000,000.

Mr. KNIGHT. I agree with the gentleman, and if I have the time I am going to tell him how it can be brought about.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KNIGHT. Mr. Chairman, may I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes additional. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. KNIGHT. Resuming the reading from the President's inaugural-There is something inherently wrong, something out of accord with the ideals of representative democracy, when one portion of our citizenship turns its activities to private gain amid defensive war, while another is fighting, sacrificing, or dying for national preservation.

I agree with that, and I say to the gentleman that when this country goes to real universal conscription and conscripts labor along with the youth of this country, and conscripts wealth along with the fighting forces of this country, and when you shall call to the colors first those between 30 and 50, and when you shall make it impossible that 18,000 new millionaires shall arise out of the hell of war, as have arisen out of this conflict, then I say to you, sir, that the day you mention will have arrived. It is to strike at the profit of war, not at the means of defense, that I offer this amendment; and I say to you, gentlemen, that until this country begins its fight against war all along the line, all the dreams of Hague conventions and international assemblies will be but the vain whisperings of the air. and we will continue to hear voices and to speak language which munition makers can understand. But the day you show to men that they can not profiteer and coin money out of the blood of this country and grow rich and fat and prosperous in the hours of its adversity, I say until that day arrives you will have the conditions that you have to-day, and it is to strike at those conditions rather than in any hope that this amendment will be adopted that I offer it.

Mr. McKENZIE. Was the gentleman in the House when we had the naval bill under consideration?

Mr. KNIGHT. Yes.
Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman heard it stated at that time that they had 75,000 civilians working in the navy yards of the Now, would not the effect of the gentleman's amendment be to compel the Government to keep in the arsenals of our country a very large and perhaps most of the time an unnecessary force of men on the pay rolls? Would not that be the effect of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. KNIGHT. No force of men is unnecessary which tends to prevent the hell of war. No expense is unnecessary which would prevent these reapers of tremendous profits going out and lobbying for war. Turn your eyes to the shops and to the great war-munition manufacturers of every country and you will see that 100 per cent of them are shouting for war, while some one else is going to do the fighting, and out of which they are going to reap hundreds of millions of the people's money.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNIGHT. I will. Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will not leave his statement in the RECORD uncorrected. Is it not the gentleman's suggestion that the people who manufacture munitions cause Members of this House and of the Upper House to

Mr. KNIGHT. I made no such statement; but I say it is inherent in human nature that where one's treasure is there is

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman state one single declaration of war in this country by Members of Congress that has been brought about because of the action of munition manufacturers?

Mr. KNIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I think that question is absurd on the face of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has

Mr. KNIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and also the remarks that I made on the naval appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNIGHT. It means this: The forces that make for war never operate in candor. They wrap the flag around their sacred professions of patriotism and thus clothed in the habilaments of 100 per cent Americanism, Germanism, or Englishism, feed the people propaganda to prepare them for the glorious conflict that is going to pile up millions for themselves. The process is an insidious one, and it would be as well to ask one to segregate the ray of sunshine that helps to make the plains grow as to point to the specific profiteers that cause war or any specific acts that may lead a nation into it. But if anyone doubts that those who reap big profits from war ever fail to work in the interests of their pocketbooks evidence is not lacking that will convince him to the contrary. We need go no further for such proof than an investigation of the Sixty-fifth Congress. The subject was the notorious National Security League. This malodorous organization fairly reeked with perspiring patriotism. It was ready to damn any man to oblivion who dared question its clamor that the Nation should arm and keep armed to the teeth.

It invaded every congressional district in the country, and where the candidate was not ready to follow its slavish behests it put the Indian sign on his door and placarded him as unpatriotic and a danger to his country. Thank God the Congress had the courage to call the turn on these "patriots" and make them understand that this is yet a Government under which no Member of Congress is responsible to anybody except his own constituents. The congressional investigation in its findhis own constituents. The congressional investigation in its findings utterly damned this organization. I can not refrain from quoting this paragraph from the findings of the committee:

quoting this paragraph from the findings of the committee:

The National Security League and like organizations in their political activities constitute a serious menace to representative government. Ordinarily their real purpose is concealed and their appeal is made to the public on some principle in harmony with dominant sentiment. Usually, as in this instance, they have access to almost unlimited wealth, and borrow respectability, by the use, in honorary positions, of the names of men of national prominence. If their real purpose were apparent, the danger would be relieved.

Men in public life are given by them to understand that they must be subservient to the demands of such institutions; and, upon their failure to do so, they will be held up to public scorn and humiliation by false accusations. Under such circumstances the best-intentioned candidate for office realizes that he has one of two alternatives; He must be either subservient to the demands of these camonflaged organizations or be put on the defensive by false charges. Such activities on the part of organizations similar to the National Security League have a tendency to compel obedience to the wishes of special interests, rather than obedience to a real concern for the welfare of the people. This condition is not at all fanciful, since its baneful effects have been fully demonstrated by the activities of the National Security League.

Now, let us see how this great and superpatriotic organiza-

Now, let us see how this great and superpatriotic organization obtained its funds with which it sought to intimidate and browbeat the people's elected servants. Again I quote another paragraph from the report of the congressional investigation committee:

Among the large subscriptions made to the National Security League is one of $150,000 made by the Carnegie Corporation, to be paid in three equal installments of $50,000 each. At the time testimony concerning it was taken, two of the subscriptions, amounting to $100,000, had been paid; another is that of Mr. John D. Rockefeller, having large interests both here and abroad; another is Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, whose large interests are not confined to this side of the Atlantic.

Among the large contributors to the league are:

William P. Clyde, 61 Broadway, New York, director in many railroads and other large corporations.

Arthur Curtis James, director in 42 corporations, many of them manufacturing war munitions; vice president and director of Phelps, Dodge Co.—excessive profits over prewar profits. $14.531.864

Joseph H. Choate, deceased, 52 Wall Street, formerly ambassador to England; trustee New York Life Insurance Co.

Emerson McQuillan, 40 Wall Street, director in 14 large corporations—Observe, if you please, that every one of these contributors was a person or a corporation which immediately would profit by war. In fact, that was exactly why they were willing to give up good money to this glorious patriotic league. They cast their bread upon the waters knowing full well it would return in a few days, or months, in business contracts that would yield anywhere from 200 to 2,000 per cent. Let us look for a moment in another direction.

Of all the most obstreperous advocates of war in Germany, the great industrial works of the Krupps led the procession. So powerful had this great organization become that not only the people but the Government itself was greatly influenced by the opinions emanating from its directors. In France the munition and gun makers had attained an eminence of like nature and to almost a like extent. But why enumerate examples? Since men whetted and sold arms for slaughter they never have proved recreant to the interests of their trade. And it is for this reason that I would take these apostles of war out of a field where they are now a national danger and put them at some useful work. It is bad enough, God knows, for anybody to be compelled to forge the implements of slaughter, but if it must be done let it fall to those who can not be swayed by hopes of inordinate gain into creating conflicts to supply a market. I care not what it costs, it would be infinitely cheaper in the end for the people of this country. Were there no profits in the war games does any one believe that we would now be called upon to vote this enormous sum of almost four hundred millions carried in this bill?

Scan its contents and see how in almost every item lurks great 3, 250 profits for the men who make the material. Scan the naval appropriation bill with its demands of almost four hundred millions more and ask yourself the question, Would we have appropriated these sums if there had been no profit in armor plate, or ships, or the things that ships use in war? So long as these enormous profits may be made by private persons so long will there continue to grow up a class whose very existence will be, if not a menace to peace, at least a stumbling block in the way of those who would minimize war. Put the profit beyond their reach and their zeal for arming the Nation to the teeth will abate, and I submit this step should be taken by this Government just as soon as it can be done, for such a policy will promote both peace and economy.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio would leave the situation so that the Government would be compelled to manufacture its supplies on a very unsound business basis. All competition from the outside would be removed, and no matter what the cost was we would have to manufacture them in the arsenals. It would lead to gross extravagance.

Mr. LINEBERGER. If the amendment was adopted, would not the Government have to invest millions in building new arsenals?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I regret very much that we can not have a full and free discussion on this momentous question. There is not a problem that will come before this House so important as the question of munitions making. Article 8 of the League of Nations-and, as far as I am concerned, that was the only good part in the League of Nations—stated very plainly that big armaments, in the first place, were a cause of war and, in the second place, that the way to lessen the probability of war was to turn all munition making over to the Government and then to prescribe rules so that no Government could produce more than a limited amount or sell munitions to any other nation. I regret very much that we can not have in this House a full and free discussion of this question, because I think the House could well afford some of its time to be informed on the subject.

When the Muscle Shoals proposition came before the House voted with my party, but reluctantly, because even in that case I believed that we should make a beginning by having all plants producing munitions owned by the Government, and there is only one way to start, and that is to make a beginning. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope the gentleman's suggestion will lead to a grand apostasy on that question. [Laughter.]

The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio simply says that all munitions shall be made by the Government. I know and you know that the amendment is not going to prevail without any debate; but it is something for you to think about—it is something for you to prepare for—and, remembering the old adage that fools rush in where angels fear to tread. I am willing to make this little prophecy to the Members of the House, and that is that inside of three years Congress will pass an amendment exactly like that presented by the gentle-man from Ohio. [Applause,] I thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KNIGHT) there were 41 ayes and 56 noes.

Mr. KNIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers; I want a record on this.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio demands tellers. Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. KNIGHT and Mr. ANTHONY

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 57 ayes and 72 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foremen, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch, or other time-measuring device, a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph beginning on line 12 and ending on line 24, inclusive. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment, The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. UNDERHILL: Page 64, beginning on line 12, strike out the whole paragraph.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I asked to have the paragraph stricken out in order that I might ask the gentleman in charge of the bill why such a provision should have place in legislation of this character.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman in charge of the bill can give no valid reason why it should be in here. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERHILL. I listened to the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio who offered an amendment a moment ago, and was in hearty sympathy with all he had to say, but upon reading further in the bill I was constrained to vote against it, The gentleman's remarks were idealistic in urging that all munitions be manufactured in Government plants and all profiteering eliminated in time of war. This is to be desired. But it seems to me that with the experience we have had during the war the provision in the bill which I move to strike out is one of the most iniquitous which could possibly be devised by the mind of man. I can not imagine who in the first place ever thought of such a proposition. I have been a manufacturer; I have been a laboring man, doing hard, manual labor. I never found where business was helped by a proposition of this sort or where labor was harmed because methods of efficiency were introduced in employment.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman says he is a manufacturer?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Not now.

Mr. HULL. Did the gentleman ever use the Taylor system in his manufacture?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Not the Taylor system.

Mr. HULL. I thought so.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I suppose that I ought to be more familiar with the Taylor system; but even if you oppose the Taylor system, whatever that may be, this goes a good deal further. This eliminates any restraint upon loafing, upon slacking, upon inefficiency, and it seems to me it is time now, if it never occurred before, that the Members of Congress ought to take a stand and ought to have the courage of their convictions.

I do not believe that there is a man in this House who at heart is not opposed to this proposition, and I believe that it was placed in the bill because of the so-called labor vote, which does not exist, and which the last election proved does not exist. I do not believe that labor itself wants any such handicap as The man who is ambitious, the man who is patriotic, the man who desires to advance in his chosen field of employment. would be glad to see a feature eliminated which places him on the level of the slacker or the man who holds his job by political pull; and I voice my protest against the great Government of the United States yielding to labor organizations, controlled by men who have exploited labor for the last 10 or 15 years and used such efforts as this to retain their power, and I hope that the Members of the House will back up my protest and strike from the bill carrying millions of the people's money something that undoubtedly will cost the people 10, 20, 30, or 40 per cent more than it would if this paragraph were not in the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas. The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute effered by Mr. Blanton: Page 64, line 16, after the word "watch." strike out the following Janguage: "or other time-measuring device."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman that that is a perfecting amendment rather than a substitute,

Mr. BLANTON. Any way the Chair wants to put it, so that I get the floor. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished veteran in the House on this subject, Mr. HULL, of Iowa, whether he intended or not, caused some embarrassment to our new colleague, Mr. UNDERHILL, by asking him something about the Taylor system. If my colleague, Mr. Undershill, had been here for the last few years, he would have fully understood one system if not the Taylor system. He would have known all about the Hull system, by which the navy yards and the arsenals of the United States have been deprived of every means known to the ingenuity of man to require efficiency of our employees. I knew just as well what the answer of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] was going to be before he answered as I did after he answered when the gentleman asked him if he knew any good reason why this provision should be in this bill, and that honest statesman from Kansas, with his usual good judgment, had to reply that there was not any reason, and there is not any reason. It is in this bill, I will state to my friend, Mr. Underhill, because these men say the Government shall not have surveillance over them and shall not hold stop watches over them, at the same time they put stop watches over every man in the seats on this floor and have had surveillance over them through their agents here in the galleries to such an extent that these things are voted in bills every time Army and Navy legislation comes up. There has not been a single instance when we have not had a chance to vote yea or nay on it; but the vote is always nay when we propose to strike it out. My colleague, Mr. Black, has offered this same amendment on the floor that I have offered, and I have offered it before. imagine why a man would not want a stop watch held over him, and I am not going to ask to strike the stop-watch provision out of this bill. A man might not want a stop watch held on him. Any laborer in this country, and we are all laborers if we do our duty—the Members of this House are laborers if we do our duty-any man who does efficient service should not object to his employer using some kind of means to see that he gives good, honest, efficient service. Our constituents at home have a way of measuring our efficiency, and if we do not measure up to their standard of efficiency they take us out and put somebody else in our places. Our union friends who insist on this paragraph being placed in each Army and Navy bill, through the ingenuity and persistence and perseverance of our friend, Mr. Hull, have a way of measuring our efficiency in their behalf. They give cards giving us 100 per cent efficiency in their behalf or 90 per cent or 80 per cent and so on down the list. I did not get any per cent at all, I believe, on that subject.

They have a way of measuring us as to the service we render them, and I want to say there is not any excuse why the Congress of the United States should not require the naval employees and the Army employees, civilian employees of this Government, to render efficiency in their work. I called attention here during the consideration of the naval bill, and my colleague from Texas [Mr. Black] also called attention some months ago, to what your Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Franklin D. Roosevelt, testified before one of your committees, as shown on page 2672 of the RECORD for February 5, 1921, from Mr. Black's speech, to wit:

When hearings were being held by the Committee on Naval Affairs some members of the committee said to Assistant Secretary Roosevelt and Admiral Parks: "You are not getting the efficiency out of your employees you ought to; why do you not get more efficiency?" Here is what Mr. Roosevelt said in reply to that:

"Last summer my own personal guess—and that is what you might call it—was that we were somewhere between 65 and 70 per cent efficient—that is, we were turning out per day per man 65 or 70 per cent of what we turned out in 1914."

Some member of the committee asked him this question:

"Why do not the officials of the Government make a study of the efficiency of these employees?"

And Mr. Roosevelt's answer is as follows:

"We do not keep time cards, as we are not allowed to do so by

And yet you vote for this provision every time it comes up in the Army or Navy bill. You have got to answer to your constituents, my friends. They are going to ask you why you did it when you get back home. The people of the United States Government are sitting up now and taking notice more than they have been through the past years, and they are going to hold us responsible for keeping these matters in these bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee,
